Public purpose may be achieved through public agency or through private enterprise. If the acquisition benefits a private person alone or only individuals then it is not public purpose. If the acquisition furthers the general interests of the community though incidentally it benefits individuals also then it does not cease to be a public purpose. Under the Land Acquisition Act the State Government must initially determine whether a particular purpose is or is not a public purpose and if acquisition of a particular piece of land would serve that public purpose. When the question is raised before Courts of law then it is their duty to determine the nature of the purpose for which the particular piece of land has been acquired. There is, however, a presumption that the decision of the State Government on this question is correct though this presumption is rebuttable. It is not absolutely necessary to the validity of the land acquisition proceedings that the statement that the land sought to be acquired was needed for a public purpose should find a place in the notification actually issued. The requirements of the law will be satisfied if, in substance, it is found on investigation, and the appropriate Government is satisfied as a result of the investigation that the land was needed for the purposes of a Company, which would amount to a public purpose under Part 7 of the Land Acquisition Act. If to an Act providing for the acquisition of private property an amending Act adds certain provisions, providing for the acquisition of properties of certain further classes and giving such provisions effect from the commencement of the former Act, the public purposes declared by the original Act, will attach themselves automatically to the amending Act as also the amendments made thereby and there will be no absence of any declaration of a public purpose or purposes in regard to the latter. ● ——Arts. 31(2), 39 (b), 39(c)—Public purpose—Test—M B. Act, 28 of 1951 is for public purpose – (M. B. Act 28 of 1951, S. 1).

It is not necessary to specify public purpose in the Act itself; it can be ascertained from the tenor and intendment of the Act. When the object of the Act is to benefit the community at large, it can be said to be for public purpose.

Public purpose is essentially a product of time and circumstances. Time moves on and circumstances change rapidly, and so does the concept of a public purpose. It has to be construed according to the spirit of the times in which the particular legistation is enacted. The concept is not a rigid concept and it has no settled meaning. AIR 1952 S C 252, Rel. on.

Although the purpose of the M. B. Act 28 of 1951 is not specified, there is no doubt, that it is inspired and dominated by a public purpose. It is obvious that the object of the Act is to extinguish the interests of the intermediary and bring the actual cultivators into direct relations with the State Government and thereby to avoid concentration of wealth and means of production to the common detriment as laid down in Art. 39 (b) and (c) of the Constitution. It cannot be denied, therefore, that there is a public purpose for the acquisition of Jagir lands.

From the whole tenor and intendment of the Act, it can fairly be inferred that the amelioration of the peasantry living in Jagir areas and the emancipation of this class of sub-human serfs from the medieval and archaic bondage which is non-conducive to the general interests of the community is the main purpose behind the impugned Act. ——Art. 31 (2) –Public purpose—East Punjab Utilization of Land Act (38 of 1949)—Validity.

If a reading of the Act makes it manifest that the sole object of enacting it was to achieve a public purpose, then even though the words 'public purpose' are not used in the Act, the Act will be within the competence of the Legislature and will not be repugnant to Constitution. It is sufficiently clear from the wording of the various sections of the East Punjab Utilization of Lands Act that it was enacted for a public purpose, namely, the growing of more food for the country and that being so the Act must be held to be valid. Per Majority, Ayyanger, J., Contra.—If the language used is capable of only one construction and fails to carry out the intention of Parliament when making the amendment, the amendment may have to be struck down if it contravenes a constitutional provision. It is permissible to control the wide language used in a statute if that is possible by the setting, in which the words are used and the intention of the law-making body which may be apparent from the circumstances in which the particular provision came to be made. AIR 1963 S C 1128, Rel. on.

It may be conceded that on a literal construction of S. 40 (1) (aa) of the Land Acquisition Act the adjectival clause, namely, 'which is engaged or is taking steps for engaging itself in any industry or work which is for a public purpose,' qualifies the word 'company' and not the words 'building or work' for the construction of which the land is needed. The clause however bears another construction also. The words 'building or work' used in Cl. (aa) take their colour from the adjectival clause which governs the company for which the building or work is being constructed and acquisition under this clause can only be made where the company is engaged or is taking steps to engage itself in any industry or work which is for a public purpose, and the building or work which the company is intending to construct is of the same nature, namely, that it is a building or work which is meant to subserve the public purpose of the industry or work for which it is being constructed. It is only in these cases where the company is engaged in an industry or purpose of that kind, which is a public purpose, that acquisition can be made under Cl. (aa). It is well settled that if certain provisions of law construed in one way will be consistent with the Constitution, and if another interpretation would render them unconstitutional, the Court would lean in favour of the former construction. The second is the better construction of Cl. (aa) taking into account the setting in which it appears and the circumstances in which it came to be enacted and the words used therein. If that is the true construction of Cl. (aa) it cannot be said to contravene Art. 31 (1), for the public purpose required therein is present where land is required for the construction of a building or work which must subserve the public purpose of the industry or work in which a company is engaged or is about to be engaged. Nor can it be said that the provision is hit by Art. 19 (1) (f), for it would be reasonable restriction on the right to hold property. The clause so interpreted is not unconstitutional. The amendments in S. 41 are only consequential to the insertion of Cl. (aa) in S 40 (1) and would therefore be equally valid and constitutional. AIR 1962 S C 955, Rel. on.

Per Ayyangar, J.—Cl. (aa) of S. 40 (1) introduced by the Amending Act 31 of 1962 is unconstitutional and violative of Art. 31 (2). R. L. Arora v. State of U. ● ——Arts. 31 (2), 14 — Land Acquisition (Amendment) Act (31 of 1962), S. 7—Validity—Section does not contravene Art. 31 (2) or 14.

Per Majority. — Before S. 7 of Land Acquisition (Amendment) Act (31 of 1962) can validate an acquisition made before July 20, 1962, it must first be shown that the acquisition is complete and the land acquired has vested in Government. This means that the land acquired has vested in Government either under S. 16 or 17 (1) of the Land Acquisition Act. Thus, S. 7 of the Amendment Act validates such acquisitions in which property has vested absolutely in Government either under S. 16 or S. 17 (1). Secondly, S. 7 of the Amendment Act provides that where acquisition has been made for a company before July 20, 1962, or purported to have been made under Cl. (a) or Cl. (b) of S. 40 (1) of Land Acquisition Act and those clauses do not apply in view of the interpretation put thereon in AIR 1962 S C 764 it shall be deemed that the acquisition was for the purpose mentioned in Cl. (aa) as inserted in S. 40 (1) of the Act by the Amendment Act. Thirdly, S. 7 of the Amendment Act provides that every such acquisition and any proceeding, order, agreement or action in connection with such acquisition shall be, and shall be deemed always to have been, as valid as if the provisions of Ss. 40 and 41 of the Land Acquisition Act as amended by the Amendment Act were in force at all material times when any action was taken for such acquisition. Finally, this validity is given to such acquisitions and to all actions taken in connection therewith notwithstanding any judgment, decree or order of any Court. It cannot be said that S. 7 makes an irrebuttable presumption that the acquisition was a public purpose, though it may not be actually so and therefore contravenes Art. 31 (2) inasmuch as the result of this irrebuttable presumption is that acquisition which may not have been for a public purpose is validated. The first fiction goes no further than this and does not provide that even though the purpose of acquisition does not fall within Cl. (aa) it will still be deemed to be a public purpose. In this view of the matter, the attack on S. 7 on the basis of Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution must fail.

All that the second fiction in S. 7 of the Amendment Act says is that when the first fiction is satisfied, the second fiction will come into force and every such acquisition and any proceeding, order, agreement or action in connection with such acquisition shall be and shall be deemed always to have been, as valid as if the provisions of Ss. 40 and 41 of the Act, as amended by the Amendment Act, were in force at all material times. In effect therefore S. 7 provides that even though acquisitions made before 20-7-1962 do not satisfy the conditions of Cl. (a) and Cl. (b) of S. 40 (1), they will be valid if they satisfy the conditions of Cl. (aa) as introduced by the Amendment Act, as if that clause was in existence when the acquisition was made before 20-7-1962. In this view there is no discrimination in the matter of acquisition for a company before 20-7-1962 and after that date because in either case the conditions of Cl. (aa) have to be actually satisfied whether the acquisition was before July 20, 1962 or thereafter, as the validation by S. 7 of the Amendment Act is only of such acquisition before 20-7-1962 which actually satisfy the provisions in Cl. (aa). What the second fiction provides is that an acquisition made before that date shall be as valid as if the provisions of Ss. 40 and 41 of the Act as amended by the Amendment Act were in force at all material times. The force of the words 'as valid as if' clearly is that the validity of acquisition made before 20-7-1962, has to be judged on the basis that the Cl. (aa) was in force at the material time and in accordance therewith. The validity therefore is not absolute; it is conditioned by the fact that it will be as valid as if Cl. (aa) was in force so that if it could not be valid even if Cl. (aa) was in force and could not be justified under the terms of that clause, the validity conferred by S. 7 of the Amendment Act will not attach to it. In this view the attack under Art. 14 as well as Art. 31 (2) fails, for in neither case can acquisition be valid whether made before 20-7-1962 or thereafter, unless the conditions of Cl. (aa) are satisfied. R L. Arora v. State of U. The purpose of construction of dwelling houses cannot be considered necessarily or per se to be a public purpose. In an area where there is shortage of dwelling accommodation and there is suitable land available for constructing houses the public purpose will be served by facilitating their construction. It, therefore, depends on the circumstances of each case whether construction of houses will further a public purpose or not.

● —Art. 31 (2) (as amended fourthly in 1955)—'Compensation' and 'principles'—Meaning of—Consideration of adequacy of compensation is excluded from jurisdiction of Court — But matter whether compensation itself is illusory or principles are irrelevant to value of property is justiciable by Court.

A. I. R. 1954 S C 170 lays down three points, namely, (i) the compensation under Art. 31 (2) shall be a 'just equivalent' of what the owner has been deprived of, (ii) the principles which the Legislature can prescribe are only principles for ascertaining a 'just equivalent' of what the owner has been deprived of, and (iii) if the compensation fixed was not a 'just equivalent' of what the owner has been deprived of or if the principles did not take into account all relevant elements or took into account irrelevant elements for arriving at the just equivalent; the question in regard thereto is a justiciable issue. Thus it was a settled law that under Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution before the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act, 1955, a person whose land was acquired was entitled to compensation, i. e., a 'just equivalent' of the land of which he was deprived.

Article 31 (2) is amended by the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act, 1955. A scrutiny of the amended Article discloses that it accepted the meaning of the expression 'compensation' and 'principles' as defined in the case mentioned above. Under the amended Article, the law fixing the amount of compensation or laying down the principles governing the said fixation cannot be questioned in any Court on the ground that the compensation provided by that law was inadequate. The definition of 'compensation' and the question of justiciability are to be kept distinct. Even after the amendment, provision for compensation or laying down of the principles for determining the compensation is a condition for the making of a law of acquisition or requisition. A Legislature, if it intends to make a law for compulsory acquisition or requisition, must provide for compensation or specify the principles for ascertaining the compensation. It follows that a Legislature in making a law of acquisition or requisition shall provide for a just equivalent of what the owner has been deprived of or specify the principles for the purpose of ascertaining the just equivalent of what the owner has been deprived of.

However, the law of acquisition or requisition is not wholly immune from scrutiny by the Court. What is excluded from the Court's jurisdiction is that the said law cannot be questioned on the ground that the compensation provided by that law is not adequate. It will further be noticed that the clause excluding the jurisdiction of the Court also uses the word 'compensation' indicating thereby that what is excluded from the Court's jurisdiction is the adequacy of the compensation fixed by the Legislature. Neither the principles prescribing the 'just equivalent' nor the 'just equivalent' can be questioned by the Court on the ground of the inadequacy of the compensation fixed or arrived at by the working of the principles. But if a law lays down principles which are not relevant to the property acquired or to the value of the property at or about the time it is acquired, it may be said that they are not principles contemplated by Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution. If a law says that though a house is acquired, it shall be valued as a land or that though a house site is acquired, it shall be valued as an agricultural land or that though it is acquired in 1950 its value in 1930 should be given or though 100 acres are acquired compensation shall be given only for 50 acres, the principles do not pertain to the domain of adequacy but are principles unconnected to the value of the property acquired. In such cases the validity of the principles can be scrutinised. The law may also prescribe a compensation which is illusory; it may provide for the acquisition of a property worth lakhs of rupees for a paltry sum of Rs. 100. The question in that context does not relate to the adequacy of the compensation, for it is no compensation at all. If the compensation is illusory or if the principles prescribed are irrelevant to the value of the property at or about the time of its acquisition, it can be said that the Legislature committed a fraud on power and, therefore, the law is bad. It is a use of the protection of Art. 31 in a manner which the Article hardly intended.

Applying the doctrine of fraud on power, the Legislature cannot make a law in derogation of Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution. It can, therefore, only make a law of acquisition or requisition by providing for 'compensation' in the manner prescribed in Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution. Briefly stated the legal position is as follows: If the question pertains to the adequacy of compensation, it is not justiciable; if the compensation fixed or the principles evolved for fixing it disclose that the Legislature made the law in fraud of powers the question is within the jurisdiction of the Court. ● —Arts. 31 (2), 31-A — Rajasthan Land Reforms and Resumption of Jagirs Act (VI of 1952)—Validity.

An objection to the validity of an Act relating to acquisition of property on the ground that it did not provide for payment of compensations is an objection based on Article 31 (2) and it is barred when the impugned legislation fell within Art 31-A. When the acquisition is of the whole estate, it is not a valid objection to it that the compensation was awarded on the basis of the income actually received, and that nothing was paid on account of properties which did not yield an income. The fact that the compensation provided under an Act is inadequate, if that is calculated on the basis of the market value of the properties is not a ground on which an Act protected by Article 31-A could be impugned. Before such an Act could be struck down, it must be shown that the true intention of the law was to take properties without making any payment, that the provisions relating to compensation are merely veils concealing that intention, and that the compensation payable is so illusory as to be no compensation at all.

This cannot be said of the provisions of the impugned Act, and the contention that it is a fraud on the Constitution must, in consequence, fail. The fact that the impugned Act suffered from a fundamental defect in that it treated all the 41 tenures classed as jagirs in the schedule as of the same character, and on that basis laid down the same principles of compensation for all of them, is an objection to the quantum of compensation and that is not justiciable under Article 31-A. That there was no public purpose invoked in the resumption, and that therefore Article 31 (2) had been contravened again is an objection which is barred by Article 31-A. Amarsingh v. State of Rajasthan, 1955 S C A 766 : 1955 S C J 523 : (1955) 2 S C R 303 : A I R 1955 S C 504 (536) (Pt V) (Prs 82, 83, 84, 85).

List 3 of Sch. VII, Entry 42 is undoubtedly the description of a legislative head and in deciding the competency of a legislation under this entry, the Court is not concerned with the justice or propriety of the principles upon which the determination of the compensation is to be made or the form or manner in which it is to be given. But even then, the legislation must rest upon some principle of giving compensation and not of denying or withholding it, and a legislation cannot be supported which is based upon something which is non-existent or is unrelated to facts and consequently cannot have a conceivable bearing on any principle of compensation. AIR 1952 S C 252, Expl.

The doctrine cannot be invoked in respect of the Madras Estates (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act (26 of 1948) which is passed by the Madras Provincial Legislature functioning under the Government of India Act, 1935. For there was no entry in any of the lists attached to that Act corresponding to Sch. VII, List 3, Entry 42 of the Constitution of India. The only entry relevant to this point in the Act of 1935 was Item 9 of List 2 which spoke merely of 'compulsory acquisition of land'; and it is clear that a duty to pay compensation or of laying down any principle regarding it was not inherent in the language of that entry. ● ——Art. 31 (2)—Measure of compensation—Scope for legislative discretion — Principle which determines compensation which denies increment in value —West Bengal Land Development and Planning Act (21 of 1948), S. 8, Proviso (b)—Validity.

While it is true that the legislature is given the discretionary power of laying down the principles which should govern the determination of the amount to be given to the owner for the property appropriated such principles must ensure that what is determined as payable must be compensation, that is a just equivalent of what the owner has been deprived of. Within the limits of this basic requirement of full indemnification of the expropriated owner, the Constitution allows free play to the legislative judgment as to what principles should guide the determination of the amount payable. Whether such principles take into account all the elements which make up the true value of the property appropriated and exclude matters which are to be neglected, is a justiciable issue to be adjudicated by the Court. Considering that the West Bengal Act 21 of 1948 is a permanent enactment and lands may be acquired under it many years after it came into force the fixing of the market-value on 31st December 1946, as the ceiling on compensation under the latter part of the proviso to S. 8, without reference to the value of the land at the time of the acquisition is arbitrary and cannot be regarded as due compliance in letter and spirit with the requirement of Art. 31 (2). For, the fixing of an anterior date for the ascertainment of value may not, in certain circumstances, be a violation of the constitutional requirements as, for instance when the proposed scheme of acquisition becomes known before it is launched and prices rise sharply in anticipation of the benefits to be derived under it but the fixing of an anterior date, which might have no relation to the value of the land when it is acquired, may be, many years later, cannot but be regarded as arbitrary. Any principle for determining compensation which denies to the owner any increment in value cannot result in the ascertainment of the true equivalent of the land appropriated. State of Bengal v. The word "compensation" in Art. 31 (2) was intended to have the same meaning in the Article as in S. 299, Government of India Act.

'Compensation' in Art. 31 (2) means the equivalent in value of the property taken or acquired subject only to this qualification that such equivalent need not be paid in money.

Any provision for giving by way of compensation less than the equivalent will not amount to compensation in law and will constitute a contravention of that clause Whether the law provides for an inadequate payment, or for discriminatory payments to different owners, the result is the same—failure to provide for compensation in law. In either instance there is a contravention of the provisions of Cl. (2).

The U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act, 1950 (1 of 1951) cannot be challenged in any Court on the ground that it fails to provide for compensation in law, as it is law which is covered by Art. 31 (4).

In view of the provisions of Cl. (4) of Art. 31 inadequacy of the compensation is not a matter which is open to challenge, and there is no other ground from which the Court can infer that the provisions of the Act with regard to compensation constitute a fraud on the Constitution. ——Art. 31 (2) (before amendment) -'Compensation' —Meaning of.

Under the unamended Art. 31 (2), the word 'compensation' meant a full and fair money equivalent of the property taken. AIR 1954 S C 170, Foll.

In the case of the abolition of cash grants in the former Hyderabad State some of the cash grants were commutable but no uniform rule existed for fixing the amount. The earlier Rules cannot furni h any guidance; for what may be fair compensation when privileges are particularly cherished may not be regarded as such in a Republic. In these circumstances there is bound to be divergence of views between the mansabdars and an average citizen as to what would be the fair equivalent of the property The legislature, in these circumstances, was authorised under Art. 31 before its amendment to specify the principle on which the compensation is to be determined.

The Hyderabad Abolition of Cash Grants Act, as amended by Act (23 of 1954) has provided compensation at six times the annual amount of grant and it is not so low as to render the compensation arbitrary. What Art. 31 (2) requires is that just compensation has to be paid to persons, whose properties are being compulsorily acquired. The manner or the time of payment may be such as is determined by the Legislature. So long as there are provisions for payment of the just compensation, the requirements of the Article of the Constitution are fully complied with.

All the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act 1894 relating to compensation in so far as they are not in any way inconsistent with the W.B.L.D. Act are available for determination of the amount of compensation payable for acquisitions made under the latter Act. It is true that the Collector is not bound to offer any compensation before the sudden dispossession takes place, because no such offer is contemplated by the W. B. L. D. Act, but that does not make the W. B. L. D. Act bad or ultra vires as contravening Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution. A I R 1952 Cal 870 (872) (Pt C) (Prs 5, 6).

——Art. 31 (2)—Compensation—Meaning of — West Bengal Land Development and Planning Act (21 of 1948), S. 8, Proviso (b).

Art. 31, Cl. (2) requires a just amount to be given for any property acquired and if the amount which a law gives be not just reasonable then it cannot be regarded as compensation within that clause. The amount fixed as compensation must be just equivalent and if the amount is not fixed then the principles on which and the manner in which compensation is to be determined must be principles upon which just equivalent can be arrived at and the provision for the manner in which the compensation is to be determined must ensure that a just and reasonable amount is given. Compensation assessed in accordance with the latter portion of proviso (b) of S. 8, West Bengal Land Development and Planning Act is not determined according to a principle and in a manner which would result in a just or reasonable equivalent being paid for the land. The principles on which and the manner in which compensation is to be determined as laid down in the latter portion of proviso (b) to S. 8 are no better than if it has been stated that whatever the market value of the land might be it could be acquired at the rate of 'X' rupees per bigha or per acre. The provisions as to compensation in S. 8 clearly offend against the provisions of Cl. (2) of Art 31 and are therefore void. 55 Cal W N 778 : AIR 1951 Cal 111 (115) (Pt C) (Prs 33, 34, 37) (DB).

Art. 31 (2) does not mean that unless the compensation is first paid, the right of a person to possession of the property cannot be infringed. If the law provides a machinery whereby the amount of compensation can be determined and paid which is the ultimate object of Art. 31 (2), then there is no contravention of the Constitution. 1955 Nag L J 507 : ILR (1955) Nag 525 : AIR 1956 Nag 101 (103) (Pt C) (Pr 10) (DB).

——Art. 31 (2) — Compensation — (Words and Phrases).

Compensation as understood under the law of Eminent Domain, necessarily involves the idea of "just compensation", carrying with it the following attributes : (1) Market-value payable on the footing of compulsory sale ; (2) determination of compensation by a judicial tribunal; (3) payment of compensation (a) in cash and (b) on the date when possession is taken unless any other method and manner of payment is consented to by the dispossessed proprietor. ILR (1953) Cut 71 : AIR 1953 Orissa 185 (190) (Pt A) (Pr 8) (DB).

——Art. 31 (2)—Compulsory acquisition — Compensation.

The requirements of a valid law relating to compulsory acquisition must be found with reference to the terms of Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution itself. The word "compensation" as used in Art. 31 (2) must be taken to mean such compensation which fulfils the constitutional requirements prescribed therein that is, either (1) the amount thereof is fixed, or (2) the principles on which or the manner in which the compensation is to be determined and given, are specified. With respect to Zamindari abolition cases, the word "compensation" cannot be understood as involving the attributes of "just compensation" as known in the American system of Law in those cases to which the terms of Arts. 31 (4) and 31 A as interpreted by the decision of the Supreme Court apply. AIR 1952 S C 252, Foll. ILR (1953) Cut 71 : AIR 1953 Orissa 185 (190, 191, 192) (Pt B) (Prs 9, 11) (DB).

——Art. 31—Guarantee when becomes satisfied.

The guarantee contained the fundamental right embodied in Art. 31 may be taken to have been satisfied so long as the law authorising the acquisition provides for the amount of the compensation or specifies the principles on which and the manner in which the compensation is to be determined and given, and so long as the scheme of compensation which emerges therefrom results in compensation, and not negation thereof, having regard to all the circumstances of the contemplated compulsory acquisition. ILR (1953) Cut 71 : AIR 1953 Orissa 185 (192) (Pt D) (Pr 11) (DB).

——Art. 31 (2)—Compensation paid in instalments—(Government of India Act (1935), S. 299 (2))—(Orissa Estates Abolition Act (1 of 1952), Ss. 37 and 38).

Section 299 (2), Government of India Act 1935, required the law authorising compulsory acquisition of land to provide for payment of compensation of the property acquired and to either fix the amount of compensation or specify the principles on which and the manner in which it is to be determined, while Art. 31 (2), Constitution of India, requires only that the law must provide for compensation for the property and must either fix the amount of compensation or specify the principles on which the compensation is to be determined and given. Therefore while under S. 299 (2) compensation must be assessed and paid which may well imply cash payment and payment at the time of making possession, the requirement of Art. 31 (2) is that there must be principles enacted for determination and giving of compensation. This shows very clearly that merely because the compensation assessed is not paid at once, but in instalments, it cannot be said to violate Art. 31 (2) or to be otherwise illegal. ILR (1953) Cut 71 : AIR 1953 Orissa 185 (193) (Pt E) (Pr 12) (DB).

● ——Art. 31 (2) — Government of India Act, 1935, S. 299 (2)—"For compensation" and "for the payment of compensation."

Per Shearer J.—Clause (2) of Art. 31 of the Constitution of India, substantially reproduces sub-s. (2) of S. 299 of the Government of India Act, 1935. However, the substitution of the words "for compensation" in cl. (2) for the words "for the payment of compensation" in sub-s. (2) indicates that compensation may now be given not in money, but in bonds or possibly in land the reason being that when large numbers of individuals are to be expropriated under a scheme of land reform it may be impossible to compensate them in money and that when large numbers of cultivators are to be expropriated in order that land may be taken for such a public purpose as the construction of a dam it may be in their own interest to receive land elsewhere rather than money. Maharajadhiraj Kameshwar Singh v. State of Bihar, ILR 30 Pat 454 : AIR 1951 Pat 91 (94, 95) (Pt G) (Pr 4) (SB).

● ——Art. 31 (2)—Compensation—What it should be.

Per Shearer J.—Although, under the Constitution compensation need not necessarily be in money, nevertheless, whatever compensation is made it should be something which could fairly be said to be equivalent in value to the property taken over by the State.

Per Reuben J.—Compensation represents the money value of the property acquired. It is usual to give the owner something more than the value of the property by way of a solatium for the compulsory nature of the acquisition. The use of the word "compensation" is to be taken in the accepted sense as representing the money value of the property. The giving of compensation for property compulsorily acquired was considered to be of sufficient importance to be guaranteed by a provision in the Part of the Constitution dealing with Fundamental Rights. It does not appear likely that the Constituent Assembly would by that very provision empower the Legislature to give as compensation such amount as it thinks proper without any reference to the real value of the property acquired. Maharajadhiraj Kameshwar Singh v. State of Bihar, ILR 30 Pat 454 : AIR 1951 Pat 91 (97, 110) (Pt H) (Prs 9. 50) (SB).

● ——Art. 31 (2) and (4), Sch. VII, List II, Entry 36 and List III, Entry 42.

Power of Legislature to legislate for acquisition without legislating for compensation — Clause (2) whether "provision" within meaning of Clause (4), Art. 31.

Per Reuben J.—The legislative heads contained in Entry 36 of the State List and Entry 42 of the Concurrent List empower the Legislature to pass laws relating to the subject-matter contained therein without placing any restrictions on the powers of the Legislature within the limits of those heads. As these entries stand, it would be open to the Legislature to legislate for acquisition without at the same time legislating about compensation. The limitation which makes provision about compensation essential is imposed by Cl. (2) of Art. 31 read with Cl. (2) of Art. 13. This requirement is, therefore, a "provision" of cl. (2). Art. 31 coming within the meaning of that word used in Art. 31 (4) and (6). Maharajadhiraj Kameshwar Singh v. State of Bihar, ILR 30 Pat 454 : A I R 1951 Pat 91 (105) (Pt I) (Pr 29) (SB).

——Art. 31 (2)—Acquisition of entire proprietary interest — Measure of compensation—Market price or quid pro quo.

It is a trite proposition of economics that the market price can be ascertained and exists in fact, only where a small fraction of the total property in existence comes up for sale. It is just as if a small quantity of water is taken out of a big stream without lowering the level perceptibly. But when, by a fiat of law, which the State Legislature is no doubt competent to pass, most of the proprietary interest is being acquired, then there cannot be a proper market price in the true sense of the term. It is just as if the entire stream is lifted out of its bed; there is no level which can be the norm. Looked at that way any discussion of market price or a quid pro quo as the measure of adequate or reasonable compensation is bound to be futile when there is an acquisition of entire proprietary interest. A I R 1954 Vind Pra 24 (27) (Pt D) (Pr 18).

——Art. 31 (2) (as amended in 1955)—Court's power to go into question of compensation — Extent of — Compensation must be fair equivalent — Madras Act 11 of 1953, if, repugnant to Art. 31 (2) — (Madras Lignite (Acquisition of Land) Act (11 of 1953).)

The questions whether the compensation was adequate or not, and, whether the principles were just and reasonable or not, remained justiciable till the amendment made to the Constitution in 1955. The effect of the amendment made to the Constitution in 1955 is to preclude the Courts from going into the adequacy of the compensation provided.

The original requirements (1) that compensation should be paid for the property, and (2) that the Statute should specify the amount of the compensation or the principles in accordance with which the compensation could be ascertained, were not taken away. They still remain in the Constitution in the same sense in which they stood before 1955. The Constitution continued to retain its insistence that a citizen should be paid a just equivalent of the property which may be in money or other form of property.

It is competent to the legislature to specify the principles in accordance with which the compensation is to be ascertained. But they must be principles, that is to say, rational rules appropriate to the subject-matter. Besides, these principles must be truly designed to ascertain the proper amount of compensation. The principles must be applicable to the time at which the property is being acquired. The principles must deal with or cover the whole property that is being acquired and not merely a portion of it.

The provisions made in the Madras Lignite (Acquisition of Land) Act (11 of 1953) that compensation for the land need be paid only on the basis of its value on 28th April, 1947 and that no compensation need be paid for improvements other than agricultural improvements made thereafter are repugnant to Art. 31 (2) They are more in the nature of devices to refuse compensation.

It is not competent to the legislature to direct that the value of property acquired for public purpose shall be ascertained with reference to anterior and irrelevant date. 1959 Mad W N 387 : 72 Mad L W 434 : ILR (1959) Mad 770 : (1959) 2 Mad L J 402 : A I R 1959 Mad 548 (553, 554, 555) (Pt C) (Prs 37, 40, 41, 42, 44, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51) (DB).

Where a petition challenging the legality of the acquisition under S. 7 of the Orissa Act was filed by the aggrieved owners before the Arbitrator long before the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution came into force the question as to the constitutional validity of Proviso 1 to S. 7 (1), Cl. (e) must be examined with reference to Art 31 (2) as it existed prior to the amendment and on that question the previous decision of the Division Bench of the Orissa High Court in A I R 1955 Orissa 97 (which held the Proviso to be unconstitutional as offending Art. 31 (2) as it stood then) would still continue to be good law. But in those cases where the petitions before the Arbitrator challenging the adequacy of compensation were filed after the said Amendment had come into force, the constitutional validity of Proviso 1 to Cl. (e) of S. 7 (1) of the Act cannot be challenged merely on the ground that it offends Art. 31 (2) (as amended) inasmuch as that very clause of the Constitution expressly bars the jurisdiction of the Court to examine the adequacy or otherwise of the amount of compensation payable. AIR 1955 SC 781 and AIR 1958 SC 328, Rel. on. (1960) 2 Orissa J D 218 : ILR (1960) Cut 487 : AIR 1961 Orissa 196 (199) (Pt A) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Art. 31 (2); (4)—Tenancy Laws—Orissa Estates Abolition Act (1 of 1952), S. 28—Validity.

If the Legislature thought that minor zamindars should get compensation at a higher rate whereas big zamindars should get compensation at a lower rate for high slabs of income it is difficult to say that such a principle is not inextricably bound up with the broader question of adequacy of compensation. Art. 31 (4) expressly prohibits a Court from questioning the adequacy of compensation. Even if it be assumed that Orissa Act 1 of 1952 as it now stands is not a 'law' as referred to in Cl. (4) of Art. 31 it is undoubtedly a 'law' as described in Cl. (2) of that Article (as amended in 1955) and would get the protection of that clause. AIR 1951 All 674 (FB) Rel. on. So far as the cases which fall within the scope of Art. 31 (4), 31-A or 31-B are concerned, the law relating to compulsory acquisition is not open to challenge on the ground that the scheme of compensation provided by it, does not conform to what are said to be the accepted attributes of compensation which in this behalf is alleged to mean 'just compensation' and, in that sense only, produces no compensation. ● —Art. 31 (2) — Provision in enactment laying down principles of compensation whether justiciable by Court.

Per Reuben J.—The power given to the Legislature to legislate with regard to the principles on which compensation for the property acquired is to be determined does not make the matter of compensation non-justiciable. The fact that this matter has been included in Part III of the Constitution and that it has been thought necessary to provide protection to such legislation under Cls. 4 and 6 of Art. 31 shows that the matter was intended to be justiciable. What Cl. 2 requires is provision for compensation and Courts are entitled to enquire, subject to Cl. (4) whether the payment for which the impugned legislation provides is "compensation" within the meaning of this clause.

But an investigation of the question whether the sums determined by the principles laid down in the Bihar Land Reforms Act are compensation or not is an investigation which the Court is precluded from making by reason of the assent under Cl. (4) of Art. 31 of the Constitution. Kameshwar Singh v. State of Bihar, ILR 30 Pat 454 : AIR 1951 Pat 91 (110, 111, 113) (Pt J) (Prs 51, 60) (SB).

——Arts. 31 (2) and 31-A — Adequacy of compensation, if justiciable—Validity of Saurashtra Barkhali Abolition Act, if can be challenged on ground of inadequacy of compensation—Compensation, if illusory—(Tenancy Laws — Saurashtra Barkhali Abolition Act (26 of 1951), S. 18).

However repugnant the impugned law may be to its sense of justice, it is not possible for the Court to examine the contents of the law on the question of the quantum of compensation; the question of the adequacy of the compensation; is not justiciable by the Court and the constitutionality of the Act cannot be challenged on that ground. A I R 1952 S C 252, Foll.

The validity of the Saurashtra Barkhali Abolition Act cannot be challenged on the ground of inadequacy of compensation.

Payment made under S. 18 is necessarily by way of compensation, even though that expression may not have been used No doubt the payment is spread over a number of years and the sum paid to the Barkhalidar every year is equivalent to one assessment of the land. The cumulative compensation paid is a sizeable sum and the only difference is that it is paid as an annuity instead of in a lump sum Ther fore it is not correct to call the cash annuity under S. 18 as the Barkhalidar's own money paid to him and the payment is not illusory. 8 Sau L R 70 : AIR 1955 Sau 80 (83, 84) (Pt C) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

● —Art. 31 (2) (as amended fourthly in 1955)—Inadequacy of compensation — Land Acquisition (Madras Amendment) Act (23 of 1961), S 3—Madras Amending Act does not offend Art. 31 (2).

The Land Acquisition (Madras Amendment) Act (23 of 1961) prescribes the principles for ascertaining the value of the property acquired. It was passed to amend the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, in the State of Madras for the purpose of enabling the State to acquire lands for housing schemes In fixing the compensation to be paid to claimants for lands acquired for housing schemes the Amending Act excludes what is described by Courts as the potential value of the land acquired. In awarding compensation if the potential value of the land is excluded, it cannot be said that the compensation awarded is the just equivalent of what the owner has been deprived of. But such an exclusion only pertains to the method of ascertaining the compensation. One of the elements that should properly be taken into account in fixing the compensation is omitted; it results in the inadequacy of the compensation, but that in itself does not constitute fraud on power of Legislature. The Madras Amending Act does not offend Art 31 (2) of the Constitution. P. Vajravelu Mudaliar v. Special Deputy Collector for Land Acquisition, W. Section 5 of the Madras Electricity Supply Undertakings (Acquisition) Act (29 of 1954), provides the the compensation payable to a licencee on whom an order has been served under S. 4 or whose undertaking has been taken over before the commencement of the Act, shall be determined under any one of the Bases A, B and C specified by the section. The failure of the Legislature to refer to the fair market-value cannot be regarded as conclusive or even presumptive evidence of the fact that what is intended to be paid under S. 5 does not amount to a just equivalent of the undertaking taken over. In the absence of any material the Court is unable to hold that on looking at the scheme adopted by S. 5 itself, the petitioner's argument that what is offered by way of compensation is not a just equivalent, can be accepted. It may be that in some cases Basis B may work hardship and conceivably even Basis A or Basis C may not be as satisfactory as it should be; but when a party challenges the validity of a statutory provision like S. 5 it is necessary that the party must adduce satisfactory and sufficient material before the Court on which it wants the Court to hold that the compensation which would be paid under every one of the three Basis under the impugned statutory provision does not amount to a just equivalent. Looking merely at the scheme of the section itself it is impossible to arrive at such a conclusion. West Ramnad Electric Distribution Co., Ltd. v. Land Tenures (Regulation of Transfers) Act (15 of 1952), S. 1— Tenancy Laws — U. P. Land Reforms (Supplementary) Act (31 of 1952), S. 1).

Under the law as interpreted before the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution, no distinction was made between a law which resulted in deprivation of property or by means of which acquisition or requisitioning could be made and in both these cases provision had to be made for payment of compensation. As a necessary corollary any law which did not provide for compensation but deprived a subject of his property, whether it was for the purposes of the State or for the purposes of anybody else was void. But now the effect of the Fourth Amendment of the Constitution by which Art. 31 is amended is that while a law for acquiring or requisitioning property for the State has to provide for compensation, it need not make it obligatory for the State to provide for compensation in case of deprivation of property in favour of somebody else.

As in the U. P. Acts (15 of 1952 and 31 of 1952) the deprivation of property involved is not in favour of the State nor do they deal with the requisitioning or acquisition of property, no provision for compensation is, therefore, necessary under the Constitution and the validity of any law which has brought about such deprivation of property cannot be hit by the provisions of Art. 31. 1957 All L J 698 : 1957 (II W R HC) 703 : I L R (1957) 2 All 320 : AIR 1957 All 549 (551) (Pt A) (Prs 6, 7, 8) (DB).

—Art. 31—Andhra Inams (Abolition of Conversion into Ryotwari) Act (37 of 1956) — Constitutional validity—No violation of Art. 31.

The vires of the Andhra Inams (Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari) Act, 1956, cannot be challenged under Art. 31 of the Constitution on the ground that it does not provide for compensation to the inamdar; S. 4 (3) contains a provision for the payment of compensation in the form of a ryotwari patta for one-third of the inam. It is true that the inamdar is not paid compensation in terms of cash. But the assignment of a share in the inam abolished or allotment of a definite extent of land is as good a compensation as payment, in cash. In fact S. 4 (3) speaks of the grant of patta to the inamdar as compensation payable to him in lieu of the extinguishment of his rights in the two-thirds share of such land. Art. 31(2)—Compensation—Assam Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act (25 of 1948), S. 7 (3) and (4)—Validity.

Section 7 (3) of the Assam Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948, clearly provides for the payment of compensation. It further provides the method for the determination of the amount and embodies the principles on which the compensation is to be paid. The amount of compensation to be awarded is controlled by sub-s. (4). The reasonable compensation which has to be awarded by the Collector, in the absence of any agreement is subject to the scrutiny by a Court on reference, and such a Court is to be guided by the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act. Sub-sections (3) and (4) have got to be read together. The element of arbitration is ruled out by the use of the words 'reasonable compensation' in sub-s. (2). It cannot be said that the Act is hit by Art. 31 (2). The decision in A I R 1954 S C 170 does not affect the validity of S. 7 (3) and (4) of the Assam Act. The provisions impugned in the Supreme Court case were regarding the payment of compensation for the acquisition of property, while the provisions of S. 7 (3) and (4) only deal with the payment of compensation for requisitioning certain land. There is bound to be difference in the market value of the property in these two cases. I L R (1959) 11 Assam 1: AIR 1958 Assam 140 (143, 144, 145) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 5, 7) (DB).

——Art. 31 (2) — Acquisition or taking possession of property — West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act — Validity — (Tenancy Laws — West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act (1 of 1954)—Construction and scope).

There are ample provisions in the West Bengal Act (1 of 1954) and Rules for the payment of compensation by the State acquiring the properties under the Act, and the payment is enforceable in Courts of law. The adequacy of such payment is, however, beyond the cognisance of the Courts. There can be no bar to the maintainability of a suit to enforce payment of compensation. Sections 17 and 18 of the Limitation Act, although that Act does not provide a cause of action, also indicate that the view that a suit lies under such circumstances is the proper view to take. The fact that the compensation has not been charged by the Act on the consolidated fund, and, as such, is votable; cannot in any way affect the right to receive compensation which does not depend on the voting of the grant. The State having acquired the property is bound to pay compensation. Therefore on that ground also the validity of the Act is not affected. 62 Cal W N 14 : A I R 1958 Cal 96 (102, 130) (Pt E) (Prs 17, 18, 19).

The Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act and the West Bengal Foodgrains (Intensive Procurement) Order read with the specification of prices, etc Notification No. 10365 F. ——Art. 31 (2), Sch. 7, List I, Entries 33, 43, 44 and 52 and Sch 7, List 2, Entry 36 — Powers of Union Legislature —(Iron and Steel Companies Amalgamation Ordinance (8 of 1952)) — (Iron and Steel Companies Amalgamation Act (89 of 1953) — Companies Act (1913), Ss. 153-A and 153-B).

Sections 153-A and 153-B, Companies Act, indicate that amalgamation or merger of companies or Corporations is a matter which relates to incorporation or regulation of companies. The effect of the Ordinance 8 of 1952 and the Act 89 of 1953 is to combine the Bengal Steel Corporation and the Iron and Steel Company and make their share-holders the co-owners of the combined assets and not to deprive them of their entire interest or ownership, which is essential for acquisition. The effect of the legislation is amalgamation.

Since particular industry has been brought under control of the Union of India by Industries Development and Regulation Act, 1951 and as the legislations in question show that the Central Government has retained control in the amalgamated companies and that they have been passed in the interests of the general public and Union their pith and substance is that they legislate with regard to matters relating to Entries 43 and 44 of List 1 read with Entry 52 of the same list and not relating to matter which fall under Art. 31 (2) and Entry 33 of List 1 or 36 of List 2. For the same reasons the subject-matter of the legislation is also not within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislature. Case-law discussed.

Even on the assumption that the impugned legislation relates to acquisition of property they fall within Entry 33 of List 1 and were validly enacted by the Union Parliament by reason of the declaration it has made under Entry 52 of List 1 and because they were made in the interests of the Union and the general public.

Article 31(2) is also not offended because the shareholders of Bengal Steel Corporation are compensated by shares in the Iron and Steel Company and the Corporation itself acquires interests in the undertakings and assets of the latter company in addition to its own undertakings and assets. AIR 1953 Cal 695 (699, 700) (Pt D) (Prs 12, 15, 18, 19, 20).

——Art. 31(2)—West Bengal Land Development and Planning Act (21 of 1948), S. 4—Validity.

Article 31 (2) of the Constitution speaks of compensation for the acquisition of the property itself but the proviso to S. 4 of the Act 21 of 1948 does not relate to payment of compensation in this sense but it deals with question of payment of damages that may be caused during temporary occupation of the lands by reason of acts done as contemplated by the section itself. Section 4 of the Act cannot be held to be invalid on the ground that the proviso is an unreasonable provision inasmuch as the damage can be arbitrarily assessed by the Collector or persons mentioned in the proviso. 89 Cal L J 301 : A I R 1952 Cal 679 (683) (Pt I) (Pr 8).

——Art. 31 (2) — Bengal Foodgrains (Disposal and Acquisition) Order 1947—Validity.

Clause 3 (2) of the Bengal Foodgrains (Disposal and Acquisition) Order (1947) complies with Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution and hence the Order is not void. The question of adequacy of compensation must depend on various factors. The economic conditions prevailing in the Country and the food situation of the Country require that ceiling prices fixed by the Government should be treated or accepted as the measure of just compensation. Just compensation cannot mean that the Government must compensate the owner of the paddy for potential profits lost because of Economic distress in the Country and consequent price control. ——Arts. 31 (2) and 14—Land Acquisition (M. P. Amendment) Act, 1959 (M. P. Act 5 of 1959), S. 3—Validity—If discriminatory.

The Land Acquisition (M. P. Amendment) Act, 1959 is a valid piece of legislation and is not hit by Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution. Article 31 (2), as it stands now, makes the Legislature the sole judge for determining a just equivalent of the acquired property. The amendments made by the said Act do not deny any compensation for the property acquired and the date with reference to which compensation is to be ascertained cannot be said to be an irrelevant or remote one giving only an illusory compensation.

It cannot be said that there has been a discrimination in the matter of compensation between land acquired in Bhopal area and other areas in the State. The classification between land in Bhopal area and other parts of the State is reasonable, and is for the purpose of enabling the State to acquire land at a reasonable price in Bhopal for the construction of the capital. The amendments by the M. P. Act (5 of 1959), therefore, are not hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution. ——Art. 31 — Bihar Land Reforms Act (30 of 1950), S. 4 (h)—Validity — (Bihar Land Reforms Act (30 of 1950), S. 4 (h)).

It is fallacious to argue that S. 4 (h), Bihar Land Reforms Act, affects the right of compensation payable by the Government to the proprietor or to the transferee If the transfer is set aside by the Collector, the result is that the parent estate is increased in extent and a liability is thrown upon the Government to pay increased compensation pro tanto to the proprietor of the estate. The question at issue therefore is not the question of non-payment of compensation; the question is merely as to how the compensation is to be apportioned between the transferor and the transferee.

The power of enquiry under S. 4 (h) is also protected by ample safeguards. The Collector is required to give reasonable notice to the parties and to pass order only after hearing the parties concerned. The Collector is not given final authority to annul the transfer or take possession of the property. The Collector must take the previous sanction of the State Government before he makes order of annulment of the transfer or before he enters into possession of the property. The requirements of S. 4 (h) are reasonable both from procedural and substantive aspect, and there is no violation of the guarantee under Art. 31 of the Constitution. A I R 1954 Pat 550 (544) (Pt D) (Pr 6) (DB).

Section 15 (1), East Punjab Holding (Consolidation and Prevention of Fragmentation) Act does make a provision for the payment of compensation to any owner who is allowed a holding of lesser market value than that of his original holding and also provides that the scheme should have a provision for the recovery of compensation from one owner for payment to another. Although the amount of compensation is not fixed—as indeed it could not be—the principles on which and the manner in which the compensation is to be determined and given has been provided for in S. 34 (1) of the Act. It cannot be said therefore that this Act in any way contravenes the provisions of Art. 31 (2). I L R (1955) Punj 459 : 57 Punj L R 63 : AIR 1955 Punj 161 (162) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

In Rajasthan, Jagirs are generally not alienable, and therefore they cannot be sold. A jagirdar generally is not a full proprietor having a right to sell away his property. His rights are, therefore, something less than that of a full proprietor and are not marketable either. In these circumstances, compensation at the rate of 9 to 18 times the net income provided by the Rajasthan Act cannot be said to be inadequate particularly in view of the fact that certain properties are exempted from acquisition as mentioned in S. 23. ● ——Art. 31—Madras Lignite (Acquisition of Land) Act (11 of 1953) - Validity — Compensation for acquisition for value on some prior date anterior to acquisition—Provision ultra vires Art. 31.

The provisions which require the Land Acquisition Officer and the Court to assess compensation of the land compulsorily acquired only on the market value of the land of April 28, 1947; together with the value of agricultural improvements on the land commenced, made or effected after that date, and before the date of the publication of the notification under S. 4 (1), without taking into consideration the value of non-agricultural improvements made after that date, must be regarded as invalid—Fixation of compensation for compulsory acquisition of lands notified many years after the date, on the market value prevailing on the date on which lignite was discovered in those areas is wholly arbitrary and inconsistent with the letter and spirit of Art. 31 (2) as it stood before it was amended by the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act, 1956. If the owner is by a constitutional guarantee protected against expropriation of his property otherwise than for a just monetary equivalent it would be impossible to hold that a law which authorises acquisition of land not for its true value, but for value frozen on some date anterior to the acquisition, on the assumption that all appreciation in its value since that date is attributable to purposes for which the State may use the land at some future date, must be regarded as infringing the fundamental right. The right which is guaranteed is undoubtedly the right to a just indemnification for loss, and appreciation in the market value of the land because of the proposed acquisition may in assessing compensation be ignored. Even the Land Aquisition Act provides for assessment of compensation on the basis of market value of the land not on the date on which interest of the owner of the land is extinguished under S. 16, but on the basis of market value prevailing on the date on which the notification under S. 4 (1) is issued. Any principle for determination of compensation denying to the owner all increments in value of between a fixed date and the date of issue of the notification under S. 4 (1), must prima facie, be regarded as denying to him the true equivalent of the land which is expropriated and it is for the State to show that fixation of compensation on the market value on an anterior date does not amount to a violation of the constitutional guarantee. The statement of objects and reasons for the Act clearly discloses that initially mining operations were started by the Government on a small area Assuming that in appropriate cases, fixation of a date anterior to the publication of the notification under S. 4 (1) for ascertainment of market value of the land to be acquired, may not always be regarded as a violation of the constitutional guarantee, in the absence of evidence that compensation assessed on the basis of market value on such anterior date, awards to the expropriated owner a just monetary value of his property at the date on which his interest is extinguished, the provisions of the Act arbitrarily fixing compensation based on the market value at a date many years before the notification under S. 4 (1) was issued, cannot be regarded as valid. To deny to the owner of the land compensation at rates which justly indemnify him for his loss by awarding him compensation at rates prevailing ten years before the date on which the notification under S. 4 (1) was issued amounts in the circumstances to a flagrant infringement of the fundamental right of the owner of the land under Art. 31 (2) as it stood when the Act was enacted. ——Art. 31 (2), (6) — Orissa Development of Industries, Irrigation, Agriculture, Capital Construction and Resettlement of Displaced Persons (Land Acquisition) Act (18 of 1948), S. 7 (1) (e), First Proviso — Validity.

The Orissa Act 18 of 1948 comes within the language of Cl. (6) of Art. 31 as the first proviso to S. 7 (1) (e) of the Act was enacted not more than 18 months before the commencement of the Constitution. The Act did not receive the certificate of the President as contemplated under Cl. (6). The fixation at the rate prevailing in the year 1939 with an addition of fifty per cent. is manifestly an arbitrary one and can never be taken to be a fair, just and equivalent price of the land which may be acquired at any time. Compensation must always necessarily mean "a just, reasonable and equivalent price" of the land acquired.

Far from conforming to the above standard the principles laid down by the State Legislature entitled the Government to acquire lands at a merely nominal value. Hence the first proviso to S. 1 (e) of the Act is ultra vires as contravening Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution. The compensation therefore is to be fixed on the principles laid down under S. 23, Land Acquisition Act of 1894, that is to say, according to the market value of the acquired land on the date of acquisition. ●——Art. 31—'Property', meaning of.

The mills, machineries, stock, etc., of the respondent company are 'property' within the meaning of Arts. 19 and 31. A contract or agreement which a person may have with the company and which may be cancelled by the directors in exercise of powers under the Sholapur Spinning and Weaving Company (Emergency Provisions) Ordinance (2 of 1950) will undoubtedly be 'property' within the meaning of the two Articles.

The rights of the shareholders, e. g., the right of voting, the right to elect directors and the right to apply for the winding up of the company are no doubt valuable rights but it is doubtful if any of these rights can be called 'property' within the meaning of Art. 31 (2) for, by itself and apart from the shares, none of them can be acquired or disposed.

Property includes 'any interest' in 'any commercial or industrial undertaking'. It also includes any interest in 'any company owning' any interest in any commercial or industrial undertaking.

The word 'property' used in the Article must be construed in the widest sense as connoting a bundle of rights exercisable by the owner in respect thereof and embracing within its purview both corporeal and incorporeal rights. The word 'property' is not defined in the Constitution and there is no good reason to restrict its meaning. Dwarkadas Shrinivas v. The word 'property' occurring in Art. 31 is not confined to immovable property, and the elements of hereditability and enjoyment of the benefit without any rendition of services are sufficient insignia of property to invest the cash grants with the characteristic of property as used in that Article. ● ——Arts. 31 (2) and 19 (1) (f)—Right to enjoy land held free of land revenue whether is 'property'.

Per Ram Labhaya and Deka, JJ. — Enjoyment of a landed property without paying land revenue does not amount to a property in the eye of law.

Per Sarjoo Prosad, C. J. (Contra): — The word property as used in Arts. 19 (1) (f) and 31 (2) of the Constitution includes generally speaking, the interest to hold land free from payment of revenue. The fact that by virtue of the transfers the petitioner's ancestors acquired a right to hold the estates free from payment of the Government revenue for ever constitutes an important attribute of ownership and is a property right. ● ——Art. 31 (2)—Incidents of ownership — Applicability of Art. 31 (2).

Per Ram Labhaya, J. — The right of ownership is essentially heritable. It survives its owner for the time being. It is not extinguished by death. It follows that the right of ownership in a material thing should be general, permanent, heritable and transferable. The owner should have the right to conceivable uses of it. The rights in land or property, namely, incorporeal rights, should possess all the attributes of property before they can attract the application of Art. 31 (2). They have to be capable of possession or acquisition, otherwise Art. 31 (2) cannot apply. The right in property to which Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution or S. 299, Government of India Act, 1935, may be applied should possess all the attributes of proprietary rights in corporeal property. The rusums mentioned in the schedule to the Hyderabad Act were Crown Grants, and they were subject to resumption at the pleasure of the Crown. If the Crown prerogatives disappeared with the introduction of the Constitution the right to resume the cash grants disappeared with them. The earlier rule which governed the resumption of the grants and which was closely associated with the personal prerogative of the Nizam is no longer available to the State and as the 'rusums' constitute 'property' within the meaning of Art. 31 of the Constitution their resumption by the State must be held to be unwarranted. A I R 1954 S C 447, Foll. ILR (1955) Hyd 269 : AIR 1955 Hyd 44 (46, 47) (Pt A) (Prs 8, 9) (DB).

The word 'property' occurring in Art. 31 is not confined to immovable property and resumption of land as well as cash grants without compensation would be equally hit by it. Expropriation of properties of all kinds has under the Constitution been made subject to the payment of compensation and it is immaterial whether the property is movable or immovable. The mere disability to get redress from a Court of Law would not by itself justify excluding cash grants from the ambit of 'property'. The elements of hereditability and enjoyment of the benefit without any rendition of services is sufficient insignia of property to invest the cash grants with the characteristics of 'property' as used in Art. 31. The fact that the impugned Act was passed in exercise of powers under Item 42 of List 2 of the Seventh Schedule is immaterial as the legislative competency under Item 42 is of course subject to guarantee contained in Part 3 of the Constitution and the deprivation of property must, therefore, be subject to the payment of compensation under Art. 31. Case-law discussed. I L R (1955) Hyd 269 : A I R 1955 Hyd 44 (46, 47, 48) (Pt B) (Prs 9, 10, 13, 14, 15) (DB).

The Jagirdars of the Hyderabad State had during their lives rights of managing their estates, enjoying the incomes from the revenue, cess and excise duties arising therefrom and other important privileges which conferred considerable monetary benefits on them. Had it not been for the fact that the impugned provisions of the two Regulations were passed prior to the inauguration of the Constitution it is clear that these rights would have been covered by the word 'property' in Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution. ● ——Arts. 31, 19 and 223— "Property" —Payments made to irregular forces (Shiledars etc.) by Scindias, are not property —Nature of payment —Government of Madhya Bharat can stop these payments — No infringement of fundamental right —No writ can issue —(Interpretation of Statutes - Orders having force of law and merely administrative orders — Distinction) (Civil P. C. (1908), Preamble).

Held, after considering the scheme of the Shiledari Service (Irregular forces of the Scindia State), and the Orders of the Maharaja of Scindia, namely "Kalambandi Intijam Mahaleme Irregular Behede Shiledari, Smt. 1969 (1912 A. D.) and the subsequent similar Kalambandi of Smt. 1991 (1934 A. D.) issued by the last ruler, and the Notification, dated 31 3-1929 issued by Army Head Quarters, in pursuance of the resolution by the Council of Regency, that the payments made to the Shiledars were made for service only and they were no hereditary grants as such. The mere hereditary character exhibited in the enlistment of the new cadets could not mean that it was property belonging to the particular Shiledar of Ekkan. Provision for payment of the maintenance allowance to widow or minor children of the deceased Shiledar did not necessarily mean that there was any proprietary interest in the deceased Shiledar as regards the payments which he used to receive. This could only be regarded as compassionate allowance. Consequently the payments made to these Shiledars did not constitute property belonging to them whether the same be, as Bachat holders, head quarters Shiledars or Ekkans. The provisions in the two kalambandi were in the nature of reorganization schemes of administrative nature and did not involve conferment of or recognition of a statutory right. These payments could not also be classed as hereditary grants burdened with services. The stoppage of these payments or some of them by the executive order did not involve infringement of their fundamental right and the Head Quarters Shiledars, the Shiledars and Ekkans were not entitled to seek redress through any of the writs provided for by Art. 226 of the Constitution.

Per Dixit, J.: One test which may usefully be adopted to differentiate between orders and rules made by a Ruler of a State in his capacity as the supreme executive authority from those made in his capacity as the supreme legislative authority is to see whether the order or rule was enforceable in a Court of law by the person or persons affected thereby and whether the construction or interpretation of the rule or order was a matter for the Court or for the administrative or executive authorities. If the rule is not enforceable in a Court of law and if its construction is a matter for the administrative authority and not for the Court, then clearly the rule cannot be called a statute or a rule having the force of a statute.

The Kalambandi of 1991 was not a statute according to the law-making machinery or custom of Gwalior State and according to the forms and solemnities required in that State for authorisation of a Statute. There is nothing in the Kalambandi to lend any colour to the suggestion that the Kalambandi conferred on Shiledars or their heirs a right enforceable in a Court of law, with regard to their appointment or their conditions of Shiledari service. ——Art. 31—Manipur State Hill Peoples Regulation (1947), Sections 60 to 64—Validity.

Sections 60 to 64 of the Manipur State Hill Peoples Regulation, 1947, indicate that ownership of land and right to cultivation are recognized in the Hill villages of the Union territory of Manipur. This ownership in land has been recognized by the Government. This is true in respect of land in the Lambui village in the Ukhrul sub-division of Manipur. Hence the Government cannot claim that the villagers are in possession of the land only during the pleasure of the Government. Such rights in land amount to "property" within the meaning of Art. 31 of the Constitution and the Government cannot deprive the villagers of their rights in the property in question save by authority of law.

If the Government desires to take over the land for a public purpose, namely, the construction of a motorable road, such taking over of land admittedly in the possession of the villagers has to be treated as compulsory acquisition. It follows that except by following the procedure laid down in the Land Acquisition Act, the Government have no authority to deprive the villagers of their land by making an ex-gratia payment. ——Art. 31 (1)—Mysore Villge Offices Abolition Act (14 of 1961), S. 2 (1) (n) — Act does not contravene Constitution of India—Abolition of village offices, is within competence of State Legislature. The abolished village offices are not 'property' and no fundamental right to hold them is claimable under Art. 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution. So, the Act does not also invade any fundamental right created by Art. 31 (1) and (2) of the Constitution. See Mysore Village Offices Abolition Act (14 of 1961), S. 2 (1) (n). AIR 1964 Mys 84 (DB).

——Art. 31 — Reading cls. 22 and 23 (1) of the Land Tenure Order together, it is apparent that the right intended to be conferred was not an unqualified one but a qualified one. ——Art. 31 (2) — 'Property' — Life membership of the Senate of a University is not 'property' within the Article — Amendment of S. 17 (ii) of Bihar Act 14 of 1960 by S. 12 (ii) of Bihar Act 2 of 1962 is not unconstitutional and invalid.

The Office of Life membership of the Senate of a University does not come within the conception of 'property' under Art. 31. Though the said office carries with it certain powers and duties and superintendence over the affairs of the University, there is no blending of any right of property with the office of life membership of the Senate. The property of the University is vested in the University which is a corporate body though the members of the Senate have the entire management and superintendence over it. But the mere right of management of the affairs cannot be said to be 'property' within Art. 31 (2). Consequently the amendment made by Sec. 12 (ii) of the Bihar Act (2 of 1962) to S. 17 (ii) of the Bihar Act (14 of 1962) is not ultra vires and unconstitutional. Held, on facts that (i) there had been a very serious interference with and grave violation of a right which must, in the context, be regarded as a property right within the meaning of Art. 31.

The grant of a pension to the petitioner for life was given in accordance with rules and must be regarded as something to which the petitioner had a right. Such a right constituted 'property' within the meaning of Art. 31, which, according to the army instructions as stood before 28-7-1948, could not even be modified. The revised Army Instruction of 1950 did not apply to the case. There could, therefore, be no escape from the conclusion that the petitioner had been deprived of his fundamental right under Art. 31 in the most arbitrary manner and the petitioner became entitled to the protection of the right, under Art. 226. ● ——Arts. 31, 19 (1), 14 and 226:— Notifications by Rajasthan State withdrawing privileges granted by Ruler of Udaipur to Zamindars, to manufacture liquor for private consumption — Privilege held not right to property—No infringement of fundamental right — Cash grants made by ruler for taking away Zamindar's right to manufacture liquor for general consumption — Question, whether cessation of grant amounts to deprivation of property, not possible to decide in writ application—Remedy of suit available — Fact that suit would be tried in High Court is immaterial — Suit would not be barred by S. 73 (2) of Rajasthan Excise Act — (Constitution of India, Art. 229 — Other remedy) [Rajasthan Excise Act (2 of 1950), Ss. 16 (1) (g), 16 (2) and 73 (2)].

The Ruler of former Udaipur had allowed the petitioners who were the Jagirdars in the State of Udaipur, before its integration in Rajasthan, to manufacture liquor for private and domestic consumption. They were also granted certain monetary compensations in lieu of the privileges they had enjoyed from time immemorial in respect of manufacturing liquor for general consumption and sale, which privileges were withdrawn by the Ruler. Both amenities were granted under the executive orders. These privileges were granted only to the petitioners-jagirdars and not to all the jagirdars. These privileges rested on the pleasure of the Ruler and could be withdrawn at any time. The so-called right, was not an incidence which could be considered to form part and parcel of the jagirdari tenure held and enjoyed by the petitioners. When the State was integrated into the present Rajasthan State, the Government of Rajasthan by executive notifications withdrew the privileges. It was contended on behalf of the petitioners that in so far as the Rajasthan Excise Act by S. 16 (1) (g) and (2) deprived the petitioners of their right to continue to distil liquor for their private or domestic consumption and of their cash grants it infringed a right of property of the petitioners and, therefore, fell within the mischief of Art. 31 of the Constitution and was therefore void and inoperative :

Held, (i) that the so called right of private distillation was not a right at all in any strict or legal sense of the term but a privilege enjoyed during the good pleasure of the Ruler. In this view, it was not necessary to consider in any great detail the further question whether it was a right of property.

(ii) So far as the property from which liquor might be distilled was concerned, there had been no taking away of it from the petitioners. It was only the purpose of distillation to which these articles might be put which had been taken away. This purpose or privilege of distillation, was by itself not property within the meaning of Art. 31 of the Constitution. Even if it were conceded that such a right flowed from or was appurtenant to the holding of their jagirs by the petitioners which, it was not, such a right would still be not a proprietary right but a personal right. In other words, it was a matter which pertained more to the status of the parties as jagirdars than to their property as such.

(iii) The so-called right to distil liquor in so far as it might have any money value as claimed by the petitioners was based upon the indirect immunity from taxation and could not be countenanced at all, as such an immunity could not be claimed in law and would be hit by Art. 14 of the Constitution and come into conflict with the principle of equality and equal protection enshrined in that article.

(iv) The privilege of private distillation allowed to the petitioners under the order of the Ruler of Udaipur was not a licence granted to the petitioners within the meaning of S. 16 of the Rajasthan Excise Act, or such as would be preserved under the saving S. 2 of that Act. The scheme of the Act did not and, could not contemplate the grant of any permanent licences such as were claimed by the petitioners to have been granted to them by the Maharana of Udaipur. The privilege of private distillation of liquor or even the possession of any materials for the purposes of manufacturing liquor by the petitioners was directly hit by S. 16 of the Rajasthan Excise Act and could not be exercised or enjoyed after the commencement of the Act.

(v) The cases of those jagirdars who were granted the privilege of not only manufacturing liquor for private and domestic consumption but also for general sale, did not stand on higher footing and could not be differentiated from the cases of those jagirdars who were granted the privilege of manufacturing liquor for domestic and private consumption only. The circumstance that these jagirdars made some money out of the exercise of such private distillation would not be sufficient to raise the privilege of private distillation in their case to the status of a right of property. In these circumstances it could not be said that the Act was illegal or inoperative in so far as it took away the income of these petitioners or of those who enjoyed a like immunity.

On the question of the deprivation of the petitioners' cash grants, which were enjoyed by the petitioners but which were discontinued by the Rajasthan State :

Held, that the question was beset with various considerations and that the arguments of the parties did not enable the Court to any definite findings on the question whether it constituted infringement of fundamental right or whether it was right to property and that in view of the fact that the petitioners had an alternative remedy by way of a suit which was in the circumstances of the case, equally convenient, beneficial and efficacious, it was not proper to give any finding on the arguments. A I R 1952 S C 12, Rel. on.

Held, further that in view of the fact that order of the Government withdrawing the cash allowances was not passed in pursuance of the Rajasthan Excise Act but was an administrative order superseding a similar previous order, S. 73 (2) could not and ought not to operate as a bar to any suit which might be brought by the petitioners in this regard. 15. Clause (3).

● ——Arts. 31 (3) and 200 — Law passed by State Legislature—Assent of both Governor and President, necessity of.

Article 200 does not contemplate the Governor giving his assent and thereafter, when the bill has become full-fledged law, reserving it for the consideration of the President. Indeed, the Governor is prohibited from giving his assent where such reservation by him is made compulsory. The constitution would thus seem to contemplate only "bills" passed by the House or Houses of Legislature being reserved for the consideration of the President and not "laws" to which the Governor has already given his assent. Article 31 (3) must therefore be understood as having reference to what in historical sequence, having been passed by the House or Houses of the State Legislature and reserved by the Governor for the consideration of the President and assented to by the latter, has thus become a law. It is not intended that such a law should have the assent of both the Governor and the President. State of Bihar v. (Per Mahajan J.) :— It cannot be said that the President cannot perform both the duties entrusted to him by Articles 200 and 31 (3) and (4) at one and the same time. He is not disabled under the Constitution from applying his mind to a Bill once and for all and to see whether it has to be passed into law and whether it fulfils the requirements of Art. 31 (2). —— Arts. 31 (2) and (3) and 200, Proviso—Scope of —Hyderabad Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (21 of 1950)—Validity.

Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution imposes certain restrictions on the exercise of the power of eminent domain. That Article does not confer this power on the Government but it contains some safeguards in regard to the exercise of that power.

Art. 31 (3) of the Constitution describes the mode in which the law that is to govern the acquisition or requisition of a property is to be made. The language of Art. 31, Cl. (3) makes it abundantly clear that where a Bill is required to be reserved for the consideration of the President the Bill will not become an Act unless the President declares his assent to it. This clause does not enact a restriction similar to the one under Art. 31 (2). Art. 31 (2) lays down the two conditions which have to be satisfied before the power of eminent domain could be exercised. The purpose of clause (3) is not to impose another limitation upon that power but is only to prescribe the procedure for promulgating the laws. The Bill becomes an Act if it receives assent of the President.

Article 31 (3) of the Constitution is on a par with the Proviso to Art. 200. What follows from Art. 200 is that the Governor can either assent to or withhold his assent in cases which need not be reserved for the consideration of the President. Article 200 equally governs the procedure laid down by Art. 31 (3). Therefore, the failure to conform to the procedure envisaged by Art. 31 (3) has the same results as those that follow from the violation of Proviso to Art. 200.

Cl. (3) of Art. 31 is not a limitation on the power of the State to acquire or requisition the property within the purview of Art. 31 (2). If the procedure indicated in Art. 31 (3) is not adopted, no part of the Bill becomes law because it becomes effective only after it receives the assent of the President.

Held on facts.—It is not disputed that the provisions of Chapter VI of the Hyderabad Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, which deal with the management or acquisition of uncultivated, improperly cultivated or surplus lands, beginning with S. 51, bring the Act within the range of Art. 31 of the Constitution, because that Chapter makes a provision for acquisition and requisition of lands. It is also conceded that there are other provisions in the Act which bear on the acquisition and requisition of land. Therefore, the Act not having been reserved for the consideration of the President and assented to by him, is inoperative. S. 38-E which was assented to by the President cannot live apart from the rest of the Act. If the rest of the Act is dead, this section can have no independent life because this is bound up with the other provisions of the Act. The scheme of the Act is spread over the whole of it and S. 38-E which is a part of the scheme, cannot stand by itself. The Hyderabad Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act is ineffective and inoperative and the proceedings initiated under this enactment are null and void. AIR 1954 Trav-Co 145, dissented from. ——Art. 31 (3) — Jadavpur University Act—If ultra vires — (Jadhavpur University Act (33 of 1955), S. 12).

The Jadavpur University Act is not bad under Art. 31 (3) of the Constitution for not having received the assent of the President because sub-Art. (3) of Art. 31 only applies to such law as is referred to in Cl. (2) of Art. 31, namely, of compulsory acquisition or requisition of property which is not the case here within the meaning of the amended Art. 31 (2 A) of the Constitution. 63 Cal W N 914 : ILR (1960) 2 Cal 311 : AIR 1960 Cal 120 (122) (Pt B) (Pr 7).

——Art. 31 (3)—President's assent obtained— Effect on powers of — Court to consider if Act offends Constitution.

The fact that an Act had been reserved for the consideration of the President and had received his assent under Art. 31 (3) of the Constitution does not preclude the Court from considering whether the Act offends against any of the provisions of the Constitution. Unless the President gives his assent no part of the law can take effect at all. But a subsequent scrutiny before the courts to determine whether any particular provision or set of provisions offends against any particular Article of the Constitution is not barred. 1959 Mad W N 387 : 72 Mad L W 434 : I L R (1959) Mad 770 : (1959) 2 Mad L J 402 : AIR 1959 Mad 548 (553) (Pt A) (Pr 33) (DB).

——Arts. 31 (3) and 31-A — Assent of President— 'Law', meaning of.

The expression 'law' is used in cl. (3) of Art. 31 and in Art. 31-A, somewhat loosely to include even a Bill which has not yet become law by being assented to by the President or Governor, as the case may be. It does not mean a Bill that has been first assented to by the Governor and thus made into a law, before being reserved for the consideration of the President. AIR 1952 S C 252, Foll. The only provision empowering the President to assent to a Bill passed by a State Legislature is contained in Art. 201 of the Constitution. There can be no question of the President assenting to a piece of State legislation which has previously been assented to by the Governor or himself. Clauses (3) and (4) of Art. 31 and the Proviso to Art. 31-A deal with the consequences flowing from the President's giving his assent to a Bill passed by a State Legislature relating to acquisition of estates. But these clauses do not by themselves empower the President to give his assent to any Bill. Consequently, there can be no further scrutiny of the assent, already given by the President, to a Bill relating to such acquisition with a view to find out whether such assent was given either under cl. (3) or clause (4) of Art. 31 or under the Proviso to Art. 31-A. AIR 1952 S C 252, Foll. ILR (1957) Cut 1 : A I R 1957 Orissa 96 (98, 99) (Pt C) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Art. 31 (3) — Land Acquisition (Bihar Amendment) Act (Bihar Act 21 of 1956), S. 4 — Amendment of S. 35 of Land Acquisition Act — Act not reserved for consideration of President—His assent not received —Amendment of S 35 has no legal effect. See Land Acquisition (Bihar Amendment) Act (Bihar Act 21 of 1956), S. 4. A I R 1959 Pat 488.

——Art. 31 (3)—Patiala Land Acquisition Act (4 of 2006 Smt.) — Act not reserved for consideration of President — Acquisitions made under Act — Acquisitions however validated by S. 4 of Pepsu Reclamation Act (5 of 1953). See Patiala Land Acquisition Act (4 of 2006 Smt.). A I R 1955 N U C (Pepsu) 1873.

——Art. 31 (3) — Pepsu Land Acquisition Act (4 of 2006 Bk.)—Validity — (Interpretation of Statutes—Repeal)—(General Clauses Act (1897), S. 6) — (Civil P. C. (1908), Preamble).

The words 'such law' in Art. 31 (3) refer to the law relating to acquisition and requisition as referred to in sub-Art. (2) of Art. 31. The Pepsu Land Acquisition Act, 2006 Bk., was a law falling within the scope of sub-Art. (2) It not having been reserved for the consideration of the President and thus not having received his assent was ineffective and inoperative law. That being so, it follows that it also failed to repeal the previous Act, namely, the Patiala Land Acquisition Act, 1995 Bk., but there is no doubt that apparently the repealing section in Act No. 4 of 2006 Bk. was not law relating to acquisition or requisition of property and would not fall within the ambit of Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution. But in the present case the intention of the Legislature was clear from consideration of S. 2 of Act No. 4 of 2006 Bk., that the intention of the Legislature could not have been to repeal the former statute, except upon the supposition that the subsequent statute would take the place of the former, and so the repealing clause in the subsequent statute fell within unconstitutional statute to which it was attached. Therefore, the repealing section in Act No. 4 of 2006 Bk. would also be ineffective and inoperative as that Act itself. The consequence was that the Patiala Land Acquisition Act, 1995 Bk., still held the field. Thus before the Pepsu Land Acquisition Act, 1953, the Patiala Land Acquisition Act, 1995 Bk., held the field. I L R (1954) Patiala 507 : A I R 1954 Pepsu 174 (177, 178) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

● ——Arts. 31 (3) and 31-A (1)—Law — Meaning of —Does not mean Act passed by Legislature.

Article 31 (3) and the proviso to Art. 31-A (1) speak of the law being reserved for the assent of the President and not of the bill or the Act. The word 'law' is used in the context as meaning the measure which later becomes the Act. It is not used in the sense of a law passed by the Legislature. There would be no sense in the Rajpramukh or the Governor assenting to a bill and then reserving it for the assent of the President. Amar Singh v. ● ——Art. 31 (3)—'Legislature of a State'.

The term 'Legislature of a State' in Art. 31 (3) does not include within its meaning the Government of a State or some other authority while making rules, regulations or orders under authority given to it under a Central Act of the Parliament. The meaning of the words 'the State' in Art. 12 has no bearing on the meaning of the words Legislature of a State' appearing in Art. 31(3). ● ——Art. 31 (4) and Sch 7, List 3, Entry 42 — Public purpose—Justiciability of.

The existence of a public purpose behind the acquisition of the items of property mentioned in any Zamindari Abolition Act is not a justiciable issue in case of an enactment which having fulfilled the requirements of Cl (4) of Art. 31 of the Constitution enjoys the protection afforded by it. ● ——Art. 31 — Bengal Land Revenue Sales (West Bengal Amendment) Act (7 of 1950)—Validity.

It does not appear that the Bill which eventually became the Act was reserved for the consideration of the President or received his assent. Therefore, the impugned law cannot claim the protection of Art. 31 (4) and what is more, if it is such a law as is referred to in clause (2) of Art. 31, then, by virtue of clause (3), it cannot have any effect at all. State of West Bengal v. Subodh Gopal Bose, (1954) 1 Mad L J 314 : 1954 S C A 65 : 1954 S C R 587 : 67 Mad L W 206 : 1954 S C J 127 : A I R 1954 S C 92 (105) (Pt H) (Pr 38).

● ——Art. 31 (4)—Scope.

It is the law to which the assent of the President is given that is protected from any attack on the ground of non-compliance with the provisions of Cl. (2) of Art. 31. There is no warrant for assumption that the Bill has got to be passed in its original shape without any change whatsoever, before the provision of Cl. (4) of Art. 31, could be attracted. The expression 'passed by such Legislature" must mean "passed with or without amendments" in accordance with the normal procedure contemplated by Art. 107 of the Constitution. Gajapati Narayan Deo v. ● ——Arts. 31 (4) and 31-A — Scope of Art. 31 (4) compared with scope of Art. 31-A.

(Per Patanjali Sastri, C. J.): — The scope of Art. 31 (4) is at once narrower and wider than that of Art. 31-A ; the former has application only to statutes which were pending in the Legislature at the commencement of the Constitution, whereas the latter is subject to no such restriction. Again Art. 31 (4) excludes attack only on the ground of contravention of Art. 31 (2), while Art. 31-A bars objections based on contravention of other provisions of Part III as well, such as Arts. 14 and 19. This indeed was the reason for the enactment of Arts. 31-A and 31-B, as the words of exclusion in Art. 31 (4) were found inapt to cover objections based on contravention of Art. 14. On the other hand, the law referred to in Art. 31 (4) covers acquisition of any kind of property, while Art. 31-A relates only to the acquisition of a particular kind of property, viz., estates and rights therein, and, what is more important, the 'non obstante' clause in Art. 31 (4) overrides all other provisions in the Constitution including the Lists of the Seventh Schedule, whereas a law which falls within the purview of Art. 31-A could only prevail over "the foregoing provisions of this Part." ● ——Art. 31 (4) — Bill in process of transmission from one House to the other—Bill if pending.

After a Bill has been amended and passed by the Legislative Council it has necessarily to go again before the Legislative Assembly and must therefore, be a Bill "pending in a Legislature of a State." within the ambit of Art. 31 Cl (4). ● ——Art. 31 (4)—Scope.

A law is valid and enforceable unless and until it can be shown to be contrary to some provision of the Constitution. If the Constitution says that a certain law shall not be challenged on a particular ground, the result is that the Act cannot be challenged on that ground and has to be treated as valid and enforceable. ● ——Art. 31 (4)—"Law so assented to"—Meaning.

No doubt "law" ordinarily means a valid law, as an invalid law is a contradiction in terms. But this is not the sense in which the word is used in cl. (4). The phrase "the law so assented to" in cl. (4) of Art. 31 has reference to Bills pending at the commencement of the Constitution in the legislature of a State and which, after having been passed by the Legislature, have been reserved for the consent of the President. Raja Surya Palsingh v. U. P. Government, 1951 All L J 365 : 1951 R D (HC) 122 : 1951 All W R (HC) 317 : ILR (1952) 2 All 46 : AIR 1951 All 674 (680) (Pt I) (Pr 24) (FB).

● ——Art. 31 (4) and U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act (1 of 1951). S. 27—Inadequacy of compensation—If open to challenge — Provision for compensation—If a fraud on the Constitution.

In view of the provisions of Cl. (4) of Art. 31, it is clear that inadequacy of the compensation is not a matter which it is open to challenge and there is no other ground from which the Court can infer that the provisions of the U. P. Act 1 of 1951, with regard to compensation constitute a fraud on the Constitution. Suryapal Singh v. ● ——Art. 31 (4)—'Pending before the Legislature —Meaning—Includes Bill before the Governor.

There does not seem to be any justification for reading in Art. 31 (4) that the Bill must be in the House or Houses of the Legislature and should not have reached the Governor. If it was in the hands of the Governor who was an integral part of the Legislature, it would still be deemed to be in the Legislature of a State. It is only after the Governor has dealt with it finally under Art. 200 that it may be said to have gone out of the hands of the Legislature of the State. Raja Bhairabendra Narayan Bhup v. The State of Assam, ILR (1956) 8 Assam 379 (FB).

● ——Art. 31 (4)—"Bill"—Meaning of.

The requirement of the clause is that a Bill must be pending on the date of the commencement of the Constitution and not that the Act ultimately passed must in every respect follow the Bill. It cannot be held that if a Bill as originally introduced in a Legislative Assembly, is during its passage through the house, so materially altered as to become unrecognisable as the same Bill, the resulting Act can be impugned on this ground Misc. ● ——Art. 31 (4)—Extent of protection.

(Per Dixit J.) — It would appear from the words "Notwithstanding anything in this Constitution" which occur in cl. (4) that it is not permissible to object to an Act on the ground that the compensation fixed or to be determined is no compensation in law as being contrary to other provision of the Constitution. The protection given by the cl. (4) is not confined to one ground only, namely, the ground arising out of the provisions of cl. 2 of Art. 31 AIR 1951 All 674 (FB) and Misc. ——Art. 31 (4) — Protection of Bill.

The protection of Art. 31 (4) is not limited only to the Bill as it stood; that Article is not to be construed so as to exclude any normal amendments which a Bill will ordinarily undergo in the course of its passage through the Legislature. It may be different if in the course of that passage the structure of the Bill itself in any of its essential features has been totally altered. ILR (1953) Cut 71 : AIR 1953 Orissa 185 (201) (Pt M) (Pr 30) (DB).

● ——Art. 31 (4) — "Reserved for the consideration of the President"—Object of reservation of bill.

Per Shearer J. — The reservation of Bills for the assent of a higher authority is not a mere matter of procedure. It is an essential and important part of the law-making machinery set up by the Constitution. When bill is reserved for the consideration of the President it is the duty of the Law Officers to examine it with a view to ascertaining whether in the first place it is unconstitutional in whole or in part and secondly, whether if assent is given to the bill the differences between the law obtaining in the State to which the bill applies and the law obtaining in other provinces will be merely differences in point of detail rather than in principle. Maharajadhiraj Kameshwar Singh v State of Bihar, ILR 30 Pat 454 : AIR 1951 Pat 91 (100, 101) (Pt K) (Pr 14) (SB).

● ——Art. 31 (4) — Assent of President to reserved bill—Propriety of, if can be questioned.

Per Shearer J — The broad principles on which assent is intended to be given to or withheld from a reserved bill are not specifically laid down in the Constitution. The result of this is that it is not open to the Courts to question the propriety of the President's action. (Shearer, Reuben and Dass JJ.) Maharajadhiraj Kameshwar Singh v. State of Bihar, ILR 30 Pat 454 : AIR 1951 Pat 91 (101) (Pt L) (Pr 15) (SB).

● ——Art. 31 (4)—Construction of.

Per Das J.—Clause (4) of Art. 31 seeks to cut down a fundamental right and must be construed strictly. The words "notwithstanding anything in this Constitution" occurring in that Clause cannot have the effect of enlarging the operative portion of the clause which, in clear terms, mentions one and one ground only, namely the ground arising out of the contravention of the provisions of Cl. (2), Art. 31. Kameshwar Singh v. State of Bihar, I L R 30 Pat 454 : AIR 1951 Pat 91 (127) (Pt M) (Pr 107) (SB).

● ——Art. 31 (4) — "Bill pending at the commencement"—Identity between Bill and Act.

Per Reuben J. — Clause (4), Art. 31 does not require that the Act as passed by State Legislature must be identical in every detail with the Bill that was pending at the commencement of the Constitution. There may be alterations during the passage of the Bill; but these alterations should not be such as to make the Act distinguishable from the bill which was pending. Kameshwar Singh v. State of Bihar, I L R 30 Pat 454 : AIR 1951 Pat 91 (103, 104) (Pt N) (Pr 22) (SB).

● ——Art. 31 (4)—"Law" meaning of.

Per Reuben J. — The word "Law" in Art. 31 (4) seems to have been used as a compendious way of describing legislation which has passed through the Legislature of a State and has not yet received assent. The protection given by Art. 31 (4) assumes that the "law" is open to attack and therefore is not law in the strict sense.

Per Das J. — The word 'law' in Art. 31 does not appear to have been used exactly in the same sense in all the clauses; the context makes that quite clear. In Cl. (1), Art. 31, the expression 'law' means a valid law. Kameshwar Singh v. State of Bihar, I L R 30 Pat 454 : AIR 1951 Pat 91 (106, 123) (Pt O) (Prs 34, 97) (SB).

17. Clause (5).

● ——Arts. 31 (5) (a), 31 (6), 31-A (1) (a), 366 (10) — Land Acquisition (Bombay Amendment) Act (4 of 1948), S. 3 — Existing law—Meaning of — Does not include an Act void at its inception — Bombay Act 4 of 1948 held not saved by Art. 31 (5) (a) or by Art. 31-A (1) (a)

Before Cl. (5) of Art. 31 can be invoked there must be an existing law. To have the status of an existing law, the law should have been made by a Legislature having power to make such law. The Bombay Act 4 of 1948 was still born and was void at the inception. Therefore, it was not an existing law within the meaning of Art. 31 (5) of the Constitution. Further, a comparison of the provisions of Cls. (5) and (6) shows that in the latter the non-compliance of the provisions of S. 299 of the Government of India Act, 1935, was expressly saved, if the conditions laid down therein were satisfied, while in the former no such express protection was given and therefore no resuscitation of a dead law was possible thereunder. It must therefore be held that Art. 31 (5) (a) of the Constitution does not save the Bombay Amending Act of 1948.

If a particular statute attracts Art. 31-A (1) (a), it cannot be invalidated on the ground that it does not comply with the provisions of Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution, namely that the Act has not fixed the amount of compensation. But Art. 31-A cannot have any bearing in the context of an Act which had no legal existence at the time the Constitution came into force. It does not purport to revive laws which were void at the time they were made. The analogy drawn between a fundamental right under Art. 31 (2) and the conditions laid down in S. 299 of the Government of India Act, 1935, if it has any justification, is irrelevant in the context of a pre-Constitution void law like Bombay Amendment Act of 1948. ● ——Art. 31 (2) and (5)—Scope.

Per Mahajan J. — The argument that the saving Cl. (5) in Art 31 has been inserted in the article by way of abundant caution cannot be accepted.

The saving Cl. (5) comprehensively includes within the ambit all the powers of the State in exercise of which it could deprive a person of property without payment of compensation. All forms of deprivation of property by the State without payment of compensation have been included within the ambit of the exception clause, while other forms of deprivation which are outside the ambit of the exception clause are inevitably within the mischief of Cl. (2) of the Article. The Constitution while defining and delimiting fundamental rights would not introduce in the articles dealing with those rights some matter merely by way of abundant caution. It was essential while delimiting and defining fundamental rights to fully define the field of the right and to say what was not included within that right. The Article read as a whole comprehensively defines the State's power of eminent domain as distinguished from all its other powers the exercise of which may amount to the taking of private property The argument that exceptions in Cl (5) were incorporated in Art. 31 by way of abundant caution further stands negatived by the contents of sub-cl. Town Improvement Act (8 of 1919), Ss. 36 and 42 — Improvement scheme not providing for compensation to tenants of houses sought to be acquired — Validity of scheme and proceedings under Land Acquisition Act (1894) cannot be challenged under Art. 31 - Both Acts being pre-constitutional are protected from operation of Art. 31 (2) by Art. 31 (5) (a) — Land Acquisition Act (1894), S. 11. AIR 1965 All 356 (364) (Pt G) (Pr 25).

——Art. 31 (2) and (5)—Existing law—Land Acquisition Act—If hit by Art. 31 (2)—Art. 366 (10)—Scope —(Land Acquisition Act (1894) S. 1).

The Land Acquisition Act is an existing law within the meaning of Art. 366, sub-clause (10). It is therefore saved by the provisions of Art. 31 of the Constitution and even if it does provide for the acquisition for non-public purposes or does not provide for payment of compensation it is not hit by the provisions of Art. 31 (2). AIR 1958 All 126 (131) (Pt D) (Pr 11).

——Art. 31 (2) and (5)—Relative scope of.

The inhibition on the power of the legislature is contained in Art. 31 (2) and if Art. 31 (2) does not affect the legislation covered by Art. 31 (5) it cannot be contended that it is affected by the provisions of legislative list. Moreover the validity of the Act passed prior to the Constitution cannot be tested with regard to the legislative list under the Constitution. AIR 1958 All 126 (131) (Pt E) (Pr 11).

——Arts. 31 (2), (5) (a) and (6) and 366 (10)—Scope—'Existing law' in Art. 31 (5) (a), meaning of.

Article 31 (2) lays down the broad principle that no property can be taken possession of or acquired by the State unless it be for a public purpose and under a law which makes provision for compensation, but this general rule is subject inter alia to the provisions of Cls. (5) (a) and (6). The effect of these provisions is that Art. 31 (2) has no application to a law made more than 18 months before the Constitution, provided it is an existing law, whereas a law enacted within that period, provided it is certified by the President, cannot be called in question if either (i) it contravenes the provisions of Art. 31 (2) or (ii) it has contravened the provisions of S. 299 (2) of the 1935 Act. Clause (6) therefore embraces two categories of law, namely, certain laws which upon being certified by the President cannot be challenged on the ground that they contravene the provisions of Art. 31 (2), and also certain other laws which upon certification cannot be challenged on the ground that they contravene the provisions of S. 299 (2). There is nothing in Cl. (6) to show that both categories must be 'existing law'. The phrase used in Cl. (5) (a) — 'existing law other than a law to which the provisions of Cl. (6) apply' does not mean that the law to which Cl. (6) applies must be existing law. The phrase should, and can, without any straining of the language be construed to mean any of those laws for which provision is made in Cl. (6) which come into the category of existing laws. There is, therefore, no reason to hold that the context requires a special meaning to be given to the expression 'existing law' as used in Art. 31 (5) (a). That expression must be given the meaning assigned to it in Art. 366 (10). 1954 All L J 673 : A I R 1955 All 12 (16) (Pt B) (Prs 8, 9) (DB).

——Art. 31 (2) and (5)—Land Acquisition Act (1894), S. 6 (3)— Validity — Act saved by cl. (5) from Art. 31 (2), Constitution of India — It is an existing law as defined in Art. 363. See Land Acquisition Act (1894), S. 6. AIR 1953 All 182.

——Art. 31 (2) and (5) — Scope — Powers of State Legislature.

Article 31 (2) gives only certain rights to the citizens and those rights are subject to Art. 31 (5). The effect of a combined reading of these two is that the rights guaranteed to a citizen under Art. 31 (2) are subject to the provisions of any 'existing law' governing the acquisition and payment of compensation therefor. There is no scope for putting the interpretation that Art. 31 (5) disables the State legislature to enact laws inconsistent with the 'existing law' as defined in Art. 366 (10). The State legislature can make its own laws providing for payment of compensation. All that Art. 31 contemplates is that there should be no compulsory acquisition unless it be for a public purpose. (1959) I Andh W R 408 : I L R (1959) Andh Pra 276 : AIR 1959 Andh Pra 328 (329) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Art. 31 (5)—Existing law.

In terms Cl. (5) of Art. 31 protects only 'existing laws' even if they conflict with Cl. (2); and if the Legislature was incompetent to pass an Act by reason of the restriction placed upon its authority, it would be difficult to call that Act an 'existing law.' A law which would become invalid on the enactment of the Constitution as being inconsistent with Cl. (2) is protected by C. (5). If however such a law was inconsistent with S. 299 of the Government of India Act, there is nothing in Cl. (5) which protects it. 60 Bom L R 1125 : ILR (1959) Bom 98 : AIR 1960 Bom 35 (42) (Pt D) (Pr 16) (DB).

——Art. 31 (5) (a) — Bombay Land Requisition Act (33 of 1948) as amended by Bombay Land Requisition (Amendment) Act (2 of 1950) whether is "existing law."

In order that a law should be an "existing law" the only qualification laid down by the Constitution is that it should have been passed before the commencement of the Constitution. Inasmuch as the Provincial Legislature in 1948 not only passed the Bombay Act 33 of 1948 fixing its duration till 31-3-1950 but also passed constitutional legislation extending its duration up to 31-3-1952, on a plain reading of the definition of "existing law" as given in Art. 366 (10) the provisions of an existing law for the purposes of Art. 31 (5) (a) included both the actual operation of Bom Act 33 of 1948 and its potential operation in the sense that the Act had within itself the potentiality of being extended up to 31-3 1952. Hence Bombay Act 33 of 1948 as amended by Bombay Act 2 of 1950 to the extent that it merely extended its duration up to March 31, 1952, was an existing law. 53 Bom L R 837: AIR 1952 Bom 16 (23) (Pt F) (Pr 16) (DB).

If the Orissa Legislature has imposed a tax in the form of the assessment of the private lands of Rulers, clearly it has not purported either to deprive the Rulers of their property, or to acquire or requisition the said property, it is a simple measure authorising the levy of a tax in respect of agricultural lands and as such, it is entirely outside the purview of Art. 31. ——Arts. 31 (5) (b) (i), 366 (28) — Levy under Ch. V-A of Employees' State Insurance Act—Nature and incidents of.

The nature of the special contribution payable by an employer under Ch. V-A of the Act, is a tax. The employee's special contribution under the Employees' State Insurance Act is a compulsory exaction, recoverable in the event of non-payment as if it were an arrear of land revenue. It is levied by public authority and it is not payment for services rendered. It is not an essential ingredient of a tax, that the moneys recovered by the levy must form part of the general revenues of the State.

The fact that an enactment falls within Art. 31 (5) (b) (i) does not necessarily mean that it falls within Art. 31 (2) also. If the levy is a tax under Art. 31 (5) (b) (i) it would be exempt from the applicability of Art. 31 (2). ● ——Arts. 31 and 19 (5) — East Punjab Evacuees' (Administration of Property) Act (14 of 1947) as amended by Act (26 of 1948), S. 5-A—Validity.

Section 5A of the East Punjab Evacuees' (Administration of Property) Act (14 of 1947) cannot be read as a legislative provision depriving the owner of his property. There can be no doubt that so far as transactions subsequent to the date of amendment of the Act are concerned, it is nothing more than a restriction on the transfer of property by the owner thereof. The case would, then, be one which falls under Art. 19 of the Constitution and not under Art. 31. There can be no doubt that having regard to the purpose and policy underlying the law relating to Evacuee Property and the abnormal conditions which arose from and after the 15th August, 1947, the requirement of confirmation with reference to transactions affecting Evacuee Property cannot but be considered a reasonable restriction. If this requirement was in essence not a deprivation but a restriction in respect of future transactions, there is no reason for treating it as deprivation by virtue of its having been given retrospective effect, such retrospectivity being within the competence of the appropriate legislature. Sadhu Ram v. Custodian-General of Evacuee Property, 1956 S C A 70 : 1956 S C J 99 : (1955) 2 S C R 1113 : AIR 1956 S C 43 (44) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

——Art. 31 (2) and (5) (b) (iii) — Scope — S. 12, Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act (1954) — Validity of (Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act (1954), S. 12).

The Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act contemplates vesting in the Central Government of the interest of the evacuee and of no one else, and there is a provision made for payment of compensation and to the extent to which it contemplates acquisition of the interest of the evacuee it cannot be regarded as inconsistent with Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution. Undoubtedly by virtue of the notification under S. 12 the Central Government acquired the properties of the evacuee free from the encumbrance in favour of the person. But the notification has not the effect of extinguishing the contract. The contract remains outstanding but it cannot be enforced against the property vested in the Central Government by the operation of the notification. Section 12 merely imposes a restriction upon the right of the person entitled to the benefit of the encumbrance to get the property in enforcement of the agreement by specific performance.

Even assuming that there has been deprivation of property of such person by the Act, it is saved by clause 5 (b) (iii) of Art. 31 of the Constitution. ILR 1957 Bom 668 : 59 Bom L R 309 : A I R 1957 Bom 119 (128, 129) (Pt G) (Prs 20, 21) (DB).

——Art. 31 (5) — Property 'declared by law to be evacuee property'—Property declared by notification under Administration of Evacaee Property Act — (Administration of Evacuee Property Act (1950), S. 12).

The expression 'law' used in clause (5) of Art. 31 does not mean merely the direct expression of the will of the Legislature ; in its context the expression 'law' must include the lawful expression of the will of some authority to whom power is delegated by the Legislature. The expression 'property declared by law to be evacuee property' includes property which is declared by notification issued by the Custodian under the Administration of Evacuee Property Act to be evacuee property. Once that notification is issued the property becomes by operation of law evacuee property and it must be regarded as declared by law to be evacuee property. ——Art. 31 (5)— Applicability — State law making provision in respect of evacuee property — If saved from operation of Art. 31 (2).

The expression 'evacuee property' has not been defined in the Constitution. If by law validly enacted certain property is declared to be evacuee property it must fall within the exception contained in clause (5) of Art. 31. The provision of any law which the State may after the date of the Constitution make with respect to such evacuee property is saved from the operation of cl. (2) of Art 31. ——Art. 31 (2), (5)—Taking possession—Administration of Evacuee Property Ordinance (1949).

The mere fact that under the Ordinance no one has the beneficial use of the property of the evacuee and the property merely remains vested in the Custodian should not deter the High Court from coming to the conclusion that the property is taken possession of within the meaning of Art. 31 (2) and by reason of Cl. (5) no obligation attaches to the State to pay compensation for taking possession of that property. ——Art. 31 — Administration of Evacuee Property Ordinance (1949)—Validity.

The entire scheme of the Administration of Evacuee Property Ordinance (1949) in respect of "evacuee property" is a provision for the custody and administration of such property and not for confiscation. The evacuee's title as such is never affected. Even the rights of a heir are recognised. Restoration of the property is contemplated. The Custodian acts practically as a statutory agent with large powers, but under a duty to keep accounts. There is no deprivation of the property of the evacuee within the meaning of Art. 31 (1). Nor is there any taking possession or acquisition falling under Art. 31 (2). No compensation can be given to the evacuee when the Custodian keeps accounts of all receipts and disbursements relating to his property and there is provision for restoration at a subsequent date. Thus provisions of Art. 31 are not infringed by any of the provisions of the Ordinance relating to evacuees. 1951 Mad W N 497 : 1951-2 Mad L J 1 : AIR 1951 Mad 930 (933) (Pt C) (Pr 14) (DB).

——Arts. 31, 226 — Deprivation of possession by Custodian of Evacuee Property — Right to writ of mandamus — Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950, S. 28.

A lady executed and registered a deed of wakfnama on 4-5-1946 in respect of her property which provided that she was to be the mutwalli and that on her death or her relinquishing the office her three sons were to be joint mutwallis. She resigned her office as well as her right to receive a share of the income by a letter on 2-5-1949. The Deputy Custodian of Evacuee Property holding her to be an evacuee and that her letter of 2-5-1949 amounted to a transfer of property took possession of the property. The sons who were admittedly citizens of India applied for a writ of mandamus. It being also found that the lady who was born in India and married to an Indian citizen was herself a citizen of India :

Held, (1) that there was an infringement of fundamental right of the petitioners to hold and enjoy property;

(2) that there was no transfer of the property subsequent to 14-8-1947 so as to bring it within the meaning of the expression "evacuee property" in the Administration of Evacuee Property Act, 1950, and that the question was of no consequence since the lady was found to be a citizen of India;

(3) that Art. 226 gave the High Court original jurisdiction in all such matters to issue a mandatory injunction and that the special remedy of an appeal provided by the Act was no bar to the exercise of the jurisdiction. ILR 30 Pat 21 : AIR 1951 Pat 434 (436) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 7) (DB).

——Art. 31 (1), (2) and (5) (b) (iii)—Scope—Administration of Evacuee Property Act (1950), S. 17 (2) —Does not infringe guarantee under Art. 31 and is saved by Art. 31 (5) (b) (iii).

The Administration of Evacuee Property Act, including S. 17 (2) is a law made by the Government of India, in pursuance of some agreement or unilaterally with respect to property declared by law to be evacuee property. Undoubtedly, therefore it falls under the exception in Art. 31 (5) (b) (iii). The result of setting aside a Court sale of evacuee property under S. 17 (2) is to enable the State to take possession of the property. The provisions of the section are in consonance with the object of the Act and there is nothing unconstitutional about them. Clause (2) of Art. 31 provides for both the conditions, namely the existence of a public purpose and obligation to pay just compensation. The exemptions in cl. (5) (b) therefore, will apply to the element of public purpose as well. S. 17 (2) of the Act cannot be regarded as contravening the provisions of Art. 31. AIR 1956 Pepsu 58 (63, 64) (Pt G) (Prs 21, 26, 27) (DB).

——Art. 31 — Evacuee Interest (Separation) Act (1951), S. 9—There is no acquisition under S. 9.

With the extinguishment of the mortgage charge contemplated by S. 9, Evacuee Interest (Separation) Act, the property which was the subject of the charge reverts to its owner and hence the State cannot be said to have acquired the mortgagee rights. There is thus no acquisition or deprivation without compensation of any non-evacuee interest.

The fact that the land vests in the Custodian unencumbered, does not make the Custodian, who represents the State for the purpose of administration of evacuee property, owner of the land. ——Art. 31 — Evacuee Interest (Separation) Act (1951), S. 9 — Profits received by mortgagee — Reasonable basis of compensation.

Assuming that S. 9, Evacuee Interest (Separation) Act contemplates acquisition in the sense it is used in Art. 31, then the profits received from the land for a specific number of years can afford a reasonable basis for assuming that the mortgagee has been amply compensated both with regard to the prinpal he advanced and interest thereon at a reasonable rate.

What is a reasonable compensation depends upon the circumstances present at the time the question of compensation is to be decided. Section 9 (2) lays down a uniform rule for determining compensation to usufructuary mortgagees which the Legislature has power to do. The rule thus saves the section from being hit by the provisions of cl. (2) of Art. 31. ILR (1956) Patiala 205 : AIR 1955 Pepsu 148 (153) (Pt I) (Pr 15) (DB).

The provisions of S. 9 (2), Evacuee Interest (Separation) Act do not come into conflict with the provisions of cl. (2) of Art. 31 of the Constitution as those provisions come within the ambit of cl. (5) (b) (iii) of Art. 31, which provides that the State may make any law "otherwise with respect to property declared by law to be evacuee property". ILR (1956) Patiala 205 : AIR 1955 Pepsu 148 (153) (Pt J) (Pr 16) (DB).

The provisions of Art. 31 cannot possibly be attracted in the case of S. 9, Evacuee Interest (Separation) Act. 20. Public health, etc.

——Art. 31 (5) (b) (ii)—Scope—Levy under Chapter V-A of Employees' State Insurance Act (1948).

The Act does not fall under Art. 31 (5) (b) (ii). Section 46 of the Act enumerates the benefits which are to be granted to the employees and only some of these can be said to be for the promotion of health of the employees.

It is really a measure of insurance providing for relief to the employees at times when they are not able to earn their wages due to sickness, disability or other reasons though medical treatment is also to be provided to injured persons and the relief might be extended to the family also of an insured person. This Act cannot be said to be a measure providing for pubilc health within the meaning of the expression as used in Art. 31 (5) (b) (ii) of the Constitution. ——Art. 31 (5) (b) (ii)—Distinction between exercise of police power and that of eminent domain—Hyderabad Act 35 of 1951 does not relate to police power. See Hyderabad City Improvement Board (Land Acquisition) Act (35 of 1951), S. 1. AIR 1955 Hyd 41 (DB).

——Art. 31 (5) (b) (ii)— Applicability — Hyderabad Act 35 of 1951—Objects of —Act not covered by the Clause—Hyderabad City Improvement Board (Land Acquisition) Act (35 of 1951), S. 1.

Clause 5 (b) (ii) of Art. 31 covers only laws for the promotion of public health or the prevention of danger to life or property, and the purposes of the Board under the Hyderabad Act are wider.

It would be straining the language of the Hyderabad Act, to hold that it authorises acquisition of the lands only for promoting public health or preventing danger to life or property. By mere inclusion of public health as one of the purposes, it cannot be said that the new Act is for acquiring lands for only that purpose. The Act is not therefore covered by Cl. Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1949 is not saved by the provision contained in Art. 31 (5) of the Constitution. ● ——Art. 31 (2), (5), Sch. 7, List 2, Items 18, 64, 65 — Bihar Land Encroachment Act (31 of 1950) is not an Act for alleviation of public nuisance.

The expression 'public nuisance' is most inappropriate in respect of Bihar Land Encroachment Act and even if this is an Act covered by items 18, 64 and 65 of List 2, the question of public nuisance does not arise. As a matter of fact, if it is an enactment with regard to land, it comes solely within item 18, and only the penal portions of the statute can come within item 64. The jurisdiction and the powers conferred upon the Collector may be covered by item 65, but after reading and considering these three items one cannot say that this is an Act for the alleviation of public nuisance. The Act does not come within any of the exceptions provided in Art. 31 (5) of the Constitution of India. The Act cannot be saved under Cl. (5) (b) (ii) of Art. 31. It is not meant for the promotion of public health, nor is it meant for the prevention of danger to life and property; on the other hand, it interferes with fundamental rights, inasmuch as it deprives persons of their property without compensation. It is not open to a holder of zamindari estate in the State of Madras to raise the contention that the provisions relating to compensation as contained in the Madras Act 26 of 1948 are invalid on the ground that they are colourable exercise of legislative powers under the Government of India Act, 1935. The reason is that there is no entry in any of the legislative lists in the Government of India Act, 1935 corresponding to Entry 42 of List 3, Sch. 7 in the present Constitution and the guarantee given by S. 299 (2) of the Act of 1935 is not available to the appellant by reason of Art. 31 (6) of the Constitution. This is so even with respect to the contention that absolutely no compensation has been allowed in respect of a large number of under-tenures: AIR 1954 S C 257, Verappa v. It is not correct to say that Art. 31 (6) will not apply to statutes passed within eighteen months of the Constitution coming into force but not submitted for the certification of the President. ● ——Art. 31 (6) — Terms of the clause are not wide enough to cover each and every contravention of the Constitution but only of Cl. (2). See Ibid, Art. 19 (1) (f). AIR 1950 Pat 392 (SB).

● ——Art. 31 (6)—Exercise of powers under — Restriction.

(Per Shearer J.)—The restriction, on the exercise of the power under Art. 31 (6), that the President should refrain from certifying any law unless that law provided for compensation is not a legal but rather a moral or political restriction. Kameshwar Singh v. Province of Bihar, I L R 29 Pat 790 : AIR 1950 Pat 392 (398) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (SB).

● ——Art. 31 (6)—"It shall not be called in question" —Meaning of—Institution of suit prior to Constitution.

The intention of the Constituent Assembly was that certain rights in land should be or be liable to be extinguished with effect from the date of enactment purporting to extinguish them and it cannot be said that words "it shall not be called in question" being words of futurity the certificate of the President is of no avail to the defendant where a suit for a declaration that the Bihar State Management of Estates and Tenures Act (21 of 1949) is an unconstitutional law is instituted prior to the enactment of the Constitution. Kameshwar Singh v. Province of Bihar, I L R 29 Pat 790 : AIR 1950 Pat 392 (398, 399, 417) (Pt C) (Prs 5, 37, 38) (SB).

● ——Art. 31 (6) — Certificate of President—Effect.

(Per Shearer J.)—The Constitution of India merely debarred the Courts from entering into the question of compensation or the propriety of the acquisition. The intention was not to compel the Courts to obey implicitly any enactment passed by the Legislature where a certificate was granted by the President. Kameshwar Singh v. Province of Bihar, I L R 29 Pat 790: AIR 1950 Pat 392 (401, 402) (Pt G) (Pr 8) (SB).

● ——Art. 31 (6)—Effect of—Civil P. C. (1908), S. 9.

(Per Sinha J.) — A Court must have jurisdiction throughout the proceedings until termination of those proceedings by the judgment of the Court. If the Court had jurisdiction to go into the question at the date of the institution of the suit, the jurisdiction will continue until something has happened to take away that jurisdiction. Article 31 (6) has not the effect of taking away the pre-existing jurisdiction of the Court to go into a matter. Kameshwar Singh v. Province of Bihar, I L R 29 Pat 790 : AIR 1950 Pat 392 (417) (Pt N) (Pr 37) (SB).

● ——Art. 31 (6)—Any law of the State—Meaning of — Bihar State Management of Estates and Tenures Act (21 of 1949), S. 1.

(Per Sinha J.)—In order to attract the operation of Art. 31 (6) there must be a valid law of the State. The certification by the President may cure an irregularity or an illegality in some details of the law in a valid piece of legislation but cannot cure a law which is void ab initio. The Bihar State Management of Estates and Tenures Act (21 of 1949) being void ab initio cannot be cured by the certificate under

The Saurashtra Grants (Resumption) Ordinance (84 of 1949) and the Amending Ordinance 6 of 1950 were certified by the President under Art. 31 (6) of the Constitution of India and their validity cannot be called in question on the ground that they contravene Art. 31 (2). The Saurashtra Grants (Resumption) Ordinance (84 of 1949) and the Amending Ordinance (6 of 1950) cannot be called in question by virtue of Art. 31 (6) of the Constitution of India and there is nothing in the Constitution or the Ordinance which would justify the Court to consider the merits of the Saurashtra Government Notification, dated 16th July, 1951. ■ ——Art. 31-A — Mysore Tenancy Act (13 of 1952), S 6—Section is valid—The primary object of the Act is to afford much needed relief to the agricultural tenants by regulating their relations with their landlords. See Tenancy Laws — Mysore Tenancy Act (13 of 1952), S. 6. (1963) 2 S C J 246 : A I R 1966 S C 1172.

■ ——Art. 31-A (2) (as amended 17thly in 1964)—Scope—Art. 31-A is enacted to implement agrarian reform—Land Acquisition (Madras Amendment) Act (23 of 1961) is not confined to any agrarian reform —Provisions of that Act do not attract Art. 31A.

Article 31-A of the Constitution is enacted only to implement agrarian reform which expression has to be given a comprehensive meaning so as to include provisions made for the development of rural economy. Under Art. 31 (2) and Art. 31 (2-A) of the Constitution a State is prohibited from making a law for acquirtng land unless it is for a public purpose and unless it fixes the amount of compensation or specifies the principles for determining the amount of compensation. But Art 31-A lifts the ban to enable the State to implement the pressing agrarian reforms. The said object of the Constitution is implicit in Art. 31-A. It does not, however, enable the State to acquire the lands of citizens without reference to any agrarian reform in derogation of their fundamental rights without payment of compensation, for, to allow the State to do so will deprive Art. 31 2) practically of its content. Therefore, Art. 31 A will apply only to a law made for acquisition by the State of any 'estate' or any rights therein or for extinguishment or modification of such rights if such acquisition, extinguishment or modification is connected with agrarian reform. A I R 1960 S C 1080 and A 1 R 1985 S C 632, Rel. on,

Assuming that the Land Acquisition (Madras Amendment) Act (23 of 1961) is conceived and enacted only for the purpose of slum clearance which became an urgent problem for the City of Madras even then such a slum clearance cannot be held to relate to an agrarian reform in its limited or wider sense. That apart, the Amending Act in its comprehensive phraseology takes in acquisition for any housing scheme whether for slum clearance or for creating modern suburbs or for any other public purpose. The provisions of the Amending Act are not confined to any agrarian reform and therefore do not attract Art. 31-A of the Constitution. Vajravelu Mudaliar v. ■ ——Art. 31-A—Assam Fixation of Ceiling on Land Holdings Act (1 of 1957)—Act conforms to the pattern usually followed by the several States in the country for giving effect to agrarian reform and the attack against its validity on the ground that it is a colourable piece of legislation must fail. It cannot be held that the amendment to the Constitution embodied in Art. 31-A, was enacted by the provisional Parliament constituted under Art. 379, and that the Constitution was not amended as provided by Art. 368, and that either the amendment is bad or such an amendment could only endure till the proper Parliament was elected under the Constitution and once such Parliament was elected it was for that Parliament to confirm the amendment enacted by the provisional Parliament. ——Art. 31-A—Scope.

Article 31-A protects the taking away of the fundamental rights as to property. The High Court, therefore, has to strictly consider that the interpretation of that article is not such as to extend beyond its object. In every case under consideration, therefore, it would have to consider whether the rights which are sought to be taken away or extinguished fall within the scope of that article. In other words, the object for which such rights are sought to be taken away must have relation with the estate as defined in Art. 31-A (2). Law—Meaning of.

——Art. 31-A — 'Law' meaning of — Law includes Bill which has not yet become law by being assented to by President or Governor as the case may be. See Ibid, Art. 31 (3). AIR 1957 Orissa 96 (DB).

——Art. 31-A (1) — Scope—Orissa Estates Abolition (Amendment) Act, 1954 (17 of 1954), S. 1—'Law providing for acquisition'—Meaning of.

As a matter of construction it must be held that the words 'law providing for acquisition' occurring in Art 31-A (1) would include not only the Parent Act providing for acquisition but also the amending Act which should be deemed to have been incorporated in the Parent Act even though the amending Act in express terms provides only for textual amendment of certain clauses. The amending Act cannot stand isolated and must be held to have been read by the President, as forming part of the Parent Act, when he gave his assent to it. ●——Arts. 31-A (1) (a), 31-B — Land Acquisition (Bombay Amendment) Act (4 of 1948), S. 3—Scope of Art. 31-B—Art. 31-B not governed by Art. 31-A—Bombay Act 4 of 1948 being void from its inception, not saved by Art. 31-A.

The words, 'without prejudice to the generality of of the provisions' in Art. 31-B indicate that Acts and regulations specified in the Ninth Schedule would have the immunity even if they did not attract Art. 31-A of the Constitution. If every Act in the Ninth Schedule would be covered by Art. 31-A, this Article would become redundant. Indeed some of the Acts mentioned therein, namely, items 14 to 20 and many other Acts added to the Ninth Schedule, do not appear to relate to estates as defined in Art. 31-A (2) of the Constitution. It must therefore be held that Art. 31-B is not governed by Art. 31-A and that Art. 31-B is a constitutional device to place the specified statutes beyond any attack on the ground that they infringe Part III of the Constitution. As the Bombay Amending Act was void from its inception Art. 31-A could not save it. Jeejeebhoy v. Assistant Collector, Thana Prant. 67 Bom L R 575 : (1965) 2 S C A 457 : 1965 M P L J 114 : 1965 Mah L J 115 : AIR 1965 S C 1096 (1101, 1102, 1103) (Pt D) (Pr 13).

● ——Arts. 31-A and 31-B—Constitution (17th Amendment) Act (1964)—Act is constitutionally valid. See Ibid, Art. 368. AIR 1965 S C 845.

● ——Arts. 31-A, 31-B—Validity of.

Articles 31A and 31B inserted in the Constitution do not either in terms or in effect seek to make any change in Art. 226 or in Arts. 132 and 136. Art. 31A aims at saving laws providing for the compulsory acquisition by the State of a certain kind of property from the operation of Art. 13 read with other relevant articles in Part III, while Art. 31B purports to validate certain specified Acts and Regulations already passed, which, but for such a provision, would be liable to be impugned under Art. 13. The new articles being essentially amendments of the Constitution, Parliament alone had the power of enacting them. That the laws thus saved relate to matters covered by List II does not in any way affect the position. To make a law which contravenes the Constitution constitutionally valid is a matter of constitutional amendment, and as such it falls within the exclusive power of Parliament.

Quaere—Whether the latter part of Art. 31B is too widely expressed. Shankari Prasad v. Union of India, 1951 R D (SC) 219 : 64 Mad L W 1005 : 1951 All L J 740 : 1951-2 Mad L J 683 : 88 Cal L J 281 : 1951 S C J 775 : 30 Pat 1179 : 1952 S C R 89 : AIR 1951 S C 458 (463, 464) (Pt G) (Prs 14, 15).

——Arts. 31-A and 31-B — Applicability — Acquisition of land under U. P. Act (26 of 1948)—Art. 31B applies by its own force irrespective of provisions of Art. 31A—U. P. Land Acquisition (Rehabilitation of Refugees) Act (26 of 1948), S. 11. ILR (1957) 2 All 88 : AIR 1958 All 154 (158) (Pt F) (Pr 15) (DB).

——Arts. 31-A, 31-B and 368 — Scope — Acts mentioned in ninth schedule — Power of subordinate legislature to amend—Limitation — (Tenancy Laws —Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (47 of 1948), S. 34 (2-A)).

Art. 31-B has been enacted with a view to protect from challenge the provisions of the specified Acts. But the protection can only apply to the Acts as they stood at the date when the Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1952. was enacted. The effect of Art. 31-B and the Ninth Schedule is to incorporate the diverse provisions of the Acts in the Constitution and the provisions of the Acts are rendered free from challenge as inconsistent with or taking away or abridging any rights conferred by the Third Part of the Constitution. If the Acts specified in the Ninth Schedule have to be amended the amendments must either be consistent with the provisions of the Constitution or be saved under Art. 31-A of the Constitution. The Constitution can be amended only by Parliament and in the manner provided by Art. 368 of the Constitution, and any attempt to amend any of the Acts mentioned in the Ninth Schedule so as to take away or abridge any of the rights conferred by the Third Part of the Constitution by a Legislature other than the Parliament of India and in a manner different from that provided in Art. 368 is void and ineffective. Therefore, Art. 31-B does not assist in maintaining that S. 34 (2-A) (1) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948 is intra vires. 59 Bom L R 579 : AIR 1958 Bom 94 (97, 98) (Pt B) (Pr 13) (DB).

22 (c). Rights conferred by this Part — Before Fourth Amendment of 1955.

● ——Art. 31A — Part III does not stand repealed qua the estates of Zamindars and is not 'non est.'

(Mahajan and Das JJ.) : Qua the estates of the zamindars, Part III of the Constitution does not stand repealed and is not 'non est' by Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1951. The truth is that Part III of the Constitution is an important and integral part of it and has not been repealed or abrogated by anything contained in Article 31-A of the Constitution; on the other hand, Article 31-A, while providing that no law providing for the acquisition by the State of any estate, shall be deemed to be void on the ground that it is inconsistent with or takes away or abridges any of the rights conferred by any of the provisions of Part III clearly provides that where such law is made by the legislature of a State, the provisions of this article shall not apply thereto unless such law having been reserved for the consideration of the President has received his assent. This proviso in express terms keeps alive the alternative provisions of Part III of the Constitution in Art. 31 (3) for judging whether the State law has or has not complied with the provisions of Art. 31 (2). The provisions of Art. 31 (2), therefore, do not stand repealed by Art. 31-A. On the other hand, they are kept alive. The difference is that persons whose properties fall within the definition of the expression "estate" in Art. 31-A are deprived of their remedy under Art. 32 of the Constitution and the President has been constituted the sole judge of deciding whether a State law acquiring estates under compulsory powers has or has not complied with the provisions of Art. 31 (2). The validity of the law in those cases depends on the subjective opinion of the President and is not justiciable. Once the assent is given the law is taken to have complied with the provisions of Art. 31 (2). State of Bihar v. ● ——Art. 31A — Natural rights—Rights recognised and rights conferred by Constitution — Madhya Bharat Zamindari Abolition Act — Applicability of Art. 31A.

It is too late in the day to base an argument in an Indian Court on the theory of the natural rights of man, particularly in relation to property. Whatever rights can now be claimed by any citizen in India must be on the basis of the Constitution. If relief is sought in respect of any infringement of an alleged right, the person asking for such relief must base his claim on some provision of the Constitution either express or implied. The Fundamental Rights derive their sanctity not from anything which existed previously but from the Constitution and in this sense they are conferred by the Constitution. They are rightly called as "conferred" by the Constitution inasmuch as for enforcement of such rights new remedies are made available to the citizens of India. An application under Art. 226 of the Constitution challenging the Constitutionality of the Madhya Bharat Zamindari Abolition Act is not a proceeding in relation to a right which has been merely recognised, but is in regard to a right which has been conferred by the Constitution. Art. 31A therefore applies to such a case. AIR 1950 S C 27, Foll. Ram Dubey v. Govt. of the State of M. ● ——Art. 31-A (as amended by Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act (1955)—Object and Scope of — (Madras Act 32 of 1955)—If covered.

(Per Majority, Jafer Imam and Sarkar, JJ., contra) : Art. 31-A as amended by Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act (1955) is concerned with land tenure, called 'estate' and provides for its acquisition or the extinguishment or modification of the rights of the land-holder or the various subordinate tenure-holders in respect of their rights in relation to the estate. AIR 1959 S C 459 and AIR 1959 S C 519, Rel. on.

Madras Marumakkathayam (Removal of Doubts) Act (32 of 1955) does not modify any of the rights appertaining to 'janmam right', but only confers shares in the property on other members of the tarwad. The sole title of the sthanee is not recognized and the members of the tarwad are given rights therein. The Act does not regulate the rights inter se between landlords and tenants. Hence the Act is not covered by Art. 31-A (as amended by the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act, (1955). Kochuni v. The Legislature was certainly competent, under Entry 18 of List II of Sch. VII to the Constitution relating to Land, to enact S. 8. It cannot be disputed that the Legislature has power in appropriate cases to pass even retrospective legislation. Therefore, the Ajmer Legislature certainly had the power to enact such a provision, and in the circumstances in which this provision has been made in the Act, it cannot be said that it is not protected under Art. 31-A. The provision is not an independent provision; it is merely ancillary in character enacted for carrying out the objects of the Act more effectively. Raghubir Singh v. State of Ajmer, 1959 S C J 629 : (1959) Supp (1) S C R 478 : A I R 1959 S C 475 (477, 478) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

Section 38 is another ancillary section, like S. 8, and is meant to subserve the purposes of the Act, namely, the abolition of all intermediaries and encouragement of self-cultivation of the land. Therefore S. 38 is also protected under Art. 31-A (1), (a) of the Constitution as an ancillary provision necessary for the purposes of carrying out the objects of the Act. Raghubir Singh v. ● ——Art. 31-A — Scope — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Amendment) Act (13 of 1956)— Validity.

The Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879, was an existing law relating to land tenures in force in Bombay at the time when the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act, 1955, was passed and Art. 31-A in its amended form was introduced therein and the expression 'estate' had a meaning given to it under S. 2 (10) there, viz., 'any interest in lands' which comprised within its cope alienated land and covered the holdings of occupants within the meaning thereof : The impugned Act was however not a law for the acquisition by the State of any estate or of any rights therein. Art. 31-A (1) (a) talks of two distinct objects of legislation; one being the acquisition by the State of any estate or of any rights therein and the other being the extinguishment or modification of any such rights. An extinguishment or modification of any rights in 'estates' is a distinct concept altogether and cannot be in the process of acquisition by the State. Under the Act there is no suspension of the title of the landlord at all. The title of the landlord to the land passes immediately to the tenant on the tiller's day and there is a completed purchase or sale thereof as between the landlord and the tenant. The impugned Act is covered by Art. 31-A and is protected from attack against its constitutionality on the score of its having violated the fundamental rights, enshrined in Arts. 14 19 and 31 of the Constitution. ● ——Art. 31-A—Scope—Assam State Acquisition of Zamindaris Act (18 of 1951)—If protected by Article.

The Assam State Acquisition of Zamindaris Act is a law providing for the acquisition by the State of an estate within the meaning of Art. 31-A and, that being so, its constitutionality or validity cannot be questioned on the ground of any contravention of any of the provisions of Part III of the Constitution dealing with fundamental rights. The impugned Act is a law providing for State acquisition of 'estate' even if its definition of Estate comprises something more than what is comprised in the six categories included within that term in S. 3 (b) of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation of 1886. The impugned Act is fully protected by Art. 31-A. Bhairebendra Narayan Bhup v. Article 31-A (1)(a) does not deal with any and every right; it deals with an estate or a right therein and the extinguishment must be of such a right. A right which the owner of a property has to claim substitution for a vendee when adjoining property is sold to a third party without notice to him is not a right in any estate but a right purely personal to the occupant arising only in the event of there being a sale. Therefore, Art. 31-A has no application to a right of pre-emption. Consequently S. 242 (3) of the M. P. Land Revenue Code is not saved by Art. 31-A. Balabhau Manaji v. The Himachal Pradesh Tenants (Rights and Restoration) Act, 1952, is within the competence of the Legislature which passed it. Section 3 of the aforesaid Act under which the rights of a landlord were modified is covered by sub-cl. (a) of Art. 31 A (1) and even if the said provision is supposed to be in conflict with Art. 19 or 31, it would not be deemed to be void on the ground of any such conflict and is immune from such attack. Even though a legislation may not provide for acquisition by the State, it will not be open to attack on account of any conflict with Art. 14, 19 or 31 provided it is covered by Art. 31-A.

The words 'or the extinguishment or modification of any such rights' in Art. 31-A (1), sub-cl. ——Art. 31-A — Bihar Land Reforms Act, S. 4 (h)—Validity — (Bihar Land Reforms Act (30 of 1950), S. 4 (h)).

Section 4 (h), Bihar Land Reforms Act, confers authority on the Collector to make inquiries in respect of any transfer including the settlement or lease of any land comprised in an estate or tenure. It is obvious that the transferee or the lessee of land comprised in an estate or tenure has an interest or right in such estate or tenure. Section 4 (h) must be taken to be a law providing for the acquisition of any estate "or of any right therein or for the extinguishment or modification of such rights" within the meaning of Art. 31-A, of the Constitution. Further the provisions of S. 4 (h) are intimately associated and linked with the main provisions enacted under Ss. 3 and 4. The primary matter dealt with by this legislation of which S. 4 (h) is an integral part in its pith and substance deals with the acquisition of estates or tenures falling within entry 36 of List II and is therefore protected from attack under Art. 31-A of the Constitution. AIR 1954 Pat 550 (553) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

● ——Arts. 31 and 31-A — East Punjab Holdings (Consolidation and Prevention of Fragmentation) (Second Amendment and Validation) Act (27 of (1960)—Validity—Art. 12—'State'.

Article 31-A applies equally to an entire estate or to a portion of an estate.

Village Panchayat which is a statutory body is undoubtedly a local authority and therefore 'State' by virtue of the definition in Art. 12.

The act of handing over the management and possession of the land of the proprietors to the village panchayat amounts to acquisition by the State. The transfer of rights to the panchayat can also be considered as modification of proprietary rights within the meaning of Art. 31-A.

The Punjab Village Common Lands (Regulation) Act, 1953 (1 of 1954) which by S. 3 provides for vesting of Shamlat deh in the village panchayat without payment of compensation to the proprietors has been held to be valid. Hence Act 27 of 1960, which merely provides authority for adding to or taking away from the already existing shamlat deh is saved by Art. 31-A. Resumption implies taking back by the person who grants the land, and there can be no liability to pay compensation when such taking back takes place because of breach of conditions of the grant.

The very fact therefore, that the Rajasthan Act provides for payment of compensation is the clearest possible indication that the Act is for the acquisition of jagirs, and not for resumption as that word is well understood. Here the property is being taken away not because of any breach of condition of any grant under which it was given to the jagirdars, but on payment of compensation. The application of Art. 31-A cannot therefore be excluded on the ground that the Rajasthan Act is not an Act for acquisition of estates. Amar Singh v. State of Rajasthan, 1955 Raj L W 212: I L R (1955) 5 Raj 149 : (1955) 2 S C R 303 : A I R 1954 Raj 291 (294) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (FB).

See Tenancy Laws — Bihar Land Reforms Act (30 of 1950), S. 4 (h). A I R 1962 S C 50.

●——Art. 31-A (1) (a)—Scope — Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act (10 of 1953 as amended by Act 11 of 1955)—If extinguishes or modifies any rights in any estate within Art. 31-A (1) (a) — Constitutional validity — (Punjab Land Revenue Act (17 of 1887), S. 3). A I R 1959 Punj 8, Overruled.

Keeping in view the fact that Art. 31-A was enacted by two successive amendments one in 1951 (First Amendment), and the second in 1955 (Fourth Amendment) with retrospective effect, it must be held that those expressions have been used in their widest amplitude, consistent with the purpose behind those amendments. A piece of validating enactment purposely introduced into the Constitution with a view to saving that kind of legislation from attacks on the ground of constitutional invalidity, based on Arts. 14, 19 and 31, should be given its fullest and widest effect, consistently with the purpose behind the enactment, provided however that such a construction does not involve any violence to the language actually used.

The expression 'rights in relation to an estate' has been used in a very comprehensive sense of including not only the interests of proprietors or sub-proprietors but also of lower grade tenants, like raiyats or under-raiyats. The expression 'other intermediary' added to it shows that the enumeration of intermediaries was only illustrative and not exhaustive. The provisions of Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act (10 of 1953 as amended by Act 11 of 1955) amount to modification of the land owner's rights in the land comprised in his estate or holding. It is clear that the provisions of Art. 31-A save the impugned Act from any attack based on the provisions of Arts. 14, 19 and 31 of the Constitution. Atma Ram v. ——Art. 31-A (1) (a)—Applicability—Law providing for acquisition of rights of lessees and sub-lessees of mines and minerals.

Sub-clause (a) of Cl. (1) of Art. 31-A is very general in its term. and would include the acquisition of any estate or of any rights therein, as also the extinguishment or modification of such rights. Provided that the lessee or sub-lessee is an intermediary and holds an estate or any rights therein it cannot be said that sub-clause (a) has no application. In any event, the provisions as to acquisition of the rights of lessees and sub-lessees of mines and minerals which have been introduced in the W. B. Estates Acquisition Act 1 of 1954 by the W. B. Amending Act 4 of 1957, come within the expression 'extinguishment or modification' in Art. 31-A (1) (a). 66 Cal W N 304 : A I R 1960 Cal 646 (661, 662) (Pt C) (Pr 27).

●——Art. 31-A—'Extinguishment and modification'—Meaning.

It is plainly incorrect to construe Art. 31-A in such a manner as to render the word modification occurring therein wholly redundant. Both the word 'extinguishment' and 'modification' which find place in Art. 31-A must be given their respective meanings and significance. The difference in the import of these two words lies in the degree of the impairment or invasion of the rights in an estate. While extinguishment indicates a total annihilation of the right, whether it be in respect of the entire estate or a part of it, modification covers a case where a right in the estate is abridged or impaired short of extinguishment to the prejudice of the person in whom the right resides. A I R 1953 S C 373, Expl. and Disting.

It is therefore idle to contend that 'modification' in Art. 31-A means nothing other than 'extinguishment' and that anything short of extinguishment, will not be covered by Art. 31-A. Nor is it tenable to contend that a drastic limitation imposed upon a landlord's right to obtain land for personal cultivation by evicting the tenant will not amount to modification of the landlord's right in the estate. The right to resume the land especially for personal use of cultivation is undoubtedly a valuable right which the landlord has in his estate. Any curtailment of this right so as to preclude him from recovering the extent of land he desires or actually needs to bring under personal cultivation will be a modification of his right in the estate. ——Art. 31-A — Extinguishment of estate rights — Punjab Village Common Lands (Regulation) Act (1 of 1954), S. 3 — Provision vesting rights in village land in Village Panchayat — Object to benefit rural community — Act is a measure of agrarian reform and is protected under Art. 31-A.

Article 31-A applies only to such legislation as is designed to effect agrarian reform : AIR 1960 S C 1080 (Foll.). Agrarian reform is not confined only to the improvement of methods of tilling land for it has a much broader scope and includes all steps affecting the rural economy in general. Section 3 of the Punjab Village Common Lands (Regulation) Act 1953 (I of 1954) vests certain rights in certain areas of land in a representative body —the village Panchayat —so that it could be better managed for the benefit of the rural community and viewed in this light it is hard to agree that the Act is not designed to affect agrarian reform. Where an Act authorises the reservation of a portion of proprietary land for providing income to the Gram Panchayat and the functions of the Gram Panchayat are to promote the well-being of farmers in all possible ways the Act must be said to be aimed at agrarian reform. A I R 1962 Punj 221 (FB) Foll. Thus the Act having for its object agrarian reform is protected by Article 31-A of the Constitution and does not offend against Articles 19 and 31 or Art 14 of the Constitution: A I R 1955 Punj 220 held still good law after reconsideration in light of A I R 1960 S C 1080. 66 Punj L R 966 : AIR 1964 Punj 503 (504, 505, 506) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

——Art. 31-A (1)—"Extinguishment or modification of any such rights"—Punjab Village Common Lands (Regulation) Act —Validity —(Punjab Village Common Land (Regulation) Act (1 of 1954), Ss. 1 and 3).

There is no ground for thinking that if a person's rights in an estate have been taken away from him and given to another person this would not be extinguishing those rights, Therefore the impugned Act does fall within the meaning of Art. 31-A as it provides for the extinguishment of certain rights in certain property belonging to the village proprietors and also for the modification of those rights.

There are in an estate several kinds of rights owned by various persons and one of such rights is the right of proprietorship in the village 'shamilat' and when, therefore, the impugned Act provides for the extinguishment of such ownership rights it clearly provides for the extinguishment or modification of certain rights in an estate. The whole includes the part and where an Act provides for rights in an estate it provides for rights in part of an estate. A I R 1954 Punj 167 (F B), Foll.

There is therefore, nothing in impugned Act which offends against the provisions of the Constitution and the Act is therefore valid. ILR (1955) Punj 1334 : 57 Punj L R 359 : AIR 1955 Punj 220 (221, 222) (Prs 2, 3, 5) (DB).

●——Art. 31 A—Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act (10 of 1953) —Validity — Act does nothing more than modify rights in estates which is permissible under terms of Art. 31A. See Ibid, Art. 31. AIR 1954 Punj 167 (FB).

●——Art. 31-A — Validity of Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act [Tenancy Laws—Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act (10 of 1953)].

The Punjab Security of Land Tenures Act is not an Act aiming at the acquisition of private property. It merely limits the maximum holding of a landlord and lays down a procedure for attaining this object. It therefore does nothing more than modify rights in estates which is permissible under the terms of Art. 31-A of the Constitution.

Even if by any stretch of meaning S. 18 of the Act could be construed into a provision for acquisition the same section contains a provision for the payment of compensation, inasmuch as the tenant has to pay a fair price for the land which he wished to purchase. Sub-s. (2) of S. 18 of the Act lays down the procedure for determining the value of the land. It therefore cannot be said that the Act authorised compulsory acquisition of property without making provision for the payment of compensation to the owners.

So long as the retrospective effect of the Act is in conformity with the objects of the Act and does not violate any principles of the Constitution the provision must be held to be valid. The Act gives certain rights to those tenants who were ejected after the 15th of August, 1947, and there seems to be nothing unreasonable in giving them the same rights as are acquired by persons who are tenants at the commencement of the Act. In the same way the abrogation of mala fide transactions is brought under the mischief of the Act by S. 16. This section is intended to prevent evasion of the provisions of the Act by colourable transactions. Therefore the objection that the statute is not valid because it nullifies retrospectively all gifts, exchanges and family settlements against the spirit of the Constitution and natural justice, is not tenable. A I R 1941 F C 16, Rel. on.; A I R 1951 Cal 85, Ref. to.

There is also no force in the argument that the Punjab Act is invalid because it deals not with whole villages but with portions of estates held by the landowners and therefore is not saved by Art. 31-A. It is clear from the specific instances of Acts mentioned by Art. 31-B as saved by Art. 31-A that the object of the latter Article appears to have been to bring all agricultural land as distinct from urban property within the ambit of the Article and that the Constituent Assembly in enacting that Article intended not only to deal with whole estates but also part of estates. ●——Art. 31-A — Benefit of Art. 31-A is available to laws amending the original laws providing for compulsory acquisition — Orissa Estates Abolition (Amendment) Act (27 of 1954).

Benefit of Art. 31-A is available not only to those laws, which by themselves provide for compulsory acquisition of property for public purposes but also to laws amending such laws, provided assent of the President is obtained to such amending Act. It is to be presumed that the President gives his assent to the amending Act in its relation to the Act it sought to amend, and this is more so, when by the amending law the provisions of the earlier law relating to compulsory acquisition of property for public purpose are sought to be extended to new kinds of properties. In assenting to such law, the President assents to new categories of properties being brought within the operation of the existing law, and he, in effect, assents to a law for the compulsory acquisition for public purposes of these new categories of property. The assent of the President to the Orissa Estates Abolition (Amendment) Act, 1954 (27 of 1954) amending the Orissa Estates Abolition Act (1 of 1952) brought in the protection of Art. 31-A as a necessary consequence. The amending Act must be considered in relation to the old law which it sought to extend and the President assented to such an extension or, in other words, to a law for the compulsory acquisition of property for public purposes. ● —Art. 31-A, Proviso—'Law'—Meaning of.

The word 'Law' as used in Art. 31-A means no more than a Bill passed by the Legislative Assembly of a State or in the case of a State having the Legislative Council a Bill passed by both Houses of Legislature of the State. Further when the Rajapramukh does not withhold his assent to a Bill and reserves the same for the consideration of the President, he must be deemed to have given his assent to that Bill, as an essential part of the Legislature of the State. It cannot therefore be said that inasmuch as the Bill for abolition of Zamindari in Madhya Bharat after it was passed by the Legislative Assembly did not receive the assent of the Rajpramukh as required under Art. 200 of the Constitution to make it a Law, the provisions of the proviso were not complied with and what was reserved by the Raj Pramukh for the assent of the President was a Bill passed by the State and therefore any such Legislation would not attract itself the provisions of Art. 31-A. Section 36 of the East Punjab Holdings (Consolidation and Prevention of Fragmentation) Act (50 of 1948) was amended by Punjab Act 20 of 1953 which was not reserved for the consideration of the President and consequently did not receive his assent. It received the assent of the Governor of Punjab on 28th April, 1953. After Punjab Act 20 of 1953, the parent Act was amended on ten occasions, though no changes were brought about in S. 36. Out of the subsequent amending Acts, several amending Acts received the assent of the President. It was argued that S. 36 was amended for the first and last time by Punjab Act 20 of 1953, and, not having been reserved for the consideration of the President, had not received his assent but only that of the Governor and therefore, the provisions of Art. 31-A (1) (a) were not attracted.

Held, (Per Tek Chand J.) that when an amending Act goes to the President for his assent, the President, while assenting to it, is presumed to consider the provisions of law both before and after the amendment. If, on consideration, the President were of the view that S. 36 transgressed the fundamental rights under the Constitution he could have withheld his assent. Held further (Per Full Bench) that the provisions of Art. 31-A (1) of the Constitution were attracted, and the East Punjab Holdings (Consolidation and Prevention of Fragmentation) Act (50 of 1948) in general or S. 36 in particular could not be deemed void on the ground that it is inconsistent with or takes away, or abridges any of the rights conferred by Arts. 14, 19 or Art. 31. As the definition of the word 'estate' came into the Constitution from January 26, 1950, and is based on existing law, the Court has to look into law existing on January, 26, 1950, for the purpose of finding out the meaning of the word 'estate' in Art. 31-A. Lands held by ryotwari pattadars in South Kanara District which had come to the State of Kerala by virtue of the States Reorganisation Act from the State of Madras are not estates within the meaning of Art. 31-A (2) (a) of the Constitution and therefore the Act was not protected under Art. 31-A (1) from attack under Arts. 14, 19 and 31 of the Constitution. ● ——Art. 31-A (2) (a)—Tests to see whether Act is protected under Art. 31-A (2) (a) — 'Estate', what constitutes, indicated.

In order to see whether an Act attracts the provisions of Art. 31 A (1) (a) and so is immune from any challenge under Arts. 14, 19 and 31, the question as to whether the property with which the Act is concerned constitutes as 'estate' or 'rights in relation to an estate' under Cl. (2) (a) or (b) has to be determined.

The basic concept of the word 'estate' is that the person holding the estate should be proprietor of the soil and should be in direct relationship with the State paying land revenue to it except where it is remitted in whole or in part. If therefore a term is used or defined in any existing law in a local area which corresponds to this basic concept of 'estate' that would be the local equivalent of the word 'estate' in that area. It is not necessary that there must be an intermediary in an estate before it can be called an estate within the meaning of Art. 31 A (2) (a) ; though in many cases of estates such intermediaries exist. Purushothaman Nambudiri v. State of Kerala, 40 Mys L J 193 : 1962 Supp (1) S C R 753 : (1962) 1 S C J 477 : (1962) 1 Mad L J (S C) 180 : (1962) 1 Andh W R (S C) 180 : (1962) 1 S C A 681 : 1962 Ker L T (S C) 1 : (1962) 1 Ker L R 1 : 1962 Ker L J 86 : AIR 1962 S C 694 (703, 704, 705) (Pt E) (Prs 19, 22, 24).

● —Art. 31-A (2) (a) — 'Estate' — Pandaravaka Verumpattam lands and Puravaka Lands in Cochin can be regarded as local equivalent of estate — Proclamation of Cochin (1905), Cls. 13 and 14—Kerala Agrarian Relations Act (4 of 1961).

Per Majority, (Ayyangar J., Contra):—

Under Cl. 13 of the Proclamation issued by His Highness Sir Rama Varma Raja of Cochin on 10th March 1905, (which is the relevant existing law for the purpose of deciding whether the agricultural properties in question constitute an 'estate' under Cl. (2) (a) of Art. 31-A, the person holding lands on the Pandaravaka Verumpattom tenure is not a tenant. He is given the proprietary right in the soil itself, subject of course to the rights as to metals and minerals reserved in favour of the State. Therefore the Pandaravaka Verumpattom can be regarded as a local equivalent of an estate under Cl. (2) (a) of Art. 31-A.

The position with regard to Puravaka lands is still more clear. Lands held under Puravaka tenure are an 'estate' within meaning of Art. 31-A (1) (a). The Kerala Agrarian RelationsAct, 1961, in so far as it operates against Pandaravaka Verumpattom and Puravaka lands is protected under Art. 31-A (1) (a) and its validity cannot be challenged on the ground that its material provisions offend against Arts. 14, 19 and 31. There is nothing in Art. 31-B to indicate that the specific mention of certain statutes was only intended to illustrate the application of the general words of Art. 31-A. The opening words of Art. 31-B are only intended to make clear that Art. 31-A should not be restricted in its application by reason of anything contained in Art. 31-B and are in no way calculated to restrict the application of the latter article or of the enactments referred to therein to acquisition of "estates". Therefore though malguzari lands could not be regarded as estates within the meaning of Art. 31 A read with the Tenancy Acts, in force in Madhya Pradesh, inasmuch as Art. 31-B purported to validate specifically the Madhya Pradesh Act among others and as that article was not limited in its application to estates, it cannot be said that in regard to the malguzari lands covered by the Madhya Pradesh Act, Arts. 31-A and 31-B could be of no assistance to the Government. ● —Arts. 31-A, 14—Jenmikaram Payment (Abolition) Act, 1960 (3 of 1961) — Validity — Act does not deal with Jenmom right — Protection under Art. 31-A not available — Act contravenes Art. 14.

The definition of the expression 'estate' in Art. 31-A (2) makes it quite clear that a Jenmom right is covered by that expression. That the Jenmies of Travancore were proprietors of the soil is beyond dispute. They continued to be proprietors even after the introduction of the Travancore Jenmi and Kudiyam Act of 1071. Section 5 of that Act, as originally enacted did not destroy the proprietorship of the Jenmi ; it only conferred on Kudiyan a right of permanent occupancy. A new S. 5 was substituted for the old S. 5 by the Travancore Jenmi and Kudiyan (Amendment) Act, 1108. The new S. 5 transferred the ownership of the land from the Jenmi to his Kudiyan, or in other words, effected a termination of his Jenmon right in that land. The Jenmikaram Payment (Abolition) Act, 1960, cannot possibly be considered as dealing with a right which had ceased to exist long before its enactment. It follows that the protection afforded by Art. 31-A of the Constitution is unavailable to the Jenmikaram Payment (Abolition) Act, 1960. Section 3 of the Jenmikaram Payment (Abolition) Act, 1960 deals with the abolition of the payment of Jenmikaram and S. 4 with the amount of compensation to be paid. Subsection (1) of S. 4 relates to the amount of compensation payable to a jenmi other than a religious or charitable institution of a public nature. The Act does violate the fundamental right guaranteed by Art. 14 of the Constitution in so far as it relates to Jenmis who come under S. 4 (1). Held, that the Kerala Agrarian Relations Act is protected by Art. 31-A of the Constitution only in respect of the following category of tenures in the area comprising the former State of Travancore: (1) Jenmom Lands, (2) Inam lands other than Viruthi Lands, (3) Kandukrishi lands assigned to occupants under the Travancore-Cochin Kandukrishi Land Assignment Rules, 1958, and (4) Lands assigned by the Government after levying the price thereof, and that the Act must be struck down in respect of the other tenures in that area such as Pandaravaka lands, Kandukrishi lands (other than those belonging to the category 3 mentioned above), Sri Pandaravaka lands and Thiruppuvarom lands.

In the case of Jenmom lands, the following tenures, 'Thanathu, Thettom, Manavaka, Brahmaswom Vaka, Devswom Vaka, Kudijenmom Kanom Kudijenmom and Venpattom' created by Jenmis must be held to be covered by the word 'Estate' in Art. 31-A of the Constitution and the constitutional validity of Act 4 of 1961 cannot be successfully challenged in respect of such lands.

In respect of certain of the tenures which come under the broad head of Jenmom rights, the validity of the Act will have to be upheld even if it offends Arts. 14, 19 and 31. ——Arts. 31-A (2) (a), 366 (10)—'Existing law.'

The expression 'existing law' should ordinarily be construed in the light of the definition given in Art. 366 (10) of the Constitution and when so construed it would mean only statute law and not mere custom or usage embodied in the record of rights. The dictionary meaning of the expression 'existing law' is wholly inapplicable in Art. 31-A (2) (a). Consequently the special meaning given to that expression in Art. 366 (10) should apply and there is nothing in the context of Art. 31-A (2) (a) to give a wider meaning to that expression. ILR (1957) Cut 299 : A I R 1957 Orissa 247 (252) (Pt B) (Pr 12) (DB).

——Art. 31-A (2) (a)—'Estate'—Orissa Estates Abolition Act (1 of 1952)—Validity.

The definition of the expression 'estate' in Art. 31-A (2) (a) is very clear. It has the same meaning as is given to that expression in the 'existing law relating to land tenures. If according to the majority opinion in the previous judgment of the Orissa High Court the record of rights is 'existing law' the decision in the Supreme Court judgment in (1954) 5 S C R 842 is decisive on the question that Hemgir and Sarapgarh zamindaris are not 'estates' within the meaning of Art. 31-A (2) (a). A mere mention of expressions 'estate', 'zamindari' and 'intermediary' in the record of rights is not itself sufficient to make these properties 'estates' as defined in Art. 31 A (2) (a). The use of the words 'the same meaning' occurring in Art. 31-A (2) (a) shows that one must first ascertain what is the meaning of the expression 'estate' occurring in the record of rights and then apply that meaning in construing that expression occurring in Art. 31-A (2) (a). ILR (1957) Cut 299 : A I R 1957 Orissa 247 (252) (Pt C) (Pr 12) (DB).

● ——Arts. 31, 31-A and 31-B—Constitutional validity of Punjab Consolidation of Land Proceedings (Validation) Act (6 of 1954).

The very preamble of the Act says that it is meant to provide for extinguishment and modification of rights in an estate without payment of compensation and as any deprivation of property would be covered by Art. 31, the Act would be void as violative of that article unless sub-Art. (2-A) or Art. 31-A can be pressed into service. The protection afforded by the latter provision does not avail because such lands or parcels thereof in Punjab State as are not assessed separately to land revenue and which do not form units by themselves cannot be brought within the meaning of 'estate' as defined by Art. 31-A.

'Estate' is a legal expression which forms the unit of revenue, assessment and administration in the Punjab, with separate record of rights and (ii) where more than one person own the same estate under the Punjab Land Revenue Act of 1887, which also applies to the Punjab Tenancy Act of 1887. Article 31-B was introduced only because Art. 31-A was considered not sufficient to cover the particular enactments validated by Art. 31 B.

But it cannot be said that because the rights involved in the case are not of intermediaries they will not be covered by the expression "rights" as defined by Art. 31-A (2) (b).

It will not however be open to the owners and the allottees to attack the Act as violative of Art. 31 (2) after the Constitution (Fourth Amendment) Act, 1955 in view of the provisions of Art. 31 (2) (A) whatever might have been the position before the amendment. Further the provisions of Art. 31 (2) are not attracted because the Act does not provide for the ownership or right to possession of any property to the State and hence has made no provision for compulsory acquisition. ● —Arts. 31A (2) (a) — Tenancy laws — Orissa Estates Abolition Act (1 of 1952 as amended by Act 27 of 1954), Ss. 2 (g), 3—Definition of "estate"—Rule of ejusdem generis does not apply to the interpretation of the word "inam".

The ejusdem generis rule is applicable where a wide or general term has to be cut down with reference to the genus of the particular terms which precede the general words. This rule has hardly any application where certain specific categories are 'included' in the definition.

The ejusdem generies rule may be applicable to the general words "other similar grant" in Art 31A (2) (a) and S. 2 (g) in the Orissa Estates Abolition Act, which would take their colour from the particular categories, "Jagir, inam, or muafi" which precede them, but the word "inam" is not subject to the same rule. Once it is held that inams of any kind were included, it makes little difference if the inams were of lands and not of whole villages. So also the fact that the holders of such inams cannot be described as intermediaries, or that they comprised both the melwaram and the kudiwaram rights. Such a distinction would have significance, if the law abolished only intermediaries and not inams which it did.

If the definition of the word "estate" is wide enough to include a minor inam and a notification is issued, the consequences of S. 3 of the Abolition Act must follow. Such a law is not capable of being called in question on the ground that it abridges any fundamental right conferred by Arts. 14, 19 and 31, if it has been assented to by the President. The notification is thus valid, if the law is valid. Sankarshan Ramanuja Das Goswami v. ● —Art. 31-A (2)—Bombay Personal Inams Abolition Act, 1953 (42 of 1953), Ss. 4 and 5 — Inams are 'estates'—Right of inamdar to retain part of full assessment is right in estate.

Inams are 'estates' within the meaning of the expression 'estate' for the purpose of Art. 31 A of the Constitution. And inams being estates, the right of the inamdar to retain part of the full assessment over and above the quit-rent payable to the Government arises because he holds the inam-estate. The right, therefore, can be nothing more than a right in an estate. This is made clear by clause (b) of Art. 31-A (2) for it provides that the rights in relation to an estate would include any rights or privileges in respect of land revenue. Hence, the Bombay Personal Inams Abolition Act, 1953, when it extinguishes or modifies the rights of inamdars in the inam estates is protected by Art. 31 A. Gangadharrao Narayanrao Majumdar v. State of Bombay, 63 Bom L R 511 : (1961) 1 S C R 943 : (1961) 2 S C J 388 : AIR 1961 S C 288 (290) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

● —Arts. 31-A, 245, 246, 294 (b) and 363—Powers of State Legislature to legislate—Extent of—Bombay Merged Territories and Areas (Jagirs Abolition) Act (49 of 1954)—Validity.

The Bombay Merged Territories and Areas (Jagirs Abolition) Act, 1954 was intra vires the States Legislature and the State Legislature was fully competent to enact the impugned Act notwithstanding the terms of guarantee contained in clause 5 of the letter of guarantee accompanying the Merger agreements entered into by the Rulers of the merged States of Bombay with the Dominion Government.

The right of the Government of Bombay to issue any legislation with regard to the enjoyment of the ownership of jagir lands was expressly reserved and this right covered also legislation in regard to the abolition of the jagirs and the Government of Bombay was therefore entitled under the terms of the clause 5 to issue any legislation in regard to the same provided however that such legislation did not discriminate against the State and their subjects.

The legislative competence of the State Legislature can only be circumscribed by express prohibition contained in the Constitution itself and unless and until there is any provision in the Constitution expressly prohibiting legislation on the subject either absolutely or conditionally there is no fetter or limitation on the plenary powers which the State Legislature enjoys to legislate on the topics enumerated in the Lists 2 and 3 of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution.

Under Art. 246 the State Legislature was invested with the power to legislate on the topics enumerated in Lists II and III of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution and this power was by virtue of Article 245 (1) subject to the provisions of the Constitution. The Constitution itself laid down the fetters or limitations on this power, e. g., in Art. 303 or Art. 286 (2). But unless and until the Court came to the conclusion that the Constitution itself had expressly prohibited legislation on the subject either absolutely or conditionally the power of the State Legislature to enact legislation within its legislative competence was plenary. The provisions of Article 294 (b) of the Constitution which is said to have transferred the obligations of the Government of the Province to the State of Bombay would not by involving the transference of the obligation undertaken by the Dominion Government in clause 5 of the letters of guarantee to the State Government impose a fetter or limitation on the legislative competence of the State Legislature to enact legislation on any of the topics enumerated in Lists 2 and 3 of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution. AIR 1943 F C 29, Ref. to.

Even if it could be demonstrated that the provisions of the impugned Act were confiscatory as well as discriminatory the jagirs of the petitioners (except in the case of the petitioner in petition No. 364 of 1954) were also "estates" as defined in Art. 31A (2) (a) and even if the impugned Act provided for the acquisition, extinguishment or modification of estates or of any rights therein, the Act cannot be challenged as void on the ground that it was inconsistent with or took away the fundamental rights under Part III.

Any challenge therefore on the ground of the impugned Act violating the fundamental rights under Article 14 or or Article 19 (1) (f) or Artlcle 31 (2) of the Constitution was not available. On the other hand if the grievance was that the impugned Act had brought about discrimination in breach of clause 5 of letters of guarantee then the dispute clearly arose out of the letters of guarantee and would by Article 363 be placed beyond the juris diction of the Supreme Court. ● ——Art. 31-A — 'Jagir' — Meaning of — Rajasthan Land Reforms and Resumption of Jagirs Act (6 of 1952)—Validity.

All the lands of the State must fall within one or the other of the two categories, Khalsa or jagir; and the essential features of a jagir are that it is held under a grant from the ruler and the grant is of the land revenue. Both in its popular sense and legislative practice the word 'jagir' is used as connoting State grants which conferred on the grantees rights "in respect of land revenue". The word 'jagir' in Article 31-A cannot be construed as limited to its original and primary meaning of a grant made for military service rendered or to be rendered and it cannot be said that accordingly other grants such as maintenance grants made in favour of near relations and dependants would not be covered by it. At the time of the enactment of Article 31-A the word had acquired both in popular usage and legislative practice a wide connotation and it will be in accord with sound canons of interpretation to ascribe that connotation to that word rather than an archaic meaning to be gathered from a study of ancient tenures.

Moreover, the object of Article 31-A was to save legislation which was directed to the abolition of intermediaries so as to establish direct relationship between the State and the tillers of the soil and construing the word in that sense which would achieve that object in a full measure, it must be held that jagir was meant to cover all grants under which the grantees had only rights in respect of revenue and were not the tillers of the soil. Maintenance grants in favour of persons who were not cultivators such as members of the ruling family would be jagirs for purposes of Article 31-A. The impugned Act (Rajasthan Land Reforms and Resumption of Jagirs Act 6 of 1952) does not fall outside the ambit of Article 31-A. Amarsinghji v. State of Rajasthan, (1955) 2 S C R 303 : 1955 S C A 766 : 1955 S C J 523 : AIR 1955 S C 504 (521, 522) (Pt E) (Prs 32, 33, 34).

● ——Art. 31-A—Jagir or other similar grant—Bhomicharas — Rajasthan Land Reforms and Resumption of Jagirs Act (6 of 1952)—Validity.

It is inherent in the very conception of jagir that it should have been granted by the ruling power and that where there is no grant there could be no jagir. This, however, does not mean that the grant must be express. It may be implied. When Jodhpur as a sovereign State imposed its sovereignty over the territory and permitted the ex-rulers to continue in possession of their lands on payment of an annual sum the position was that there was in effect a conquest of the territory and a regrant of the same to the ex-rulers whose title to the lands should thereafter be held to rest on the recognition of it by the ruler of Jodhpur. It is as if the Maharajah of Jodhpur annexed all the territories and re-granted them to the former rulers. They must accordingly be held to derive their title under an implied grant. The status of a person must be either that of a sovereign or a subject. There is no tertum quid. The law does not recognise an intermediate status of a person being partly a sovereign and partly a subject and when once it is admitted that the Bhomicharas had acknowledged the sovereignty of Jodhpur their status could only be that of a subject.

For the purpose of Article 31-A it would make no difference whether the grant is made by the sovereign in the exercise of its prerogative right or by the Legislature in the exercise of its sovereign rights. They were both of them equally within the operation of that Article. Assuming that the Bhomichars did not prior to the enactment of Marwar Act No. 40 of 1949 hold the lands as grantees from the State they must be deemed to hold as State grantees by force of S. 169 of that Act. By long usage and recognition and by the legislative practice of the State Bhomicharas had come to be regarded as jagirdars, and that their tenure is a jagir within the intendment of S. 169. It will, in any event, be "similar proprietary interests" within the language of the section. The word "deemed" imports that in fact there was no grant and therefore interests which were held otherwise than under a grant were obviously intend- to be included.

Therefore if Bhomichara is a proprietary interest, it cannot be taken out of the section because its origin was not in grant. In the result it must be held to fall within S. 169, and therefore within the operation of Article 31-A. Bhomichara is a jagir or other similar grant within the meaning of Article 31-A. The tenure is protected by Article 31-A. Case law, Discussed. Amersinghji v. State of Rajasthan, (1955) 2 S C R 303 : 1955 S C A 766 : 1955 S C J 523 : AIR 1955 S C 504 (523, 525, 526, 527) (Pt F) (Prs 38, 39, 40, 43, 44, 47, 49).

● ——Art. 31-A — Jagir or other similar grant — Bhomias—Rajasthan Land Reforms and Resumption of Jagirs Act (6 of 1952) — Validity — (Mewar Government Kanoon Mal. Act (5 of 1947), S. 106).

The position of the Bhumias in Mewar is in many respects similar to that of Bhomicharas in Marwar. They represent presumbly a section which had occupied the territory by conquest at an earlier stage and when later the rulers of Chittoor and Udaipur established their sovereignty over Mewar, they were allowed to continue in possession of their lands as subjects of the new State Their position is not even as strong as that of the Bhomicharas of Marwar, because it was a condition of the tenure under which they held that they had to render military service when called upon and also to pay quit rent. Their title to the lands is thus referable to an implied grant from the State and their tenure would be jagir even in its stricter connotation. The language of Act 5 of 1947 read as a whole leaves no doubt as to what the legislature intended to do. It declared the State ownership of lands both Khalsa and non-Khalsa lands; and defined the rights of the holders of the non-Khalsa lands and the result of that law was clearly to impress on the Bhom tenure the characteristics of grant. It must accordingly fall within the operation of Article 31-A either as jagir or as other similar grant. The resumption under Act 6 of 1952 would be protected by Article 31-A of the Constitution on the ground that it related to jagirs or other similar grants. Amarsinghji v. State of Rajasthan, (1955) 2 S C R 303 : 1955 S C A 766 : 1955 S C J 523 : AIR 1955 S C 504 (527, 528, 529) (Pt I) (Prs 50, 52, 55).

● ——Art. 31-A — Jagir or other similar grant — Tikanadars of Shekhwati—Rajasthan Land Reforms and Resumption of Jagirs Act (6 of 1952)—Validity.

The true position of the Tikanadars of Shekhwati is that they got into possession of the properties as izardars under the rulers of Jaipur, improved that position latterly and became permanent holders of he estates and were eventually recognised as chiefs subordinate to the Maharajah. They were not like the Bhomicharas of Marwar or the Bhumias of Mewar the previous conquerors and occupants of the territory before they were subjugated by Jaipur; nor were they the clansmen of the ruling dynasty who assisted in the establshment of the Raj. They derived their title to the properties only under grants made by the rulers of Jaipur, and even if their estates could not be considered as they shaped themselves as jagirs, they were at least "other stmilar grants" within Art. 31-A. Section 4 (15) of the Jaipur State-Grants Land Tenures Act No 1 of 1947 defines "State-grant" as including a jagir, muamla, etc. Muamla is the amount payable by the Tikanadars of Shekhwati to the ruler of Jaipur. Section 4 (7) defines an estate as meaning "land comprised in a State grant." According to this definition, the properties in question would be 'estate' as defined in Art. 31 A of the Constitution. Muamla is mentioned as item 6 in the schedule, and where that is the name under which the tenure of the petitioner is known, it must he held that his lands are within the purview of Art. 31 A. The position is that the petitioner who is admittedly a subeguzar holds under a grant from the State and falls within Art. 31-A. The fact that the family of the petitioners had always enjoyed a special distinction in that the adoption in the ruling house of Jaipur was always made from among the members in this family would not affect the status of subeguzars who must be held to be grantees from the State. ——Art. 31-A — Applicability to Bombay Personal Inams Abolition Act (42 of 1953).

Inam is only one of the estates referred to in Cl. (2) of Art. 31-A The estate contemplated by Art. 31-A is a tenure or a right in property, which tenure or right is defined as estate under any local law dealing with land tenures; and in the Land Revenue Code 'estate' is defined in S. 3 (5) as meaning any interest in lands and aggregate if such interest vested in a person or aggregate of persons capable of holding the same. Therefore, it is clear that under Art. 31 A, power is given to the State to extinguish or acquire any interest in any land. The Land Revenue Code does not specify the nature or the character or kind of interest in land. If there is any interest in land, whatever its nature it would constitute 'estate' within the meaning of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, and the whole object and intention of amending the Constitution was to provide for, if necessary, expropriation of interest in land by the State. Therefore it is clear that Art. 31-A, applies to Bombay Inams Abolition Act and if that article applies, then the legislation which falls under that article is not subject to a challenge on the ground that it takes away or abridges the fundamental rights of those who are affected by that legislation. 56 Bom L R 1062 : ILR 1955 Bom 127 : AIR 1955 Bom 28 (31) (Pt A) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Art. 31-A (2) (a) — Other similar grant – Orissa Estates Abolition Act (1 of 1952)—Validity.

Though the original Ruler of Gangpur was only a suzerain and not a sovereign of the chiefs of Hemgir, and Sarapgarh, in the course of time he become the sovereign and the chiefs of Hemgir and Sarapgarh became merely his subjects. Hence, these zamindaris are 'implied grants' from the Ruler of Gangpur and as such would come within the latter part of the definition of the expression 'estate' as given in Art. 31-A (2) (a) of the Constitution. They would therefore get the protection of that Article and the Orissa Estates Abolition Act cannot be challenged on the ground that it contravenes the other fundamental rights described in Part III of the Constitution. AIR 1955 SC 504, Foll. I L R (1957) Cut 299 : AIR 1957 Orissa 247 (252, 253) (Pt D) (Pr 13) (DB).

——Art. 31-A (2) (a) — Orissa Estates Abolition Act, 1951 (I of 1952), Ss. 2 (g) and 3 (1) –Madras Estates

Land Act, 1908 (1 of 1908), S. 3 (2) — 'Estates shall include any jagir', etc.—Import of—Applicability of ejusdem generis principle—Estate, if includes pre-settlement minor inams—(Interpretation of Statutes) —(Constitution of India, Pre.)

The inclusive definition is used to enlarge the meaning of words or phrases occurring in the body of the statute, though in some instances the word 'include' may be used in a restrictive sense by way of illustrating what has been said before. But there can be no doubt that in Art. 31-A (2) (a) the word 'include' has been used in an expansive sense. (1899) A C 99 (105, 106), Rel. on.

The use of the words "and", "also", and "any" would show that though some classes of jagir, inam or muafi grant may not come within the definition of "estate" as given in the law of land tenures in a particular area, the makers of the Constitution intended that all classes of jagirs, inams and muafi grants should be construed as 'estates' and hence deliberately widened the definition of that expression by saying that it shall also include any jagir, inam or muafi.

The ejusdem generis construction has absolutely no application so far as the construction of "inam" in Art. 31-A (2) (a) is concerned. I L R (1957) Cut 1 : AIR 1957 Orissa 96 (99, 100) (Pt E) (Prs 13, 14) (DB).

As Bhomichara jagirdars are paying land revenue and that land revenue is separately assessed with respect to separate parcels of land, their interest in land is an estate within the meaning of the Marwar Land Revenue Act, and, therefore, it is an estate within the meaning of Art. 31-A of the Constitution. ——Art. 31-A — Applicability of to V. P. Abolition of Jagirs and Land Reforms Act (11 of 1953), S. 11.

In view of the definition of Jagir and the use of the word resumption, it is clear that Art. 31-A, applies to the V. P. Abolition of Jagirs and Land Reforms Act, 1953, and thus bars all the objections to the validity of the Act based on the contravention of Art. 31 (2), or on the adequacy or reasonableness of the compensation. The words "other intermediary" in Art. 31-A (2) (b) of the Constitution point to the conclusion that the proprietor, sub-proprietor, under-proprietor, tenure holder, raiyat, under-raiyat mentioned in that clause are persons who are intermediaries and not tenants cultivating the land. The word "tenure-holders" as used in that clause must be interpreted in that sense. And unless a person is shown to be a tenure-holder within the meaning of the expression in Art. 31 A, that article cannot save Cl. (ee) of S. 14 of the U. P. ——Art. 31-A — 'Rights' — Meaning of — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (47 of 1948), S. 34 (2-A) —Section, if extinguishes or modifies rights.

Under clause (2) (b) of Art. 31-A, the expression 'rights' in relation to an estate' shall include any rights vesting in a proprietor, sub-proprietor, under-proprietor, tenure holder or other intermediary and any rights or privileges in respect of land revenue. The right of a landlord in any agricultural land governed by the provisions of the Bombay Land Revenue Code is, by S 3 (5), an estate, and the right of the landlord to terminate the tenancy of a tenant in occupation and to obtain possession is a right in an estate. But the restriction sought to be placed upon the right of the landlord by the impugned provision, viz., S. 34 (2A) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act does not amount to extinguishment or modification of that right.

The modification which is contemplated by Art. 31 A is a modification in the proprietary right and not in the method for enforcement of the right. The landlords's right to terminate the tenancy and to claim possession from a protected tenant for purposes mentioned in S. 34 remains suspended, but mere suspension of the right of the landlord is not extinguishment or modification of the proprietary right. ——Art. 31-A (2) (b) — Scope of — 'Other intermediary' — Land cultivated by raiyats or under-raiyats as tenants — Acquisition of — Tenancy Laws — West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act (1 of 1954), S. 52).

Section 52 of the Act is not ultra vires, in so far as it includes the rights of a raiyat who is not a true intermediary, but is in actual possession of the land, because the provisions of Art. 31-A (2) (b) as they stand at present, enable the acquisition of the entire interest of raiyats and under-raiyats, in the same manner as a true intermediary. It is clear that the Fourth Amendment did not intend that raiyats or under-raiyats should any longer be treated differently from true intermediaries. Secondly, Art. 31-A enables 'any' estate or 'any' right to an estate to be acquired by the State. The principle of ejusdem generis cannot be applied because the persons or classes of persons enumerated before, do not belong to the same genus. Thus proprietors are a class widely different from tenure holders, who in turn are quite different from raiyats or under-raiyats. The word 'proprietary right' for purposes of revenue is loosely used, and includes not only the actual proprietor but also tenants. Therefore S. 52 of the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act in so far as it includes the rights of a raiyat who is not a true intermediary but is in actual possession of the land is not ultra vires. AIR 1958 Cal 143 (146) (Pt B) (Pr 8).

——Art. 31-A — Zamindary abolition laws — West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act (1 of 1954), Chap. 6 and S. 52 — Amendment of — Validity — Acquisition of rights of raiyats and under-raiyats in possession — Legality.

Under Chap. 6 of the West Bengal Act, the provisions of the Act are applicable to raiyats and under-raiyats, not as intermediaries, but 'as if' they were intermediaries. In other words, it is a deeming provision and the Court is bound to give effect to that legal fiction. AIR 1953 S C 244, Rel. on.

Under Chap. 6, as framed after the amendment in 1955, there is no longer any difference between the raiyats and under-raiyats and other true intermediaries, and lands held by them must be deemed to be estates or right in estates which will vest in the state, giving the raiyats and under-raiyats the same rights as other intermediaries, of holding a specified area of land. etc., as laid down in S. 6 of the Act. Coming to the provisions contained in Art. 31-A (2) (b) of the Constitution, it does not appear that the Fourth Amendment intended only to affect the rights of the raiyats and under-raiyats in the limited sense, so as to exclude from its protection laws in so far as they affect the rights of raiyats and under-raiyats who are in possession of the land. Judging from the objects and reasons of the Fourth Amendment, there was no question of affecting the rights of the raiyat and under-raiyat partially. 62 Cal W N 14 : AIR 1958 Cal 96 (101, 102) (Pt B) (Pr 15).

——Art 31-A (1) (a) — Intermediaries with right to moveable property — Provision applies to them also.

Any class of intermediaries whether their right is limited to moveable property within an estate or to immoveale property therein, would come within the wide language used in sub-cl. (a) of Cl. (1) of Art. 31-A of the Constitution. The words 'rights in an estate in Art. 31-A (1) (a)' have been deliberately made as wide as could be in order to take in all kinds of rights qualitatively and quantitatively in an area co-extensive with an estate or any portion thereof. The expression "rights" in relation to an estate has been used in a very comprehensive sense including not only interests of proprietors or sub-proprietors but also of lower grade tenants like ryots or under-ryots and the use of the expression 'other intermediary' shows that the enumeration of the intermediaries was only illustrative and not exhaustive : AIR 1952 S C 519, Rel. on. ● ——Art. 31-B, last clause — Effect of — Acts included in 9th Schedule with a view to make them valid can be amended or repealed by State Legislature which passed them.

Per Gajendragadkar, Wanchoo and Raghubar Dayal, JJ. — The effect of the last clause in Art. 31-B is to leave it open to the respective legislatures to repeal or amend the Acts which have been included in the Ninth Schedule. In other words, the fact that the said Acts have been included in the Ninth Schedule with a view to make them valid, does not mean that the legislatures in question which passed the said Acts have lost their competence to repeal them or to amend them. That is one consequence of the said provision. The other inevitable consequence of the said provision is that if a legislature amends any of the provisions contained in any of the said Acts, the amended provision would not receive the protection of Art. 31-B and its validity may be liable to be examined on the merits. It could not be urged that if the cognate provisions of Act 67 of 1948 were immune from attack in regard to their constitutionality, on a parity of reasoning similar provisions contained in the impugned Act, would be similarly saved, because whatever amendments were made by the impugned Act in the 1948 Act were future laws within the meaning of Art. 13 (2) of the Constitution and required to be tested on the self-same touchstone. They would not be in terms saved by Art. 31-B and would have to be scrutinized on their own merits before the Courts came to the conclusion that they were enacted within the constitutional limitations. It is no longer open to any person to question the validity of any provision of the Hyderabad (Abolition of Jagir) Regulation of 1358 F. and the Hyderabad Jagir (Commutation) Regulation of 1359 F. after they have been incorporated in the 9th Schedule of the Constitution by the insertion of Art. 31B in the Constitution by the Constitution First Amendment Act of 1951, Ahmad Un-Nissa v. State, A I R 1953 Hyd 21 (24) (Pt D) (Pr 11) (FB).

● ——Art 31B — Jammu and Kashmir Tenancy Act (2 of 1980) (as amended by Act 12 of 1955), Ss. 15A, 16 (1) 1 (a), 19B, 45, 47 and 49 — Constitutional validity—Provisions, whether contravene Arts. 14, 19 and 31 — Protection under Arts. 31A and 31B whether available. See Tenancy Laws — J. & K. Tenancy Act (2 of 1980) (as amended by Act 12 of 1955), S. 15-A. AIR 1959 J & K 35 (FB).

● ——Art. 31-B, Sch. 9 — Applicability — Arts. 368 and 370—Acts included in Sch. 9 - Amendments to—Protection under Art. 31-B — (Tenancy Laws — J. & K. Tenancy Act 2 of 1980 (as amended by Act 7 of 2005 and 12 of 1955), Ss. 16 (1) (a), 15-A, 19-B, 45, 47 and 49).

The inclusion of an Act or a provision of an Act in the Ninth Schedule undoubtedly must be the result of adequate consideration, by the President in the case of Jammu and Kashmir, and by the Parliament in the case of the rest of India, of the nature and scope of the Act or the provision so included. The physical incorporation in the Ninth Schedule can be only of the Act or the provision as it stood on the date of its incorporation. What was brought into the Act subsequent to that date was therefore outside the scope of the Ninth Schedule and consequently outside the scope of the protection of Art. 31-B.

The President by order made in exercise of the powers conferred by Art 370 (1) of the Constitution inserted on 14th May, 1954, the J. & K. Tenancy Act (2 of 1980) in the Sch. 9 in its application to the State of Jammu and Kashmir. Any provision which was not in the Act on that date cannot therefore be said to be included in that Schedule. A I R 1958 Bom 94, Rel. on.

What is saved by Art. 31-B are the provisions of the Jammu and Kashmir Act as they stood on the 14th day of May 1954, when the Act was included in the Ninth Schedule and not any other or different provision which was enacted by the State legislature subsequent to that date.

An original Act cannot be considered independently of the amendments, because it is inextricably bound up with the amendments. It follows that S. 16 (1) (a) which was inserted in the Act by the amending Act (7 of 2005 (1948 A. D.)) before its inclusion in Sch. 9 of the Constitution is completely protected by Art. 31-B. A I R 1955 Pat 1 and AIR 1952 S C 324, Rel. on. The Jammu and Kashmir Tenancy (Amendment) Act (12 of 1955) was not included in the Ninth Schedule either by the President's Order of 1954 or by the Amending Order of 1958. It follows that such of the sections as were placed on the Statute Book by the Jammu and Kashmir Tenancy (Amendment) Act, 1955, are not saved or validated by Art. 31-B.

The Constitution (Application to Jammu and Kashmir) Second Amendment Order of 1958 has not in any way either expressly or by implication sought to enlarge or alter the scope, nature or content of Entry No. 16, Jammu and Kashmir Tenancy Act (No. 2 of 1980), inserted in the Ninth Schedule by the President's Order of 1954. The Act which was inserted in the Ninth Schedule by the 1954 Order is undoubtedly the same as the one which stands today in that schedule. The additions and alterations to the Act made subsequent to 14th May 1954, stand today as much outside the scope of the Ninth Schedule as they did at any time before the 26th of February 1958, the date on which the Second Amendment Order came into force. The Constitution of India does not exclude Government servants as a class from the protection of the several rights guaranteed by the several Articles in Part III save in those cases where such persons are specifically named. Article 33 of the Constitution having selected the Services, members of which might be deprived of the benefit of the fundamental rights guaranteed to other persons and citizens and also having prescribed the limits within which such restrictions or abrogation might take place, other classes of servants of Government in common with other persons and other citizens of the country cannot be excluded from the protection of the rights guaranteed by Part III by reason merely of their being Government servants and the nature and incidents of the duties which they have to discharge in that capacity might necessarily involve restrictions of certain freedom in relation to Art. 19 (1) (e) and (g). ●——Arts. 35 (c) (applicable to Jammu and Kashmir) and 370 (1) (c) and (d) — Validity of Art. 35 (c) —(Constitution (Application to Jammu and Kashmir), Order, 1954).

Article 370 (1) (c) and (d) authorizes the President by Order to specify the exceptions and modifications to the provisions of the Constitution (other than Arts. 1 and 370) subject to which the Constitution shall apply to the State of Jammu and Kashmir. Hence, Cl. (c) added to Art. 35 only so far as the State of Jammu and Kashmir is concerned by the Constitution (Application to Jammu and Kashmir) Order, 1954, promulgated by the President cannot be said to be in excess of the powers conferred by Art. 370 (1).

There are no provisions of any law which require that the Prime Minister of Jammu and Kashmir himself should sign the copy of the order to be served on the detenu or the copy of the order which is forwarded to the officer in charge of the jail where he was detained. ——Arts. 35, 13, 17, 372 — U. P. Removal of Social Disabilities Act, 1947, not void (U. P. Removal of Social Disabilities Act (14 of 1947), S. 1).

Article 35 which is not retrospective in operation withdraws from the States the power of making any enactment relating to acts which are declared to be offences under the Constitution after the commencement of the Constitution. It does not render null and void any legislation which had already been passed before the commencement of the Constitution. Hence, even assuming that the U. P. Removal of Social Disabilities Act, 1947, deals with disability arising out of untouchability, it is not invalid as it is an Act which was already on the statute book before the Constitution came into force.

Further it cannot be said that anything in the U. P. Removal of Social Disabilities Act which was already on the statute book is inconsistent with the provisions of Part III of the Constitution and is thus affected by Art. 13. The U. P. Act, therefore still remains in force under Art. 372 and has not become void by anything contained in the Constitution. 1953 All L J 211 : 1953 Cri L J 1103 : AIR 1953 All 483 (484, 485) (Pt D) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

Clause (c) added to Art. 35 of the Constitution by the President by Para. 4 (1) (iii) of the Constitution (Application to Jammu and Kashmir) Order 1954 is not in excess of the powers conferred on the President by Art. 370 (1) (d) of the Constitution of India. Hence, the Proviso to Cl. (1) of S. 8. ● ——Arts. 35 (c) and 13 (as applied to Jammu and Kashmir) — Fundamental rights—Curtailment of, with respect to preventive detention in Jammu and Kashmir—(Public Safety—Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act (2011), S. 3).

Per Wazir, C. J.—The effect of Art. 35 (c) is that the Jammu and Kashmir Preventive Detention Act is excepted from the operation of the fundamental rights. Further, as the word "modify', used in Art. 370, means to change and to limit, the President has limited the operation of Art. 13 under his powers to modify. Mohammad Subhan v. State. 1956 Cr L J 48 : AIR 1956 J & K 1 (4) (Pt D) (Prs 9, 10) (FB).

● ——Arts. 35 (c) and 370 (1) (d) (as applied to Jammu and Kashmir) — Provision of Art 35 (c) is covered by word 'modification' used in Art. 370 (1) (d).

While in general the word 'modification' has been interpreted to mean 'tone down, soften rigours of, assuage or to limit', it has also been interpreted in the sense of enlarging the scope of the previous Act.

And as the essential purpose of Art. 370 is to be ascertained from the article itself rather than by travelling beyond its scope and determining what the policy behind the different provisions of the Constitution contained in its different parts is, the provision contained in cl. (c) added to Art. 35 by the President is covered by the term 'modification' as used in Art. 370 (1) (d) of the Constitution. Mohammad Subhan v. ——Arts. 37 and 48 — Directive principles of State policy —Value of —Establishment of slaughter house by State— Objection on the ground that cows also be slaughtered—Maintainability.

Although the directive principles of State Policy are fundamental in the governance of the country and it shall be the duty of the State to apply these principles in making laws, none of them can be enforced by a Court of law. The directive as to prohibition of slaughter of cows, calves and other milch and draught cattle is not absolute. The protection recommended by Art. 48 is confined to cows and calves and those other animals which are presently or potentially capable of yielding milk or doing work as draught cattle but does not extend to cattle which were at one time milch or draught cattle but has ceased to be such. Consequently so long as laws are not made under the one or other of the directives, an executive action for establishment of a slaughter-house, where cows may also be slaughtered, cannot necessarily be condemned as violating the directive principles. —— Art. 37—Directive principles—Value of.

The Directive principles have not been included in our Constitution as mere idle words intended to serve purely as decorative phrases. They are an important and integral part of our Constitution designed to conform to and run as subsidiary to the fundamental rights enshrined in the Constitution. When interpreting statutory provisions the Courts are not expected to ignore these principles of State Policy, because the Legislature must be presumed to bear in mind and be governed bv these principles while enacting laws and not to violate or lose sight of them. ——Art. 37 — Directive principles are to be kept in view when enacting laws.

——Arts. 38, 39, 289 and 19 — Functions of State — It can carry on the business of plying motor vehicles for hire on commercial basis.

It is now idle to contend that trade or business is not a legitimate function of the State or that it departs preposterously from its sovereign function when it indulges in those activities. The State which had in earlier times for its functions defence, police, law and order, can now guarantee many other public services and the entry of the Pepsu Government, in pursuance of its economic policy, in the business of motor transport does not suffer from any legal or other disqualification. AIR 1956 Pepsu 3 (5, 6) (Pt B) (Prs 7, 8).

——Arts. 38, 39, 289, 19 and 298—State can do transport business on commercial basis without legislative sanction.

The provisions of Arts. 19, 38, 39, 289 and 298 of the Constitution authorise the State to take to business in which transport business is apparently included. In that view of the law no legislative sanction to start or run the business of plying motor vehicles for hire would be necessary. No specific Act is therefore necessary to validate the running of motor buses by it particularly when legislative sanction in the form of the necessary Appropriation Act to incur expenditure on the venture and consequent implicit approval of the State Assembly has already been obtained and this should be enough to serve the purpose of making a specific law. The Constitution which has in Art. 38 sought to secure justice to the citizens as a top priority has also, for this purpose, vested in the High Courts very wide power of judicial supervision and superintendence over all Tribunals and Courts in the State. This power imposes on the High Court a grave and sacred responsibility and invests in it an unlimited and unfathomable reserve of judicial power of supervision and control over all Courts and tribunals in the State concerned. The limitation of this power is only to be found in the Constitution itself and it is self-imposed by the High Court. No external limits, fetters or restrictions have been placed on this power by the express language of Art. 227. It is to be exercised only according to well-recognised judicial principles and with restraint and caution. ILR (1959) Punj 1778 : AIR 1960 Punj 35 (39) (Pt B) (Pr 6).

——Art. 40 — G. O. Ms. No. 334, Local Administration, dated 2-3-1956 (Andhra) — Validity. See Panchayats — Madras Village Panchayats (Andhra Second Amendment) Act, (1955), S. 22. AIR 1957 Andhra Pra 355.

——Art. 40 — Organisation of village panchayats — Administrative officers — How to act — Expression of law—Importance of clear language.

If the object and purpose of Panchayat Legislation in pursuance of the Directive Principle contained in Art. 40 is not to be defeated and if rural India is to be properly educated and trained in imbibing democratic temper in organising and working the Panchayats as healthy units of self-Government then petty power politics should scrupulously be eliminated; and the administrative officers dealing with the Panchayat elections should possess a proper judicial mind adequately detached from off the record influences like prejudice and sympathy, official or personal. They should also have requisite knowledge of the relevant law, so that the citizens whose rights are dealt with by them, may have faith and confidence in the efficaciousness and impartiality of the quasi-judicial process. Justice, even when administered by administrative officers, should be seen to be done.

In a country where rule of law prevails, it is of the utmost importance that law is expressed in plain and clear language and an endeavour should always be made to avoid ambiguities and lacunae. This indeed is the sine qua non for the success of Rule of law and for inculcating democratic temper in the citizens, both in private and official spheres. 67 Punj LR 1238: ILR (1968) 1 Punj 347 : AIR 1966 Punj 274 (282) (Pt D) (Prs 24, 26) (DB).

——Arts. 40, 50 — Organisation of village panchayats — Principle of separation of executive from judiciary must be observed

According to the directive principle contained in Art. 40 of the Constitution, the State is undoubtedly expected to take steps to organise village Panchayat and endow them with such power and authority as may be necessary to enable them to function as units of self government, but the directive principle of separation of the executive from the judiciary contained in Art. 50, which from one point of view may be considered more basic, must also be kept in view and attempt should be made properly to harmonise both of them. The organisation of village Panchayats accordingly deserves to be carried out in practice consistently with Art. 50; in any case, it has to be confined within the orbit of the rule of law, for, there is nothing more fundamental in democracy than this rule of law. 67 Pun L R 134 : AIR 1965 Punj 232 (235, 236) (Pt G) (Pr 12).

——Art. 41 — Scope.

The directive principle contained in Art. 41 can have no application in the decision of a dispute between workers and employers. It is a general direction or behest which the framers of the Constitution have given to the succeeding Governments to see that in the welfare State what is contemplated by the Constitution there shall be no undeserved want or ll employment. It may be that under certain circumstances there is a duty or liability cast upon the State Government to find work for all persons in the State. But we have not yet reached such a happy state of existence. (1954) 1 M L J 266 : AIR 1954 Mad 686 (690) (Pt C) (Pr 11).

● ——Art. 43 — Wages — Fair wages and living wages — Meaning of—Directive principle of living wages.

The concept of fair wages involves a rate sufficiently high to enable the worker to provide 'a standard family with food, shelter, clothing, medical care and education of children appropriate to his status in life but not at a rate exceeding the wage earning capacity of the class of establishment concerned.' Thus a fair wage is related to a fair workload and the earning capacity. Living wage means that every male earner should be able to provide for his family not only the essentials but a fair measure, of frugal comfort and an ability to provide for old age or evil days. Fair wage lies between the concept of minimum wage and the concept of living wage. Though our directive principle as laid down in Art. 43 of the Constitution is living wage, our general wage structure has at best reached to lower levels of fair wage. There is no conflict between the different parts of Art. 48 and indeed the two last directives for preserving and improving the breeds and for the prohibition of slaughter of certain specified animals represent, as is indicated by the words 'in particular' two special aspects of the preceding general directive for organising agriculture and animal husbandry on modern and scientific lines. Whether the last two directives are ancillary to the first or are separate and independent items of directives, the directive for taking steps for preventing the slaughter of the animals contemplates a ban on the slaughter of the several categories of animals specified therein, namely, cows and calves and other cattle which answer the description of milch or draught cattle. The protection recommended by this part of the directive does not, from the very nature of the purpose for which it is obviously recommended, extend to cattle which at one time were milch or draught cattle but which have ceased to be such. —Arts. 51, 37, 31 — Art. 17 of Universal Declaration of Human rights—Effect of.

The Indian Constitution has not adopted any of the provisions of the Declaration of Human Rights without modification and Art. 51 being in the Chapter dealing with Directive Principles is not enforceable in the High Court in view of the express bar of Art. 37. A Judge of a High Court is bound by the oath of his office to uphold the Constitution. Doubtless if there is no express provision in the Constitution like Art. 31 or 31-A the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights might possibly be invoked in favour of the petitioners, on the doctrine of the wise use of public policy. But where Art. 31 expressly bars the jurisdiction of the Court to question the adequacy of compensation. it is futile to rely on Art. 17 (2) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The provisions of the Declaration of Human Rights where they conflict with the provisions of the Constitution will be of no avail in municipal Courts. I L R (1957) Cut 299 : A I R 1957 Orissa 247 (255, 256) (Pt H) (Pr 23) (DB).

—Art. 51—Treaties — Extradition treaty between Maharaja of Indian State and British Government not incorporated in municipal law of State— If binding on subject.

Treaties, which are part of the International law, do not form part of the law of the land, unless expressly made so by the legislative authority. If a Maharaja of an Indian State enters into an extradition treaty with the British Government, his act is an executive act and the treaty, to have a binding effect upon a subject, has to be incorporated into a Municipal law. The fact that the Maharaja is the highest executive as well as the legislative authority does not mean that any executive act of the Maharaja amounts to a legislative act. A subject cannot be bound by a mere treaty not incorporated into municipal law on the principle of reciprocity simply because it has been incorporated into the Municipal law of the other State, with which the treaty has been entered into, or because there is a statutory law regarding extradition in the latter State. ● ——Art. 51 – Sovereign State – Power to acquire foreign territory as well as cede national territory in exercise of treaty-making power—Implementation of.

It is an essential attribute of sovereignty that a sovereign State can acquire foreign territory and can, in case of necessity, cede a part of its territory in favour of a foreign State, and this can be done in exercise of its treaty-making power. Cession of national territory in law amounts to the transfer of sovereignty over the said territory by the owner State in favour of another State. The question as to how treaties can be made by a sovereign State in regard to a cession of national territory and how treaties when made can be implemented would be governed by the provisions in the Constitution of the Country. Stated broadly the treaty-making power would have to be exercised in the manner contemplated by the Constitution and subject to the limitations imposed by it. Whether the treaty made can be implemented by ordinary legislation or by constitutional amendment will naturally depend on the provisions of the Constitution itself. ——Art. 51—Sovereign State — Characteristics of— India before Independence Act — Status of — Right to acquire territory by cession— Frenchpet whether became part of territories of India — (Indian Independence Act (10 and 11, Geo. Vic. 307 (1947), S. 2) — (Municipalities — Madras District Municipalities Act (5 of 1920), S. 12.

States are of two kinds, either independent or dependent. An independent or sovereign state is one which possessess a separate existence, being complete in itself, and not merely a part of a larger whole to whose Government it is subject. A dependent or non-sovereign State, on the other hand, is one which is not thus complete and self-existent, but is merely a constituent portion of a greater State which includes both it and others, and to whose Government it is subject.

Until the Independence Act of 1947, in and by which India became a Dominion, it might fairly have been regarded as dependant and as merely part of the British Empire, though possessed of wide powers of self-government. But the argument that India being then a dependency, could not acquire foreign territory involves a fallacy. The British Crown was exercising absolute sovereignty over the territories which were comprised in and were part of British India and undoubtedly, the British Crown, as a sovereign power could acquire territory by cession: AIR 1941 P C 64, Rel. on.

By 1935 Frenchpet was part of the territory of India over which the British Crown made its will supreme and from which all alien interference was excluded. The transfer of the territory to India by the French Republic was an accomplished fact which was accepted as such both by the French Republic and the British Crown. Therefore Frenchpet was undoubtedly a part of the territory of the Indian Dominion by reason of the provision of the Indian Independence Act as it was part of the territories which were under the sovereignty of the British Crown before the appointed day.

After the Independence Act of 1947 India became a full-fledged Dominion with all the attributes of a Sovereign State both in the international and in the internal sphere and therefore the contention that in spite of the advance of the Dominion to international status, no treaty in the full sense of that term could be concluded save under full powers granted by the King on the advice of the Imperial Government and that no treaty could become operative without the ratification of the King which again was accorded by the advice of the Imperial Government, formally signified in each case by the counter signature of the Secretary to State has no substance.

As a consequence it must be held that the provisions of the Madras District Municipalities Act apply to the former Frenchpet which as early as 1935 was declared to be a part of Masulipatam. 1957 An L T 663: AIR 1958 Andh Pra 73 (74, 75) (Prs 11, 12, 13, 15, 21, 22, 24).

——Art. 51—Foreign State—Immunity of, from suit —Extent and nature of.

The English decisions establish certain principles, viz., that the principles of immunity should be applied with respect to the legislative acts of a foreign state, the executive and administrative acts of a foreign state and in the matter of diplomatic immunities; the Courts of a state should not require other states to enforce foreign public or fiscal law; the Courts will not assume jurisdiction when a foreign government is made a party either directly or indirectly as the result of an action in rem against property in its possession; the foreign state should not be placed in a position less advantageous than that of private individuals where according to rules of private international law Courts would have no jurisdiction ; the principle of immunity is not an absolute one and the circumstances and the purpose of the suit and the remedy sought are to be looked into.

The plaintiff filed a suit for damages with leave under Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent (Cal) against two defendants, one of them being the United Arab Republic, a foreign state, recognised as such by the Central Government of India, in respect of a breach of contract for supply of tea entered into through defendant. 2. The defendant 1 applied for revocation of leave under Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent on the ground that the defendant 1 being a foreign state could not be impleaded in a suit in India on the principle of absolute immunity.

Held, (i) that the defendant was not entitled to immunity in the suit because firstly there is no principle of absolute immunity. Secondly, the nature of the transaction in the present case was one where the suit did not disregard the legislative or administrative sovereignty of the foreign state. Thirdly, the suit did not seek to enforce foreign public or fiscal law. Fourthly, the claim in respect of the contract forming the subject-matter of the suit was of a commercial nature and such a transaction was not entitled to immunity. Fifthly, where the rule of law prevails, the foreign state ought to be entitled to such immunity, but no more, as enjoyed by the domestic state before its own tribunal.

(ii) That irrespective of the question whether the defendant was entitled to immunity, the defendant had submitted to the jurisdiction as there was appearance to writ in the sense of initiation of proceedings and asking for relief on the basis of application. AIR 1960 Cal 768 (774, 775, 776) (Pt B) (Prs 27, 31, 32).

——Art. 51 — Foreign Sovereign State — Immunity from process—Submission to jurisdiction—(Civil P. C. (1908), S. 9).

Where the Republic of Indonesia by its application for leave to be examined pro interesse suo, came forward to establish its title to the goods in question as against the adverse claim of the plaintiff in the suit and also asked the Court to investigate into the question of title of the Republic and the Court ordered an inquiry as asked for, and gave certain directions as to costs of that application and further in order that the pro interesse proceedings may be effective the Republic applied for issue of Letters of Request to examine witnesses in Holland, to prove its title the Republic must be said to have submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court and to have waived its privilege to claim immunity from the jurisdiction of the Court on the ground that the said goods being the public property of the Republic, which was a foreign sovereign State, were immune from the legal process of the Courts in this country according to recognised principles of international law and comity of nations. AIR 1955 Cal 491 (493, 494) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 12).

——Art. 51—Foreign Sovereign State—Title to goods—Proof.

Mere assertion of a claim by a Foreign Sovereign to a property which is not admittedly vested in him or which is not in his possession cannot attract the principle of immunity from the legal processes of the Municipal Courts of the country. The doctrine of immunity does not extend to cases where the property is in the hands of a third person and the foreign sovereign has merely made a claim to it. AIR 1955 Cal 491 (495) (Pt B) (Prs 23, 24).

——Art. 51 — Foreign Sovereign State — Title to goods—Proof—Immunity.

Foreign State holding Bill of Lading under which goods in question were shipped—Charterer of vessel who issued Bill of Lading and with whom goods were entrusted for carriage being in position of bailee in respect of the goods — Held that though the State was not in actual physical possession of the goods when they were on board the vessel or its representatives mentioned in the Bill of Lading having the immediate right to possession of the goods, this was sufficient to attract the principle of immunity from interference by the Municipal Court. AIR 1955 Cal 491 (495) (Pt C) (Prs 25, 27).

——Art. 51 — Foreign Sovereign State — Title to goods—Proof.

A certificate by the Government of the country that the Foreign State was entitled to immunity from processes of the Courts of the country in respect of its goods obtained by means of correspondence between the Foreign Sovereign State and the Government of this country cannot be described as a thing altogether unknown or irregular. AIR 1955 Cal 491 (495) (Pt D) (Pr 29).

——Art 51 — Sovereign of Independent State—Submission to jurisdiction (Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 9, 13, 14, 86, 87).

Bharatpur State after its accession, which took place before the suits were filed, became a part and parcel of India, so far as the subjects given in the Schedule to the Instrument of Accession were concerned. After the accession, therefore, the Dominion of India could not be said to be an independent foreign State vis-a-vis Bharatpur State or vice versa. Moreover, tho Dominion of India waived the privilege of immunity from suit in Bharatpur State Courts by filing a written statement not only on the point of jurisdiction, but also on all the points relating to the merits of the case, and by making appearance and fighting out the case on all grounds thereafter. The case of a foreign sovereign is not governed by Ss. 86 or 87 of Civil P. C. 1953 Raj L. W 26 : ILR (1952) Raj 386 (DB).

——Art. 51 — Merger of States—Covenant, dated 5th May, 1948 for establishment of Pepsu Union, Arts. 6, 10 — Effect — Rulers of merging States not competent to enter into Supplementary Covenant, dated 9th April, 1949 — Constitution of India, Art. 362.

Per Majority. — When the new State of Pepsu was formed on 20th August, 1948, in accordance with the Covenant entered into by the Rulers of the merging States on 5th May, 1948, the eight States which had merged into it ceased to exist as independent persona and there could be no question thereafter of sovereignty of such States or its ex-Rulers. The Rulers cannot be said to have had any authority to enter into any Supplementary Covenant on 9th April, 1949.

The Raj Pramukh had the power under Art. 10 of the Covenant 'to make and promulgate Ordinances for the peace and good government of the Union or any part thereof.' There is no reservation whatsoever in the grant of the power to the new Ruler. Then follows the provision that the Ordinance is to be in force for a period not exceeding six months. The effect of this is not to keep back from the Raj Pramukh any portion or field of legislative power. Under Art. 6, all the powers of the Rulers are to vest in the Union, and even if the whole of the legislative power is not exercisable by the Raj Pramukh by reason of Art. 10, it is in the Union that the residue of the power must be held to be lodged and not with the Rulers.

As the effect of the original Covenant is to completely divest the Rulers of their sovereign power there can be no question of their entering into any treaty thereafter. The Supplementary Covenant entered into by the ex-Rulers of the Covenanting States on 9th April, 1949 cannot therefore be sustained on the principle of International Law.

Hence, the Supplementary Covenant, dated 9th April, 1949 whereby Art. 10 of the original Covenant was amended by omitting the words for the space of not more than 6 months from its promulgation, the result of which would be that the laws which had been brought into force by Ordinances I and 16 of 2005 (Bk.), including the Patiala Recovery of State Dues Act, 4 of 2002 (Bk.), would not lapse on 20th August, 1949 on the expiry of 6 months from the date of their promulgation, cannot be held to be effective for modifying the provisions in the original Covenant. AIR 1959 Punj 440, Reversed; AIR 1953 Pepsu 161, Overruled; AIR 1954 S C 447, Expl, and Disting.

In that view, Ordinances I and 16 of 2005 (Bk.) ceased to be in operation from 20th August, 1949. But that fact would not affect the liability of persons coming from the territory of the erstwhile State of Patiala, under the Patiala Recovery of State Dues Act (4 of 1002). So far as the territories of the erstwhile State of Patiala are concerned, its laws continued to be in force proprio vigore and not by force of Ordinances I or 16 of 2005 (Bk), Lachhman Dass v. State of Punjab, (1963) 2 S C R 353 : A I R 1963 S C 222 (229, 230, 231, 232) (Pt A) (Prs 11, 12, 14, 15, 17, 19).

——Art. 51 — Gwalior State — Status of, before the Constitution — (Government of India Act (1935), S. 5 (as amended by Indian Provisional Constitution Order (1947)).

The result of the coming into force of the Indian Independence Act, 1947, was to make the State of Gwalior completely independent and confirm its foreign character more forcibly than ever before while it was under the protection of the British Crown. Neither the Standstill agreement nor the first Instrument of Accession signed by the Ruler made a material change in the position. The Covenant which the Ruler later on entered into with the other Rulers for the formation of the larger State of Madhya Bharat did not also effect any change in the foreign character of the Gwalior State. The second Instrument of Accession signed by the Ruler also did not change the foreign character of the State. It was only when the Constitution of India came into force and by the virtue of the earlier proclamation, dated 24th November, 1949, adopting it for the State that the State no longer remained a foreign State for purposes of politics or international law. It is therefore not possible to accept the contention that in view of S. 5 of the Government of India Act, 1935 as amended by the Indian Provisional Constitution Order, 1947, the territories of the State had become at a par with the provinces merely because of the accession and could not be treated as foreign State for any purpose. The territories of the Gwalior State must be held to have been a foreign State vis a-vis Allahabad until 26th January, 1950. AIR 1958 All 775 (781, 782) (Pt B) (Prs 16, 21, 23) (DB).

——Art. 51—Merger — Liability of merged State as shareholder—Whether devolves on successor State — Recognition—Effect.

A subject or inhabitant of a merged State can enforce against the successor State such rights as are recognized by that State Such recognition can be express or implied. AIR 1955 S C 540 and AIR 1924 P. C. 216 and Spec. Civil Application No. 3251 of 1958, dated 22-4-1959 (Bom.), Rel. on.

The former State of Idar purchased preference and ordinary shares of 2 lakhs of rupees in a private limited company in that State. Only half of the share money of the ordinary shares was called and the State paid that amount. A balance of Rs. 50,000 was the unpaid call in respect of those shares. Later, the State of Idar as share-holders entered into possession of all the properties of the company. Thereafter, the State of Bombay, as successor State, took possession of the properties of the company. The company was subsequently compulsorily wound up. The liquidator made an application to the Court, claiming from the State of Bombay the unpaid call of Rs. 50,000.

Held, that by implication the State of Bombay accepted the liability of the merged State to pay the unpaid call money on shares. The State of Bombay as the successor State was bound by the same obligation by which the State of Idar was bound. Alternatively, it can be said that the State of Bombay could not be allowed to assert their rights as share-holders but dispute the liabilities arising from the fact that they were the share-holders. 62 Bom L R 400 : (1960) 30 Com Cas 491 : AIR 1960 Bom 516 (518) (Pt A) (Pr 9) (DB).

——Art. 51—International Law—Merger of States—Effect.

When a State merges voluntarily into another State the latter remains one and the same International Person and the former becomes totally extinct as an International Person. As to the devolution of political rights and duties no succession takes place with regard to the rights and duties of the extinct State arising either from the character of the latter as an International Person or from its purely political treaties. Thus treaties of alliance or of arbitration or of neutrality or of any other political nature fall to the ground with the extinction of the State which concluded them. They are personal treaties and they naturally, legally and necessarily presupposes the existence of the contracting State. ('65) 69 Cal W N 692.

——Art. 51—Merger of States—Power of new sovereign to repudiate rights which subjects had under old sovereign.

For waiver or relinquishment there must be full knowledge and the act alleged to constitute waiver or relinquishment must be of the person entitled to exercise the right or power which is waived or relinquished. In order, therefore, to establish waiver or relinquishment against the Government of Bombay, it must be shown that the Officer whose act is alleged to constitute waiver or relinquishment had full knowledge of the facts and of the prerogative or sovereign power of the Government of Bombay to ignore or repudiate the particular rights in question and further the officer had the authority to waive or relinquish such prerogative or sovereign power on behalf of the Government. ——Art. 51 — Merger of States — Rights of subjects under old Sovereign.

A secret decision of the government recorded in a confidential inter-departmental letter is not enough to constitute repudiation or confiscation of rights of property by an act of State, particularly when the property is in the possession of the person whose rights are alleged to have been extinguished by the act of State, unless the decision is communicated to such person or the possession of the property is forfeited or resumed by the Government. ——Art. 51 (c)—Applicability—Manipur State ordering by resolution confiscation of land — Succeeding Government if can deviate from it—Resolution if operates as law of land.

In 1949 the Manipur State Council passed a resolution that the patta granted to certain persons was against the customary law of State, namely, that no one shall hold more than 10 paris of land without the special permission of the State Government. They therefore, directed the Land Revenue Officer to issue notices to all parties concerned to show cause within 30 days from the date of service of the notice, why the patta in respect of land in excess of 10 paris be not cancelled, and if the cause shown be found to be not satisfactory, then to cancel the patta accordingly and to take possession. The succeeding Government, however, passed an order on 24th May 1952, that it would not be fair to proceed to confiscate the land outright after the holders of the patta had been in possession for a long period and that they or their heirs must be allowed to dispose of the land to the actual tenants.

Held, that the order or decision contained in the resolution of 1949 would not operate as the law of land so as to attract the principles of international law contained in Art. 51 (c) of the Constitution, inasmuch as the old Government had the powers to allow the holders to hold land in excess of 10 paris and it followed, therefore, that the succeeding Government had the same power, and what was done by the final order conveyed on 24th May 1952, was nothing more than this. AIR 1957 Manipur 25 (30) (Pt E) (Pr 26).

——Art. 51—Merger of States—Successor State does not inherit rights and obligations of merged State.

It is not correct to say as a matter of international law that the successor State automatically inherits the rights and obligations of the merged State. There is no question of subrogation; the successor State is not subrogated ipso jure to the contracts with the merged State. The true legal position is that the contract of the predecessor State terminates with the change of sovereignty and the Successor State does not inherit the legal personality and legal relationship of the predecessor State. A mere agreement to transfer is not the same thing as the actual cession. Unless anything to the contrary is expressly agreed, the cession becomes effective only with the actual transfer of sovereignty. Pratap Vikram v. Upendra Bahadur, AIR 1952 All 6 (16) (Pt C) (Pr 40) (FB).

——Art. 51 — Cession of territory—Waiver or relinquishment by Government of its prerogative or sovereign power — Effect — Subject of ex-sovereign seeking to enforce right acquired under - Right of ex-sovereign.

Every subject of the ex-sovereign who wants to make good in the Municipal Courts of the new sovereign the rights acquired by him under the ex-sovereign must show that the new sovereign has waived or relinquished his right or power to ignore or repudiate those rights, for it is only then that those rights would be legally enforceable against the new sovereign in his Municipal Courts. This waiver or relinquishment can be by legislation or by proclamation or by agreement and it can even be inferred from circumstantial evidence. Clauses or stipulations in a treaty of cession which is an Act of State can also be referred to for the purpose of establishing such waiver.

A subject of the ex-sovereign who seeks to enforce against the new sovereign an existing right acquired by him under the ex-sovereign can rely upon clauses in the treaty of cession for establishing that the new sovereign has elected to waive or relinquish his right or power, to ignore or repudiate the existing right which the subject seeks to enforce. This principle would apply only in case of completed rights and would not apply in case of rights involving obligations of a contractual nature or other financial obligations on the part of the ex-sovereign. AIR 1954 S C 680, AIR 1954 S C 447 and 61 Bom L R 20, Rel. on.

Held, that the Letter of Guarantee merely supplemented the provisions contained in the merger agreement entered and, therefore, was invested, with the character of an Act of State. The appellant was, therefore, entitled to rely on clauses 5 and 7 of the Letter of Guarantee for establishing the plea that the Government of India waived or relinquished its prerogative or sovereign power to ignore or repudiate the rights acquired under the order passed by the Ruler of Sant State. 5 (b). Obligations of conquering or annexing States.

——Art. 51—Obligations of conquering or annexing States — (Constitution of India, Art. 363)—(Patiala Income-tax Act (7 of 1001), S. 1).

Under the International Law, obligations of the successor State with regard to private property of private individuals, particularly land as to which the title had already been perfected before the conquest or annexation, are widely different from the obligations which arise in respect of personal rights by contracts. As regards the contractual obligations of the succeeding State it is for it to consider and decide which of them it is prepared to recognize and which other to repudiate. The principles of international law, as enunciated by the various authorities, do not insist on their wholesale recognition by the conquering or annexing State. Case-law referred.

Held, that Patiala Income-tax Act, 2001, which was validly made and promulgated by the Raj Pramukh of Pepsu after its formation, as a new State could not be regarded as invalid or inoperative merely because it was not in consonance with or contravened such supposed principles of international law, and no relief on that account could be granted by the municipal Courts to persons adversely affected thereby. I L R (1955) Patiala 215 : (1954) 26 I T R 375 : AIR 1955 Pepsu 3 (19, 20) (Pt I) (Pr 48) (DB).

The enemy character of a person under English common law (which applies to India) attaches to a person, irrespective of his nationality or his domicile if he is living or residing in enemy territory or enemy occupied territory and the test is an objective test depending upon facts. ——Art. 51—War — Creditor's agent and debtor on same side of line of war — Payment by latter to former—Validity — (Defence of India Rules (1939), Rr. 97 (b) and (f) and 98 (2)).

When a creditor and his agent and the debtor are not across of the line of war but in the same belligerent State and on the same side of the line of war there is no reason prohibiting the payment of the debt by the debtor and a receipt by the creditor. Case law discussed.

The plaintiff and the defendant carried on money-lending business in Burma. In 1939 the defendant executed a promissory note to the plaintiff in India. The plaintiff filed a suit in India to recover the amount due under the promissory note ignoring the payment made in Burma by the defendant's agent to the plaintiff's agent in 1944. The questions were whether Burma was an enemy territory at the time of the payment and if Burma was an enemy territory, whether the plaintiff's agent had authority to give a valid discharge:

Held, that in the absence of any evidence to show that the Government of Japan had established anything like a civil administration under its control and authority besides the military occupation which could effectively exercise dominion and control over the territory, it could not be held that Burma was an occupied enemy territory:

Held further that even otherwise the payment was good and valid as the defendant's agent and the plaintiff's agent were living in the same enemy occupied territory and both being enemies there was no ground for treating the payment as invalid:

Held also that none of the disabilities contemplated by R. 98 of Defence of India Rules would apply as the transaction was between enemies inter se and not between a British Indian subject on the one hand and an enemy on the other and therefore even if Burma was treated as an enemy territory within the meaning of the Defence of India Rules, the payment in Burma by the debtor to the creditor was not hit at by any of the rules made under the Defence of India Act. 65 Mad L W 384 : 1952 1 Mad L J 709 : I L R (1952) Mad 361: AIR 1952 Mad 736 (750, 751, 753) (Pt E) (Prs 30, 31, 32, 39) (DB).

The State had no independent existence in the eye of law for that purpose. ——Art. 51 — 'Act of State' — Cession — Rights of citizen against merged State—Enforcement in municipal Courts of succeeding State—Conditions.

It is a well-established principle of international law that when a territory is acquired by a Sovereign

State that amounts to an act of State. It makes no difference how the acquisition was brought about It may be by conquest, it may be by cession following on treaty, it may be by occupation of territory hitherto unoccupied by a recognised Ruler. In all cases, the result is the same. Any inhabitant of the territory can make good in the Municipal Courts established by the new Sovereign only such rights as that Sovereign has, through his officers, recognised. The right to enforce remains only with the high contracting parties. AIR 1924 P C 216 and A I R 1954 S C 447 and A I R 1958 S C 818, Foll.

The enforceability of the right of a citizen against the merged State in the Municipal Courts of the succeeding State will depend upon the acceptance of that liability by the succeeding State. From the mere fact that certain laws, which were in force in the former State, were allowed to continue by the succeeding State it does not follow that the liabilities of the citizens against the State were also recognised by the succeeding State. On the point of recognition stronger proof will have to be adduced on behalf of the plaintiff. That proof may consist of express recognition or implied recognition by conduct, but, it must be a recognition of a specific right A I R 1954 S C 680 and 61 Bom L R 20 (FB), Disting ILR (1961) Bom 101 : 62 Bom L R 735 : A I R 1961 Bom 11 (17) (Pt D) (Pr 11) (DB).

——Art. 51—Sovereign State—Jurisdiction of Courts of one Sovereign State over another foreign State—Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 9 and 13.

One of the cardinal principles of International Law is that every Sovereign State respects the independence of every other Sovereign State and as a consequence of this absolute independence and of the international comity which underlies the relations between sovereign States, each State declines to exercise by means of any of its Courts, jurisdiction over the person of any sovereign or Ambassador or over the public property of any State. An order of the Ruler of former Nabha State, who in the matter of internal sovereignty was a sovereign Ruler, was law Where the order made a free grant of one Nal of water to a particular person in perpetuity it was a personal law in favour of the grantee and his successors. This personal law was not repealed or abrogated by S. 3 (1) of the Patiala and East Punjab States Union General Provisions (Administration) Ordinance. No doubt the rights of the grantee cannot avail against the sovereign in Pepsu State after the Ruler of Nabha State surrendered his sovereignty to the new State and ceded his territory to that State unless the new sovereign recognised those rights. Such a recognition is implied from the facts that the new sovereign did not demand water rates from the grantee for nearly four years after the formation of the new State and also did not repeal the personal law in existence in favour of the grantee and the rights are enforceable in the Courts of the new sovereign. It is a well-settled principle that any right purporting to be conferred by the treaty of cession cannot be enforced in municipal Courts, except in so far as they have been incorporated in municipal laws.

Once, therefore, it is found that the Covenant entered into by the Rulers of the States forming Pepsu is a sort of treaty, it is not within the province of municipal Courts to enforce or grant relief in respect of rights howsoever forceful, reasonable and equitable they may appear to be, arising out of the treaty. Relief in such cases has to be sought not in the precincts of law Courts 'but along the corridors of diplomacy'. ——Art. 51 — Territorial waters — Jurisdiction over foreign ships — Right of innocent passage — Scope and extent of.

The right of innocent passage is but a right of way along the coast. The right of innocent passage does not confer any immunity from territorial laws on ships that enter not in distress the ports of a friendly State. On the other hand, any foreign ship entering and taking advantage of the facilities afforded in ports of a country becomes amenable to its territorial laws, incur the obligation of observing its customs laws, and that obligation extends to foreign citizens on board the ship.

Where the acts of a foreigner on board a foreign ship at anchor in Cochin Port contravene the Indian Customs laws, they amount to an offence under the Indian law although they were not committed on land and the Indian Court has jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence. PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW (CONFLICT OF LAWS)

14. Scope and operation.

——Art. 51—International Law (Private) — Meaning of.

What is called private international law is not law governing relations between independent States : private international law, or as it is sometimes called 'Conflict of Laws', is simply a branch of the civil law of the State evolved to do justice between litigating parties in respect of transactions or personal status involving a foreign element The rules of private international law of each State must therefore in the very nature of things differ but by the comity of nations certain rules are recognised as common to civilised jurisdiction. Through part of the judicial system of each State these common rules have been adopted to adjudicate upon disputes involving a foreign element and to effectuate judgment of foreign Courts in certain matters or as a result of international conventions R. Viswanathan v. Rukn-ul Mulk Syed Abdul Wajid, (1963) 3 S C R 22 : AIR 1963 S C 1 (14, 15) (Pt C) (Pr 16).

——Art. 51—Scope.

The name "Private International Law" is rather unfortunate because it is difficult to conceive of a law which is both International and at the same time private. It is called "private" inasmuch as it deals with the legal relations of individual and not of States; it is "International", inasmuch as it deals with conflicts of laws of different nations. It is properly called law, inasmuch as its rules are enforced by Courts, and in that respect it is a branch of the ordinary law of the land. In fact International Law proper is "Public International Law" which again is no law at all as it is not enforced by the ordinary Courts of law, and there is no sanction behind it except the Comity of Nations. The problems of Private International Law originate in the territorial diversity of legal systems. Wherever such diversity exists, these problems are likely to arise. The function of Private International Law is complete when it has chosen the appropriate system of law. Its rules do not furnish a direct solution of the dispute, and it has been said by a French writer that this department of law resembles the inquiry office at a Railway Station where a passenger may learn the platform where a train starts. Private International Law is not a separate branch of law in the sense of the law of contract or the law of bankruptcy, but it is nevertheless a separate and distinct unit in our legal system. "Private International Law", is not the same in all countries. A I R 1952 Cal 508 (515) (Pt B) (Pr 20).

——Art. 51—Matters of procedure — Rule of international law — No right alive by reason of extinguishment by statute — Nothing can be enforced in any country—Principle recognised in S. 11 (2), Limitation Act (1908) — Liability under foreign contract sought to be enforced in a country outside it — Rules to be applied. See Limitation Act (1908), S. 11. AIR 1964 Mad 527 (DB).

——Art. 51—Rules of—Nature and binding effect.

The so-called rules of international law are merely opinions of jurists and political thinkers and however weighty they may be, they are not to be administered by the Courts of a country unless sanctioned by the laws of that country. I L R (1959) Punj 384 : AIR 1959 Punj 440 (443, 444) (Pt B) (Pr 8) (DB).

——Arts. 51, 5—Rules of—No statutory force.

The rules of Conflict of Laws or of Private International law as adumbrated by various writers do not have any statutory force of universal application in all countries These rules have been deduced, from certain decided cases, as they arose from time to time in different countries. 15. Law applicable to India.

——Art. 51—Rules of — Private International Law applicable in India.

Hitherto the Courts in India have invariably followed the English rules of Private International Law. In fact, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in England being the ultimate authority in these matters, nothing else could be expected. Circumstances, however, have now altered, and it is no longer incumbent upon them to follow the English rules, or for the matter of that, any rule excepting their own. So far as the English rules are concerned, they are without question entitled to their very great respect. But no system of law is infallible and it must not be forgotten that Private International Law is of a comparatively recent growth and the English system has not yet had time to attain perfection. Since the Courts in India are now at liberty to lay down and follow their own rules with regard to Private International Law, they are in this respect in a very fortunate position. They can adopt the rules laid down in various countries as accord best with their sense of justice, equity and good conscience. They can profit by the experience of other nations and avoid their errors. AIR 1952 Cal 508 (515, 516) (Pt C) (Prs 21, 22).

——Art. 51—Law applicable to Indian Union.

In India Private International Law is not regulated by statutes. Private International Law applicable to the Indian Union can ordinarily be built up by judicial decisions in concrete cases, and any attempt at any statutory enactment in this very wide and uncertain field which will invest it with a rigidity may impede its natural evolution. (1953) 2 M L J 405 : 1953 Mad W N 618 : 66 Mad L W 773 : A I R 1954 Mad 97 (98) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

● ——Art. 51 — Foreign judgments — Enforcement of foreign awards or foreign judgment based upon those awards — Principle — Doctrine of merger of original cause of action — Applicability to foreign judgments — Arbitration agreement entered into in Bombay — Award in New York and confirmed by New York Supreme Court — Suit to enforce award of judgment in Bombay High Court — Held not maintainable — Civil P. C. (1908), S. 13 — Letters Patent (Bom), Cl. 12.

Held, on facts (Per Majority, Subba Rao J., dissenting) that the suit was not maintainable for the following reasons : (1) since the judgment was pronounced in New York the cause of action for a suit based thereon must be said to have arisen at that place. Hence the cause of action in so far it rested on the judgment, did not arise within the limits of the original jurisdiction of the High Court of Bombay and the suit based upon that judgment must be held to be beyond the jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court. AIR 1959 Bom 414, Affirmed but for different reasons. No doubt the English doctrine of merger does not apply to a foreign judgment. But if the plaintiff chooses to sue upon the judgment he cannot found jurisdiction on the basis of the original cause of action even though it may not have merged in the judgment; (2) the alternative claim of the plaintiff based on the awards themselves must also fail. An award in order to furnish a cause of action must be final. According to the New York law an award does not become final until a judgment had been obtained on the basis of the awards and the awards themselves could never be enforced and only the judgment could be enforced. If the law of the country in which it was made gives finality to a judgment based upon an award and not to the award itself, the award can furnish no cause of action for a suit in India Hence, though the High Court of Bombay had jurisdiction to enforce a final award made in a foreign country in pursuance of a submission made within the limits of its original jurisdiction, the awards in question not being final could not furnish a valid cause of action for the suit. ——Art. 51 — Foreign judgments — Judgment by Court in Gwalior State—(Civil P.C. (1908), Ss. 2(5), 2 (6) and 13).

In order to be a foreign State for the purpose of holding the judgments pronounced by its Courts as foreign judgments absolute independence of that State is not necessary. The only thing that is needed to hold it a foreign State is that it should have an independent civil, criminal and fiscal jurisdiction. If it had that, it could be considered to be a foreign State notwithstanding the fact that it was under the protection, suzerainty or paramountcy of another superior power. As there can be no doubt, that the Gwalior State had independent civil, criminal and fiscal jurisdiction and that its Ruler enjoyed the full measure of internal and domestic sovereignty, although subject to the protection of the British Crown, there can be no difficulty in holding that a foreign State vis a-vis a Court in the British Pro-

● ——Art. 51—Domicil—Principles determining domicil—Domicil of origin in Multan District —Subsequent migration to India — Effect — (Constitution of India, Art. 5).

Two constituent elements that are necessary by English Law for the existence of domicil are : (1) a residence of a particular kind and (2) an intention of a particular kind. There must be the factum and there must be the animus. The residence need not be continuous but it must be indefinite not purely fleeting. The intention must be a present intention to reside for ever in the country where the residence has been taken up.

It is also a well established proposition that a person may have no home but he cannot be without a domicil and the law may attribute to him a domicil in a country where in reality he has not.

In order to make the rule that nobody can be without a domicil effective, the law assigns what is called a domicil of origin to every person at his birth. This prevails until a new domicil has been acquired, so that if a person leaves the country of his origin with an undoubted intention of never returning to it again, nevertheless his domicil of origin adheres to him until he actually settles with the requisite intention in some other country.

Where therefore a person and his ancestors lived in Multan district, had a considerable business there and had no home in India, his domicil of origin must be held to be in the district of Multan and when the district of Multan fell by the partition of India in Pakistan, he had to be assigned Pakistan domicil till the time he expressed his unequivocal intention of giving up that domicil and of acquiring Indian domicil and also took up his residence in India. His domicil cannot be determined by his family coming to India and without any finding that he had established a home for himself there. Even if the animus can be ascribed to him, the factum of residence is wanting in his case; and in the absence of that fact an Indian domicil cannot be ascribed to him. Central Bank of India, Ltd. v. ——Art. 51—International Law (Private) —Domicile —Minor—Minor cannot acquire domicile different from that of father — Minor going to Pakistan after 1st March, 1947 and was minor on 26th January, 1950— Applicability of Art. 7 of Constitution of India.

A minor is unable to acquire a domicile by his own act. Therefore when the minor, whose father was domiciled in India and citizen of India, left India for Pakistan after 1st March, 1947 and continued to be a minor when the Constitution of India came into force cannot be said to have acquired a domicile of choice in Pakistan by his own act and hence he continued to retain his domicile of origin in India on 26th January, 1950 and Art. 7 could have no application to his case. Ordinarily, it is for the plaintiff to prove the facts on which his prayer for relief is based. But where the plaintiffs claim that they are citizens of India whereas the State alleges that they are citizens of Pakistan and the plaintiffs are able to prove that they were citizens of India when they left for Pakistan, there will be a presumption that they continued to be citizens when they returned Citizenship does not evaporate with the passing of time; it clings to a person wherever he may roam. It cannot be taken away from him unless he voluntarily renounces it or is guilty of some conduct involving loss of citizenship. Per B. P. Sinha, C. J., S. K. Das; P. B. Gajendragadkar, A. K. Sarkar, K. N. Wanchoo and N. Rajagopala Ayyangar JJ.

The expressions 'nationality' and 'Citizenship' are not interchangeable terms. 'Nationality has reference to the jural relationship which may arise for consiration under international law. On the other hand 'citizenship' has reference to the jural relationship under municipal law. In other words, nationality determines the civil rights of a person, natural or artificial; particularly with reference to international law, whereas citizenship is intimately connected with civil rights under municipal law. Hence all citizens are nationals of a particular State, but all nationals may not be citizens of the State. In other words, citizens are those persons who have full political rights as distinguished from nationals, who may not enjoy full political rights and are still domiciled in that country (vide P. Weis—Nationality and Statelessness in International Law pp. 4-6, and Oppenheim's International Law, Vol I, pp. 642, 644). State Trading Corporation of India v. 21. Succession to immovable property.

——Art. 51 — Succession to immovable property — Property owned by Hindu in England—Owner expiring in England —Rule of succession to such property.

Law regulating the succession to the property of a person expiring in a foreign country is that succession to the estate of a person is governed by the lex situs in the case of immovables, and in the case of movables by the law of his domicile. Hence, where an Indian Hindu who owns a house property in England expires there then the domestic law of England must apply to the house if that property is considered by English Law to be immovable. A I R 1963 S C 1, Rel. on.

In domestic English Law the division of properties is as real and personal and not as immovable and movable. But in the sphere of Private International Law the Anglo Saxon distinction between realty and personalty is abandoned and the division into immovable and movable is accepted. Thus the division as personalty and realty cuts across the division as movable and immovable, in the sense that personalty includes both movables and immovables. Realty is not synonymous either with land or with immovables. The question whether a particular property is movable or immovable has to be decided under the law of place where the property is situated. According to the law of England, the house property is considered, for the purpose of Private International Law, to be immovable. If, therefore, an Indian Hindu who expires in England, be found not to have lost his domicile of origin his immovable properties in India and all his movables whether in India or in England, should be divided according to the law of succession in India. And succession to the house in England, being immovable property according to the law of the situs as applied to Conflict of Laws, should be decided under the English Law of succession. The subsequent conversion of that immovable into money does not alter this position (1964) 2 Ker L R 339 : 1964 Ker L J 205 : 1964 Ker L T 252 : ILR (1964) 1 Ker 384 : A I R 1964 Ker 244 (249, 250, 251) (Pt G) (Prs 29, 30, 31, 35) (DB).

——Art. 51 — Legitimacy of persons — If could be affected by change in the law subsequently — Succession Act (39 of 1925), S. 43 — Scope.

No person who is legitimate when born can be bastardised retrospectively by the subsequent operation of law. A relationship which was legitimate at the time when it came into being cannot become illegitimate with any retrospective effect by the subsequent introduction of new laws.

When the former State of Pudukottai was merged with the Madras State, the Indian Succession Act no doubt became applicable to the Indian Christians in the State. But where an estate devolved upon a person before the operation of the Act, the subsequent succession to it according to the new Act cannot be varied merely because the original holder would be a bastard according to the new law.

There are no words in the Indian Succession Act which limit the relations contemplated therein to relations which are legitimate according to Christian law. The relations contemplated in the Act are those which are recognised by the law—(in this case Hindu law) which governed the parties at the time the relationship came into being. 72 Mad L W 142 : ILR (1959) Mad 449 : (1959) 1 M L J 19 : A I R 1959 Mad 180 (180, 181) (Pr 5).

22. Matrimonial matters.

——Art. 51 — Rule as to dissolution of marriage between parties domiciled in different countries — Applicability of, when law in one Province of India is different from another.

Strictly speaking the rules of private international law apply when there is conflict of laws of different sovereign States. But there is authority for the proposition that where the law in one province in India is different from the law in another province, the two provinces must be regarded as analogous to two sovereign States.

The rule of International law laid down in 1895 A. C. 517 which applies to the Courts in the exercise of jurisdiction to dissolve marriages between spouses domiciled in another country, may therefore be applied where the dispute is sought to be litigated in a Court of the country in which the parties are domiciled even though the personal law applicable in the place where the parties are domiciled is different from the personal law applicable in the area in which the Court is functioning. 57 Bom L R 569 : ILR (1955) Bom 749 : AIR 1955 Bom 300 (302, 303, 304, 305) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 7, 13) (DB).

——Art. 51 — Marriage — Essentials. See Special Marriage Act (1872) (as amended in 1923), S. 2. A I R 1962 Madh Pra 212 (DB).

——Art. 51 — Marriage — Validity—Determination — Principles — Hindu marriage — Principles of the rule of intended matrimonial home applies.

As regards determination of the validity of marriages the following principles emerge from an analysis of judicial pronouncements: (a) Where the parties at the time of their marriage are domiciled in a country where laws prohibit their marriage, the marriage is void whether they are domiciled in the same country or in different countries. (b) Where the laws of the country in which they are domiciled bestow on both parties capacity for the marriage, the marriage is a good marriage. (1861) 9 H L C 193 and (1860) 164 E R 917 and (1752) 2 Hag. Con. 395 and 1930 A C 79 and (1859) 164 E R 792 and (1877) 3 P D 1 and (1877) 2 P D 81 and (1879) 5 P D 94 and 1940 Ch. 46, Considered.

On the question of law that would govern capacity for marriages, there are three views. One view is that it is the law of the place of celebration which overlooks the distinction between formality and capacity. The second view which appears to be conservative and orthodox is that it is the law of the domicile of each party before the marriage. The third is that the law of the intended matrimonial home governs the capacity. (1835) 6 E R 1239 and 1908 P 46 and 1948 P. 100 and (1955) 2 W L R 439 and 1949 P. 420, Rel. on. The doctrine against incapacity in either of the two parties to the marriage rests upon the theory that a marriage being a contract both parties to it must have the capacity to marry one another. But even if the insistence on capacity in both the parties to the marriage is founded upon a sound principle of Private International law, it is doubtful whether such insistence is possible in the case of a Hindu marriage which is an institution which does not share all the attributes, with a marriage under other laws or in other countries, for there is divergence of judicial opinion whether a Hindu marriage is only a sacrament and not a contract or it is both. But if the sacramental aspect of a Hindu marriage is its principal feature and unlike the husband, the wife could not marry again during his lifetime, a rule which emanates from the concept of a marriage being essentially a contract, when applied to a Hindu marriage, may not produce results of accuracy. The law governing the capacity as far as a Hindu marriage is concerned is the law of the intended matrimonial home.

The validity of a marriage between a husband whose personal law does not prohibit polygamy and a woman whose personal law does, can be judged by applying yet another principle. It is an accepted principle that a person domiciled in one country carries with him sufficient personal law of his own when he is temporarily in another country and that it is that personal law which has to be referred to on many questions such as minority, marriage and succession. If that personal law so accompanies a person temporarily present in another country, it is possible to say that that personal law also enables him to contract a marriage in the manner recognised by it. Where a ceremony of marriage is proved and is followed up by cohabitation as man and wife, the presumption in case of doubt or in the absence of evidence to the contrary is always in favour of validity and legitimacy. (1962) 3 All E R 1108, Rel. on.

Before the Indian Constitution came in force, S, a resident of Hyderabad State having a legally wedded wife, married another woman at Bombay where the Bombay Prevention of Hindu Bigamous Marriages Act forbidding bigamy in the State of Bombay was in force. There was no such law in Hyderabad State and S was governed by Mitakshara law which did not prohibit bigamy. After the death of S his second wife claimed right to his properties as against his daughter by first wife. On the question whether the marriage was valid as regards the second wife of S who was subjected to the Bombay Act which forbade bigamy, held on the principles of private international law that the rule of intended matrimonial home applied to the case and the marriage was valid. 23. Tort in foreign country—When actionable in home country.

——Art. 51—Tort in foreign country—When actionable in home country of defendant.

Whether an act done in a foreign country is or is not a tort, i. e., a wrong for which an action can be brought in the State to which the foreigner belongs depends upon the combined effect of the law of the country where the act is done (lex loci delicti commissi) and of the law of the country of the foreigner (lex fori).

An act done in a foreign country is a tort and actionable as such in the State to which the foreigner belongs only if it is both (i) actionable as a tort according to the law of his State ; and (ii) not justifiable according to the law of the foreign country where it was done. 1960 Raj L W 284 : I L R (1960) 10 Raj 705 : A I R 1960 Raj 224 (234) (Pt G) (Pr 31) (DB).

25. Contracts.

——Art. 51—Contract — The proper law applicable depends on localisation of the contract — The contract must be substantially connected to it—Factors to be considered in determining it.

The proper law applicable to a contract is the system of law by reference to which the contract was made or with which the transaction has its closest and most real connection. Held, on facts and circumstances of the case that the proper law of the contract was the Bombay law, that is, the Indian law, and that the Pakistan law had no application in the case. Held further, that as the proper law intended as a whole to govern a contract was administered as a living and changing body of law and effect was given to any change which was occurring in it before performance fell due, the law applicable in the present case was the law at Bombay as it stood when the performance was due. A I R 1955 S C 590, Rel. on. A I R 1964 Cal 141 (146, 147, 151) (Pt A) (Prs 22, 23, 25, 29, 30, 51, 53, 58).

——Art. 51—Contract—Performance of—Impossibility due to supervention of foreign law—When arises —Essential conditions — Held on facts that no such impossibility arose in performance of contract in suit.

If an Indian contract lawful at its inception is to be rendered unenforceable in the Court of India by supervening foreign law, two elements must co-exist, namely, (i) there must be an act which the contract requires to be performed in the foreign country and (ii) that act must have been rendered unlawful there. 1935 A C 148 and (1920) 2 K B 287, Rel. on.

Where however, the obligation which the plaintiff wants to enforce is only the payment of money under a life insurance policy which provides that the money is to be paid in Bombay, the contract was also executed in Bombay which was therefore, both the locus contractus and locus solutionis and also the place round which the elements of the policy were densely grouped, there is no principle upon which it should be held that Pakistan law should be applied to it. It is only when performance of a contract is illegal in a foreign country that the doctrine based on comity of friendly nations can be invoked. As the contract did not expressly call upon the defendant insurer to do any act at all in Pakistan and no act was necessary for the performance which would be a breach of Pakisthan Law, the defendant could not invoke the doctrine. A I R 1964 Cal 141 (153) (Pt D) (Prs 71, 72).

——Art. 51—Contracts — Law and forum for settlement of disputes — Choice of Swedish law and Courts—Forum of dispute arising out of contract by agreement between parties—Suit for breach of contract against non-resident foreigner — Suit filed in India —Stay can be ordered by Court in India pending institution and disposal of proper proceedings in Swedish Courts—Arbitration Act (1940), S. 34.

A bill of lading, issued by a shipping company to a shipper in connection with a contract of affreightment of certain goods to be carried to Calcutta entered into in Sweden, both parties being Swedish, provided, inter alia, that any dispute arising out of the contract would be decided in Sweden according to the Swedish law. But the plaintiff an endorsee of the bill of lading, brought a suit for damages for short delivery of the goods in the High Court of Calcutta where the endorsement took place and where the contract was alleged to have been broken, with leave under Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent :

Held, that though the contract did not rob the Court of its jurisdiction to decide the dispute, which is derived from the laws of the land, it would be in consonance with justice and fair play to stay the suit in India pending institution and disposal of proper proceedings in Sweden. A I R 1960 Cal 155, Rel. on ; (1913) A C 241 ; (1958) 1 A E R 333 ; A I R 1960 Cal 47, Disting.

It would, however, be perfectly open to the plaintiff to prosecute his suit in the Court at Calcutta in the event of any action brought in the Swedish Court being held barred by limitation. 66 Cal W N 538 : A I R 1962 Cal 601 (603, 604, 605, 606) (Pt B) (Prs 9, 12, 14 18, 20, 22) (DB).

——Art. 51 — (Civil P. C., S. 20) — (Contract Act (1872), S. 2 (d))—(Railways Act (1890), S. 80).

Plaintiff entered into a contract of carriage with the Government of Pakistan, as representing the Eastern Bengal Railway at Faridpore, for carriage of some goods to Calcutta. The goods were seized by the Land Customs at the Indian Land Frontier and detained as a result of which they were damaged and had to be sold. The Union of India never denied the liability to pay over the actual sale proceeds but the plaintiff brought suit at Sealdah for non-delivery of goods. On objection of jurisdiction the trial Court decided that he had "ample jurisdiction". On revision by defendant.

Held, (i) One independent sovereign power is not the agent of another independent sovereign power as far as municipal Courts are concerned unless specifically such a state of agency is for a particular purpose assumed and the Courts are given jurisdiction. Therefore the Government of India could not be sued in Indian Courts as an agent of the Pakistan Government ;

(ii) It is an accepted principle of private international law that in a case of this nature the 'lex loci contractus' will apply. Section 80, Indian Railways Act, as now in force in India cannot apply beyond its own territories to a foreign State namely, Pakistan. It is possible that there may be a corresponding law with a corresponding section applicable in Pakistan, but such law again cannot apply beyond the limits of Pakistan and give a right to sue an independent sovereign power outside Pakistan because of a Pakistani law. Under the circumstances S. 80, Indian Railways Act or for the matter of that any corresponding Pakistani law, was of no help to plaintiff ;

(iii) The ground that there may be some unknown arrangement was not tenable since no such arrangement had been alleged in the plaint between the Union of India and Pakistan as regards mutual liability. The plaintiff not being a party to any such arrangement or contract between the two sovereign powers, even if there was any such, could not take advantage of any contract to which he was not a party. His remedy, therefore, was either to sue the Union of India for the amount of money belonging to him actually held in their hands by the Union of India as representing the East India Railway or to sue at Faridpore on his contract of carriage the Pakistan Government as representing the Eastern Bengal Railway for the breach of the contract, entered into at Faridpore ;

(iv) The assumption of jurisdiction by the trial Court was therefore illegal. 57 Cal W N 164 : I L R (1953) 2 Cal 168 : A I R 1953 Cal 366 (367) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 5).

See Vegetable Oils and Oilcakes (Forward Contracts Prohibition) Order (1944), S. 7 (1) (e). AIR 1964 Mad 532.

——Art. 51—Law governing contract—Lex loci.

The general rule laid down in (1890), 25 Q B D 399 as to the law which governs a contract is that the law of the country either where the contract is made, or where it is to be so performed that it must be considered to be a contract of that country, is the law which governs such contract; not merely with regard to its construction, but also with regard to all the conditions applicable to it as a contract.

Therefore if there be a bankruptcy law, or any other law of such country, by which a person who would otherwise be liable under the contract would be discharged, and the facts be such as to bring that law into operation, such law would be a law affecting the contract, and would be applicable to it in the country where the action is brought.

But this rule is applicable to India only when any change of law in the country in which the contract was made is not repugnant to the principles of our Constitution, or of those principles of justice, equity and good conscience on which our own lex fori is founded. If such be the case, the change of law will not be applied by our Court. 1953 Mad W N 618 : (1953) 2 M L J 405 : 66 Mad L W 773 : AIR 1954 Mad 97 (98) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

——Art. 51 — Contract made in Burma enforced in Indian Union — Burma Accrual of Interest Wartime Adjustment Act (11 of 1947), S. 3 — Applicability — (Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 34 and 151).

A and B entered into a contract of loan in Burma while they were doing business there prior to Japanese occupation of that territory. Subsequently they came to reside in the State of Madras. A filed a a suit against B on 23rd August, 1941, for recovery of the loan in a Court in the Madras State. A compromise decree for amount of loan was passed prior to the passing of Burma Act (11 of 1947). The decretal amount was to carry interest at 6 per cent from the date of the decree. The judgment-debtor B filed an application under Ss. 47 and 151, Civil P. C. that he was not liable to pay any interest for the period between 8th December, 1941 to 31st March, 1947, by virtue of S. 3 of the Burma Act.

Held, (i) that the Burma Act which was clearly founded on principles of justice, equity and good conscience should govern such contract as far as possible, when sued upon in the Indian Court by an extension of the principle governing English Private International Law ;

(ii) that the relief to debtors under the Burma Act (11 of 1947) can only be granted by the Court which passed the decree by an application made to it under S. 151, Civil P. C. for amendment of the decree on the analogy of applications to amend decrees and wipe out interest under the Madras Act (4 of 1988). It is not open to an executing Court as such to give any relief under the Burma Act of 1947.

(iii) Since the suit itself was instituted prior to 8th December, 1941, the amount due on the date of suit did not include any interest which could be wiped out by S. 3 of the Burma Act which only wiped out interest between 8th December, 1941 and 31st March, 1947.

(iv) Pendente lite interest from the date of suit to the date of decree was solely in the discretion of Court under S. 34, Civil P. C. Future interest from date of decree at the Court rate of interest had no relation to the nature of contract on which the decree was passed. As such pendente lite and future interest between the dates 8th December, 1941 and 31st March, 1947, could not be wiped out under the Burma Act. 1953 Mad W N 618 : (1953) 2 M L J 405 : 66 Mad L W 773 : AIR 1954 Mad 97 (98, 99) (Pt D) (Prs 5, 7, 8, 9).

The lex situs is the governing law for all questions that arise with respect to immovable property, and no disposition can create interest in immovable property which is in breach of the lex situs which must determine whether an effective and lawful transfer of title has taken place. 27. Debts.

● ——Art. 51 — Debt arising in foreign country — Determination of its nature — Lex situs and "the proper law of the contract" — (T. P. Act (1882), S. 130).

A debt is property. It is a chose in action and is heritable and assignable and it is treated as property under the Transfer of Property Act which calls it an "actionable claim."

Choses in action arising out of contract have two aspects: (1) as property and (2) as involving a contractual obligation for performance. The property aspect is relevant for purposes of assignment, administration, taxation and the like; the contractual aspect for performance.

Debt, being intangible, cannot have location except notionally and in order to give it notional position rules have to be framed along arbitrary lines. Determination of the legal liabilities which arise out of the facts relating to a debt raises complex questions of private international law. Two distinct lines of thought emerge. One is that applied by the English Courts, namely, the lex situs; the other is the one favoured by Cheshire in his book on Private International Law, namely, the "proper law of the contract."

When an involuntary assignment of a debt is effected by garnishment, it is probably true to say that a debt is properly garnishable in the country where, according to the ordinary usages of business, it would normally be regarded as payable. In cases of this nature, the proper law of the contract is applied, that is to say, the law of the country in which its elements are most densely grouped and with which factually the contract is most closely connected. It is true the Judges purport to apply the lex situs but in determining the situs they apply rules (and modify them where necessary to suit changing modern conditions) which in fact are the very rules which in practice will be used to determine the proper law of the contract. When the intention is not express one must be inferred and the rules made come to this ; that as reasonable men they must be taken to have intended that the proper law of the contract should obtain. The other view is that the intention does not govern even when express and that the proper law must be applied objectively. But either way, the result is the same when there is no express term and the "proper law" is in fact applied.

And in this respect the "proper law" is the law that obtains not when the contract was made and the obligation fashioned but the law in force at the time when performance is due. A proper law intended as a whole to govern a contract is administered as a living and changing body of law and effect is given to any changes occurring in it before performance falls due. ● ——Art. 51—Debt arising in Lyallpur in Pakistan —Defendant made to pay to Custodian under Pakistan Law amount belonging to plaintiff — Discharge of debt.

The plaintiffs carried on business with the defendant company for some three or four years before 1947 and purchased cloth from the company from time to time. In the course of their business they used to make lump sum payments to the defendant against their purchases. Sometimes these were advance payments and at others the balance was against them. In 1947 there was a balance of about Rs. 12,000 left in favour of the plaintiffs. They brought this suit in the Court at Delhi to recover this balance plus interest. The defendant, while admitting the facts contested that when India was partitioned on 15th August 1947, Lyallpur, where these transactions took place and where the money was situate was assigned to Pakistan. The plaintiffs fled to India at this time and thus became evacuees and the Pakistan Government froze all evacuee assets and later compelled the defendant to hand them over to the Custodian of Evacuee Property in Pakistan. The defendant was ready and willing to pay the money if the Pakistan Government would release it but until it did so the defendant contended that it was unable to pay and was not liable.

Held, (1) that the dealings showed a running account very like a customer' current account in a bank and that it was reasonable to assume, as in the case of banking and insurance that on the termination of the contract the balance was to be paid at Lyallpur and not elsewhere which localised the place of primary obligation;

(2) that the elements of this contract, that is to say the contract out of which the obligation to pay arose were most densely grouped at Lyallpur and that that was its natural seat and the place with which the transaction had its closest and most real connection. It followed from this that the "proper law of the contract," in so far as that is material, was the Lyallpur law;

(3) that there was no demand for return of the balance before 3rd January 1949 ;

(4) that the proper law would be the law at Lyallpur applied as a living and changing whole and therefore the Pakistan Ordinance 15 of 1949 applied, S. 11 (2) of which discharged the person making payment from further liability to pay to the extent of the payment made ;

(5) that whether the proper law of the contract applied or the English law of situs in a case of this kind, the defendant was exonerated because the debt being "property", the Ordinance divested the plaintiffs of ownership in it and vested the debt in the Custodian and at the same time interfered with the obligation for performance by providing that payment to the Custodian shall operate as a discharge of the obligation; and

(6) that the Pakistan Ordinance could not be condemned as opposed to the public policy of this country because the same kind of laws existed in India also. AIR 1955 Punj 129, Reversed. ——Art. 51 — Assignment of debt — Proper law— Assignment of claim due under life insurance policy — Validity of—Held was determined by Indian law in this case—T. P. Act (1882), S. 130.

That a debt is property cannot be doubted—It is a chose in action and is heritable and assignable—It is also clear that the assignment of a chose in action arising out of a contract is governed by the proper law of the contract. It is reasonable and logical to refer most questions relating to a debt to the transaction in which it has its source and to the legal system which governs the transaction. One undeniable merit of this is that where there have been assignments in different countries, no confusion can arise from a conflict of laws since all questions are referred to a single legal system.

Thus where the claim due under a life insurance policy was assigned by a deed of assignment executed at Calcutta; at the time of the assignment both the parties were residing in India and were non-resident of Pakistan; the assignment related to a policy which was governed by the Indian law; the notice of assignment was sent to the Head Office at Bombay both by the assignor and the assignee under the policy the notice of assignment was to be registered at the Bombay Head Office and at no other place; the situs of the debt assigned and the residence of the debtor (Insurer) was at Bombay; the formalities of Indian Law were fully observed and the assignment had no connection with Pakistan ex facie or otherwise.

Held, that it was clearly manifest that the proper law of the assignment was the law of India which was also the proper law of the policy. AIR 1964 Cal 141 (151, 152) (Pt B) (Prs 60, 64, 67).

——Art. 51 — Seamen's contracts — Lex loci contractus or lex loci solutionis — Test applicable.

There can be no universal principle in the case of seamen's contracts by the test of which it can always be said that either lex loci contractus or lex loci solutionis must prevail in every case. The true approach should be guided by consideration of the entire contract in each individual case and examination of its terms and the decision as to which test— Lex loci contractus or lex loci solutionis – will apply should depend on the result of a proper interpretation of such contract. If the interpretation in a particular case be that the explicit or the tacit intention in a particular contract is that the place of contract should govern, then lex loci contractus should be the test to be applied; but if on the otherhand the interpretation be that such intention is that the place of performance should govern then lex loci solutionis should be the test to be applied. If there is any doubt and if it appears that the point is new or unsettled, then the scales should be used in favour of applying lex fori.

30. Conflict between Municipal and International laws.

——Art. 51 — Conflict between municipal law and other laws.

Assuming that according to the Anglo-Tibet Regulations of 1914 free export to Tibet (out of India) of articles not specifically referred to in Cl (8) was permitted, it does not appear that so far as Indian citizens are concerned, it received statutory recognition and became a part of the municipal law of India. There is apparent repugnance between the implied provision of the Anglo-Tibet Trade Regulations, 1914, permitting free trade between the two countries on the one hand, and the subsequent Indian Statutes, e.g., Essential Supplies Act, 1948 and the numerous Orders issued thereunder, the Imports and Export (Control) Acts of 1945 and 1947 and Notification No. 91-C W. (1)/51, dated 7th July 1952 putting restrictions on such free trade on the other and it is not easy to reconcile the divergent sets of provisions.

The maxim 'generalia specialibus non derogant' does not apply to such a case as it was not a case of conflict between two Indian statutes only—the prior enactment being special and the subsequent enactment being general. The conflict in the present case went deeper in that there was a conflict between non-Indian law, assuming for a moment that the implied provisions of Anglo Tibet Trade Regulations, 1914, constituted law, and subsequent Indian statutes. The language of the Indian statutes was clear enough; in the interests of India, they sought to put restrictions in the way of trade between India and other countries. If that language was in conflict with any principle of international law as was said to be deducible from the implied provisions of the Anglo-Tibet Trade Regulations of 1914, municipal Courts of India had to obey the laws passed by the Legislature of the country to which they owed their allegiance.

In interpreting and applying municipal law, these Courts would try to adopt such a construction as would not bring it into conflict with rights and obligations deducible from rules of international law. If such rules or rights and obligations are inconsistent with the positive regulations of municipal law, municipal Courts cannot override the latter. 1954 Cr L J 1722 : 58 Cal W N 659 : A I R 1954 Cal 591 (597, 598) (Pt H) (Pr 19) (DB).

——Art. 51 — Conflict of jurisdiction.

It is a matter of great public importance that there should be as far as possible no conflict or clash of jurisdiction between two equally competent authorities. ——Art. 53—President and Governor — Meaning — The words, "President" and "Governor" appearing in Art. 310 should not be understood as the President and Governor in person. Even where an authority (not being the Governor) duly empowered in this behalf dismisses a subordinate civil servant, Art. 310 will be attracted. See Ibid, Art. 310. AIR 1959 All 771.

● ——Arts. 53 (1), 154 (1), 289 (2), (3) and 298 — "Executive power", meaning of — Right of State Government to provide buses for passenger transport for hire—Nationalisation of transport business, if executive act—Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, S. 47.

Per Malik C. J.—In a written Constitution the executive power must be such power as is given to the Executive or is implied, ancillary or inherent. It must include all powers that may be needed to carry into effect the aims and objects of the Constitution. It must mean more than merely executing the laws.

As incidental to the ordinary functions of Government or merely as a trade or a business venture the State has a right to hold and manage its own property and carry on such trade or business as a citizen has the right to carry on so long such activity does not encroach upon the rights of others or is not contrary to law. If in the interest of the general public and to provide them with transport amenities the State decides to run transport buses, it would only be discharging one of its primary duties. It is not necessary to have a specific Act before a State Government can provide buses for transport of passengers for hire.

This is clear from the provisions of Cls. 2 and 3 of Art. 289.

But nationalisation of any industry (transport) does not appear to be possible without legislation, since it would be an infringement on the rights of the citizen and, therefore, nationalization must be by legislation, which would probably have to be justified under the provisions of Art. 19 (6) of the Constitution.

Per Mootham and Wanchoo JJ.—Although an executive act by a State Government may not be authorised by legislative enactment it will nevertheless be within the executive power of the State, if—(i) it is not an act which has been assigned in the Constitution to the legislature; the judiciary or the Public Service Commission; (ii) it is not contrary to the provisions of any law; and (iii) it does not encroach upon or otherwise infringe the legal rights of any member of the public.

Per Sapru J. — The executive power of the Indian Union and the States has to be gathered not from our fixed notions of what the prerogative powers of the Crown are and were as applicable to India before 26-1-1950, but from the text of the Constitution itself. In determining the extent of executive power it is permissible for Courts to take into account the nature of the relationship between the executive and the Legislature, contemplated by a particular Constitution.

Per Agarwala J.—The mere fact that the Government has launched upon the policy of nationalization of motor transport services and has put its own buses in the field to achieve that end is not a valid consideration for the Regional Transport Authority in determining an application under S. 47. Making a treaty is an executive act and not a legislative act. Legislation may be and is often required to give effect to the terms of a treaty. Thus if a treaty say, provides for payment of a sum of money to a foreign power, legislation may be necessary before the money can be spent; but the treaty is complete with the legislation.

Entry 14 of List I in Sch. 7 provides for all legislation in connection with entering into treaties. This cannot however justify the conclusion that the makers of the Constitution intended that no treaty should be entered into unless the Parliament has legislated on the matter. The power of legislation on the matter of entering into treaties leaves untouched the executive power of entering into treaties. ILR (1956) 1 Cal 493 : 59 C W N 107 : AIR 1954 Cal 615 (616) (Pt B) (Pr 9) (DB).

Satyanarayana Rao J.: The Court is not concerned with person or personalities and has to administer justice according to law without consideration of the character of the person who invokes its jurisdiction. The executive is as much bound to obey the law as an ordinary citizen and show respect to the law. The judiciary being only another limb of the Government it is as much the duty of the executive as that of anybody else to maintain the dignity of the Court and see that its prestige is not lowered in the eyes of the public by flouting the judgment of the Courts. AIR 1948 Bom 417, AIR 1949 Pat 247 and AIR 1915 P C 106 (2), Rel. on.

Raghava Rao J. : While this Constitution does not in so many words provide for a separation of powers in the strict sense of the term between the legislature, the judiciary and the executive, there are specific provisions in regard to the three heads of powers embodied in different portions of the Constitution which have to be read together. Whatever the relative degrees of importance enjoyed by the three organs of State the powers of each one of them have to be exercised as fundamentally subject to the provisions of the Constitution relating to the organ individually as well as to the provisions relating to the other organs.

Whatever the limits within which the judiciary in this land can function in relation to the Union Parliament and State Legislatures and whatever the residual powers of the executive under the Constitution over and above what is defined in the specific articles thereof there is no doubt that the executive must needs respect the decisions of the judiciary and can only avoid as in England, their due operation by appropriate legislation. In India as in England it is the business of the Courts to apply the Constitution and the laws and in cases properly brought before them the judiciary exercises control over the executive action in so far as to refuse to uphold as valid any act of government which is not supported by the Constitution or by some law The authority of the Courts as regards the executive action arises when the executive exceeds its authority in which case the agents and instruments through which the action is carried out are personally responsible to law and the Courts. AIR 1915 P C 106 (2), applied.

While on the one hand it is not the business of the Courts to pass judgments on the policy of executive action, the executive on the other hand has no authority to pass verdict upon the validity of a judgment but must assist in enforcing the judgment even though the executive may believe it to be erroneous. The office of an Oath Commissioner in Rajasthan is an office of profit under the Government of Rajasthan. An Oath Commissioner holds an office. As that office brings a profit to the holder thereof, it must be held to be an office of profit.

The definition of 'appropriate Government' in S. 9 (1) (a), Representation of the People Act, 1951, cannot control Art. 102 of the Constitution. The word 'Government' used in Art. 102 must be read widely to include all the three functions of Government, namely, executive, legislative and judicial and an office of profit held under any of the three branches of Government would be an office under the Government of India or the Government of a State. This of course excludes the legislators themselves. From the very nature of things, these will have to be excluded and such others as Parliament may by law exclude as provided in Art. 102 (1) (a) itself. AIR 1958 S C 52, Disting.

● ——Arts. 71 (1) and 327 — Powers of Supreme Court—Enquiry as to and decision of 'doubts and disputes arising out of or in connection with election'—Time for enquiry is after entire process of election—(Presidential and Vice-Presidential Elections Act (1952), S. 18).

Article 71 (1) confers jurisdiction and power on the Supreme Court to inquire into and decide 'all doubts and disputes arising out of or in connection with the election of a President or Vice-President.' The word 'election' occurring in Art. 71 (1) must be given the same wide meaning as comprising the entire election process culminating in a candidate being declared elected, therefore the inquiry is to be made after such completed election, i. e., after a candidate is declared to be elected as President or Vice-President as the case may be. In exercise of powers conferred on it by Art. 71 (3), Parliament has enacted the Presidential and Vice-Presidential Elections Act, 1952 to regulate certain matters relating to or connected with elections to the office of President and Vice-President of India. The time for the exercise of jurisdiction by this Court to inquire into and decide doubts and disputes arising out of or in connection with the Presidential Election is after the entire election process is completed. The well-recognised principle of election law, Indian and English, is that election should not be held up and that the persons aggrieved should not be permitted to ventilate his individual interest in derogation of the general interest of the people, which requires that elections should be gone through according to the time schedule. Dr. Narayan Bhaskar Khare v. Election Commission of India, 1957 S C J 663 : 1957 S C R 1081 : 1957 S C C 344 : 1956 S C A 953 : AIR 1957 S C 694 (697, 698) (Pt A) (Prs 8, 9, 10).

● ——Arts. 71 (1) and 329 (b)—Difference in drafting.

There is an important difference between article 71 (1) and article 329 (b). Article 71 (1) had to be in an affirmative form, because it confers special jurisdiction on the Supreme Court which that Court could not have exercised but for this article. Article 329 (b), on the other hand, was primarily intended to exclude or oust the jurisdiction of all courts in regard to electoral matters and to lay down the only mode in which an election could be challenged. The negative form was therefore more appropriate, and, that being so, it is not surprising that it was decided to follow the pre-existing pattern in which also the negative language had been adopted. ARTICLE 72

● ——Arts. 72, 161, 238, 362 and 372 (1)—Prerogative of Maharaja of Cochin relating to execution of death sentences — Prerogative if consistent with Constitution — Prerogative if stands repealed—Applicability of Art. 362 — Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 401, 402 and 402-A. ILR (1955) Trav-Co 788 affirmed.

The continuance of the law contemplated by Art. 372 (1) is subject to the other provisions of the Constitution; and the continuance is only until altered or repealed or amended by a competent Legislature. In the light of the provisions contained in Arts. 72, 161 and 238 the continuance of the prerogative of the Maharaja of Cochin relating to the execution of the death sentences with reference to the ex-State of Cochin would be inconsistent with the new Constitution. Such power, therefore, must be taken to have been superseded and abrogated as stated in the last para. of the Proclamation dated 24th November. 1949, issued by the Raj Pramukh of Travancore-Cochin. It would follow that Art. 21 of the Covenant of 29th May 1949, entered into between the Rulers of Travancore and Cochin no longer survives. Further, the Code of Criminal Procedure and along with it Ss. 401, 402 and 402-A thereof, relating to commutation of sentences, having been made specifically applicable by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 1951, to all Part B States the prerogative under the old Cochin Law must in any case be deemed to have been repealed or abrogated by competent legislative authority after the coming into force of the Constitution. Art. 362 has no bearing. Thaivalappil Kunjuvaru Vareed v. ——Arts. 72 and 161— Power of Governor in respect of pardons. Art. 161 read in conjunction with para 2 of Art. 72 shows that Governors, in regard to matters to which the executive power of the State extends, have powers similar to those of the President. See Ibid, Art. 161. AIR 1960 Andh Pra 259 (SB).

● ——Arts. 72 and 161—Effect of pardon.

When a convicted person is pardoned, he is free both from the punishment imposed on him as also from all penal consequences and such disqualifications, as disentitle him from following his occupation and which are concomitant of the conviction are removed. 24 Law Ed 442, 24 G. ● ——Art. 72—Amnesty—Meaning.

The word 'amnesty' means a general pardon. Deputy Inspector-General of Police v. D. Rajaram, I L R (1959) Andh Pra 1294 : (1959) 2 Andh W R 526 : 1959 Andh L T 916 : 1960 Cr L J 565 : AIR 1960 Andh Pra 259 (262) (Pt E) (Pr 17) (SB).

——Arts. 72 and 161—Scope—Power of Governor to grant pardon.

Articles 72 and 161 of the Constitution can only be reconciled by limiting the power of the Governor to grant pardon to cases not governed by Art. 72. If so read, the President alone has the exclusive power to grant pardons, reprieves, respites in all cases where the sentence is a sentence of death and both the President and the Governor have concurrent power in respect of suspension, remission and commutation of a sentence of death. The power of the Governor to grant pardons, reprieves and respites in all cases where the sentence is not a sentence of death, and to suspend, remit or commute the sentence of any person is co-extensive with the executive power of the State. It therefore follows that the Governor has the power to grant a pardon or remit the sentence of a person who is transported for life. 1956 Andhra W R 1071 : 1957 Cr L J 822 : AIR 1957 Andh Pra 249 (251) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

● ——Arts. 72 and 161 — Power of pardon, etc.—Scope—Exercise of power during pendency of judicial proceeding—Legality.

Having regard to the language used in Arts. 72 and 161 of the Indian Constitution, which is similar to that used in S. 295 (2) of the Government of India Act and Art. II of the American Constitution the framers of the Indian Constitution intended to confer on the President and the Governors, within their respective spheres, the same power of pardon, reprieve and clemency both in its nature and effect, as is possessed by the Sovereign in Great Britain and by the President in the United States. The power of pardon and the other allied but lesser powers of reprieve, suspension of sentence, etc., can be exercised before, during or after trial. AIR 1954 Mad 911, Rel. on. The powers conferred by Art. 161 are also such that any order made in exercise of those powers must necessarily affect or alter the effect of the judgment of a Court. Consequently, an order made under Art. 161 cannot be held to be illegal, merely because there is a conflict between it and the order made by a Court. State v. ● ——Arts. 72 and 161 — Power of Governor under Art. 161 in respect of offences under Penal Code.

The power of the Governor under Art. 161 in respect of offences under the Penal Code is not taken away by Art. 72 except perhaps a power to grant a pardon, when a sentence of death has been passed. State v. Kawas Manekshaw Nanavati, I L R (1960) Bom 915 : 62 Bom L R 383 : 1960 Nag L J 371 : 1960 All W R (Supp) 27 : 1960 All Cr R 226 : 1960 Cr L J 1558 : AIR 1960 Bom 502 (512) (Pt J) (Pr 36) (FB).

——Art. 72 — Remission of sentence—Recommendation by Court.

The Court is concerned only with the passing of the sentence; to carry it into effect is the function of the executive Government. It is up to them to decide whether they should invoke their powers of granting remission in a particular case. 1957 Ker L J 404 : 1957 Ker L T 418 : 1957 Mad L J (Cri) 321 : 1957 Cri L J 852 : AIR 1957 Ker 102 (103) (Pt B) (Pr 4).

——Arts. 72, 161 and Preamble — Cognate and analogous law—American decisions—Use of.

In many respects the power of pardon and reprieves conferred under the Indian Constitution by Art. 72 on the President and by Art. 161 on the Governor of State is very similar to the power of the President of the United States of America in granting pardons and reprieves. The wording of the corresponding articles is also similar and such being the case, decisions of the United States Supreme Court are useful in the decision of questions with respect to the power of pardon and reprieves conferred under Arts. 72 and 161. 1954 Mad W N 337 : (1954) 2 M L J 166 : 1954 Cr L J 1370 : ILR (1955) Mad 92 : AIR 1954 Mad 911 (913) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (DB).

——Arts. 72, 161 — Pardon — Power—Nature and extent of—Amnesty pending reference for confirmation of sentences—Effect—(Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 401).

Under Arts. 72 and 161 the Head of the State is given authority by means of an executive act to tender pardons and reprieves and those functions can be exercised even before conviction. How far a general jail delivery is wise, justified or expedient in circumstances prevailing in the country is a matter perfectly within the discretion and decision of the executive authorities, and need not be discussed, or decided by Courts of law whose functions are entirely judicial.

Therefore, the release of the prisoners condemned to death, as a result of a general amnesty granted by the State Government, when their trials were referred for confirmation of their sentences by the High Court does not amount to an act of interference with the due and proper course of justice, as even after their release the power of the High Court to pronounce upon the validity, propriety and correctness of the convictions and sentences remains unaffected. American case-law relied on. 1954 Mad W N 337 : (1954) 2 M L J 166 : 1954 Cr L J 1370 : I L R (1955) Mad 92 : A I R 1954 Mad 911 (915, 918) (Pt C) (Prs 12, 13, 25) (DB).

——Arts. 72 and 161 — Powers under—Nature of — Executive or judicial.

The powers conferred under Arts. 72 and 161 to grant pardons, suspend, remit or commute sentences, etc., of any convict, are obviously judicial in nature and they are to be exercised by the President or the Governor in the exercise of executive functions and that also not in accordance with rules of natural justice, i. e., not after hearing the parties concerned. It cannot be seriously urged that when the President or the Governor of a State exercises these powers he is doing so as a judicial or quasi-judicial authority. 59 Punj L R 199 : AIR 1958 Punj 302 (304) (Pt E) (Pr 5).

——Arts. 72, 161, 238, 362 and 372—Scope—Travancore Cochin Covenant, Art. 21— Power of Maharaja of Cochin to grant suspension, remission or commutation of sentence cannot be invoked or exercised after commencement of Constitution.

After the commencement of the Constitution of India, the Maharaja of Cochin can no longer invoke the powers under Art. 21 of the Covenant. Notwithstanding the integration of the two States of Travancore and Cochin Art. 21 of the Covenant retained in the Maharaja of Cochin the powers of suspension, remission or commutation of death sentences passed in respect of offences committed in the territory of Cochin, but those powers cannot survive the passing of the Constitution of India, after which no power of sovereignty continues to vest in the members of the Princely Order. After the commencement of the Constitution no individual or body or institution in the territory of India can exercise any executive or judicial or legislative power unless the Constitution confers it or countenances its exercise. The Constitution confers these powers on no other authority or dignitary than those specified in Arts. 72, 161 and 238 viz., the President, Governor of a State and the Rajpramukh. The Covenant, assuming it is law within the meaning of Art. 372, can prevail only subject to the provisions of the Constitution, and when the Constitution confers these powers on specified authorities it is not proper to construe the powers under Art. 21 of the Covenant to survive after the commencement of the Constitution. ILR (1955) Trav-Co 788 : 1955 Ker L T 727.

Article 73 indicates the extent of the executive power of the Union while Art. 162 deals with the executive power of a State and Art 298 further extends the scope of the executive power of the Union and of each State. Article 297 lays down that all lands, minerals and other things of value underlying the ocean within the territorial waters of India, shall vest in the Union and be held for the purposes of the Union.

Held, that the notification of the Andhra Pradesh Government G. O. Ms. No. 1617 Industries, dated 17th December, 1957, titled 'Reservation of certain areas of Krishna District in Jaggayyapet Taluk for public sector' was issued in pursuance of the Industrial Policy Resolution of the Government of India and with their prior approval and therefore there was no constitutional inhibition in regard to the action taken by the State Government. The State Government has power to carry on trade or business as prescribed by Art. 298 as amended in its present form by the Constitution (7th Amendment) Act, 1956. AIR 1955 S C 549, Rel. on. It cannot be contended that the resolution passed by the Government of India, which was given effect to by the State of Andhra Pradesh, is bad for want of legislative sanction. ——Arts. 73 and 162—Executive power not confined to carrying out laws.

Articles 73 and 162 of the Constitution do not contain any definition as to what executive function is and what activities would legitimately come within its scope. The two Articles are concerned primarily with the distribution of executive power between the Union on the one hand and the States on the other. They do not mean that it is only when the Parliament or the State Legislature had legislated on the items pertaining to their respective lists, that the Union or the State executive, as the case may be, can proceed to function in respect to them. The language of Art. 73 clearly indicates that the powers of the Union executive do extend to matters on which the Parliament is competent to legislate and are not confined to matters over which the legislation has been passed already. The same principle underlies Art. 162 of the Constitution. AIR 1955 S C 549, Foll.

An acquisition of land was made by the State for the purpose of establishing a slaughter house and a drug factory. The purpose behind the latter project was stated to be to save foreign exchange.

delegated to it by the Central Government under S. 124 (1), Government of India Act, 1935, continued even after the Constitution came into force. ——Art. 74—'Aid and advise'—Meaning.

The expression 'aid and advise' in Art. 74 may apparently suggest that it is left to the President to accept the advice or ignore the same and thus the decision on all matters will be of the President himself. But on a true interpretation of the expression in the context of the relevant provisions of the Constitution it becomes abundantly clear that the function of Ministers or Council of Ministers is not merely giving advice; they can take decisions which must take effect. ● ——Art. 102 (1) (a) — 'Office of profit under the Government'—What constitutes — Person appointed auditor of Durgapur Projects, Ltd. or Hindusthan Steel Ltd., holds office of profit under the Government.

For holding an office of profit under the Government, one need not be in the service of Government and there need be no relationship of master and servant between them. The Constitution itself makes a distinction between the holder of an office of profit under the Government and the holder of a post or service under the Government. The Constitution has also made a distinction between the holder of an office of profit under the Government and the holder of an office of profit under a local or other authority subject to the control of Government. The decisive test for determining whether a person holds any office of profit under the Government is the test of appointment. The circumstance that the source from which the remuneration is paid is not from public revenue is a neutral factor—not decisive of the question. Whether stress will be laid on one factor or the other will depend on the facts of each case. However, where the several elements, the power to appoint, the power to dismiss, the power to control and give directions as to the manner in which the duties of the office are to be performed, and the power to determine the question of remuneration are all present in a given case, then it must be held that the officer in question holds the office under the authority so empowered.

The Hindustan Steel Ltd. and the Durgapur Projects Ltd. are Government Companies. The Comptroller and Auditor-General of India exercises full control over the auditors of a Government company. The Comptroller and Auditor-General is himself a holder of an office of profit under the Government of India, being appointed by the President and his administrative powers are such as may be prescribed by rules made by the President, subject to the provisions of the Constitution and of any law made by Parliament. If we look at the matter from the point of view of substance rather than of form, an auditor as the holder of an office of profit in the two Government Companies, the Durgapur Projects Ltd. and the Hindustan Steel Ltd., is really under the Government of India. Thus he holds an office of profit under the Government of India within the meaning of Art. 102 (1) (a) of the Constitution. As such he is disqualified for being chosen as, and for being, member of either House of Parliament. A I R 1958 Mad 343; AIR 1958 S C 52 and A I R 1958 S C 937, Rel. on. Guru Gobinda Basu v. Under the existing law persons returned as members of a State Legislative Assembly or the Council of States cannot claim immunity from arrest for preventive detention and therefore, they can be detained under the provisions of the Preventive Detention Act whilst their membership of the Assembly or the Council of States continues.

A claim by a member of either house of State Legislature of freedom from arrest during his membership is a claim to privilege or immunity and, therefore, is governed by Art. 105 of the Constitution of India.

Under Art. 105 (3) the powers, privileges and immunities of members may be defined by Parliament and until they are so defined they shall be similar to the powers, privileges and immunities of members of the British Parliament.

A perusal of the provisions of Arts. 84 and 102 of the Constitution of India and the relevant provisions (Ss. 5, 6, 7, 8, 16 and 19) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, which deal with qualifications and disqualifications of members of either house of the State Legislature will make it clear that preventive detention does not disqualify a member and a person against whom an order under the Preventive Detention Act has been made can be elected as a member of either House of the Legislature and if so elected, such an order does not disqualify him from membership. Further, if the order was made during his membership such would not disqualify him.

Under Arts. 21 and 22 of the Constitution of India, if a person, whoever he may be, has been convicted of an offence under the law in a trial in accordance with the procedure laid down by law, or if a person, whoever he may be, has been detained by an order made under some valid law, the procedure of that law being properly followed, such conviction or detention is valid. Articles 21 and 22 do not exempt members of either House of a Legislature, and apply to all.

The various articles of the Constitution must be construed as a whole and effect, if possible, must be given to all of them. It would be impossible to hold that Arts. 21 and 22 of the Constitution do not apply to members of the Legislature who have been convicted and sentenced to shorter terms of imprisonment and to persons detained under valid orders made under the Preventive Detention Act.

The Constitution of India deals with the qualifications for membership and disqualifications for membership in Arts. 84 and 102 and it deals with the privileges and immunities of members in Art. 105. The makers of our Constitution therefore drew a sharp distinction between the qualifications and disqualifications of members and their privileges and immunities. The Representation of the People Acts of 1950 and 1951 merely deal with the qualifications and disqualifications of members. They do not purport to deal with the privileges and immunities of members The Acts in question have been passed under powers given in Arts. 84 and 102 of the Constitution. The Constitution envisages express legislation on these questions of privileges and immunities and mere legislation on qualifications and disqualifications will not touch the question. Parliament has not yet defined any privileges or immunities of members. All that it has done is to lay down what should be the qualifications of a member and what will disqualify him. If he is not disqualified he will continue as a member with such privileges and immunities as now exist. As no legislation has yet been passed affecting such powers and immunities, the rights, privileges and immunities of members of either House of the Legislature are those of members of Parliament of the United Kingdom. Disqualification is a very different matter from any particular immunity claimed by members. If a member is not disqualified he remains a member. Whether as such member he can claim any particular immunity must depend upon express law relating to such immunities.

At the present time in England the privilege of freedom from arrest is limited to civil causes and has not been allowed to interfere with the administration of criminal justice.

Preventive detention partakes more of a criminal than of a civil character. The Preventive Detention Act only allows persons to be detained who are dangerous or are likely to be dangerous to the State. It is difficult to contend that an order of preventive detention is of a civil character. They are orders made when persons are suspected of serious criminal activities directed at the welfare of the State and of the community. It is true that such orders are made when criminal charges possibly could not be established, but the basis of the orders are a suspicion of nefarious and criminal or treasonable activities.

It seems to follow, therefore, that the English Parliament claims no privileges for its members against preventive detention or against executive order made under legislative authority. If no such privilege exists or is claimed in the United Kingdom then it follows that no such privilege exists at the present moment in India.

Under Art. 101 (4) of the Constitution the absence of a member for sixty days without permission of the House does not automatically lead to vacation of the seat. The House in such a case may declare the seat vacant. But it may not and it is impossible to believe that a House of Parliament would declare a seat vacant by reason of absence where the cause of absence was due to detention, or imprisonment, unless the House thought that the conduct of the person concerned was such as really to make him unfit to be a member of the House. Though there is no such provision in England it cannot be overlooked that the House of Commons in England may expel a person for reasons which do not disqualify him, and declaring a seat vacant under Art. 101 (4) of the Constitution is action very similar to expulsion and therefore action under that clause may never be taken except for good cause That being so, the existence of cl. (4) of Art. 101 does not really make the position in India materially different from that obtaining in England.

Even assuming that privilege could be claimed because it was recognised in England, such could only be claimed within a period of forty days from the summoning of Parliament In England, the immunity from arrest existed for forty days before the sitting of Parliament and for forty days after prorogation. Hence where the Assembly of a State has not been summoned and there is no knowing when it will be summoned it would be premature to claim such a privilege. Ansumali Majumdar v. State of West Bengal, 1952 Cri L J 1454 : ILR (1954) 1 Cal 272 : 56 Cal W N 711 : AIR 1952 Cal 632 (634, 635, 636 637) (Prs 8, 9, 18, 23, 25, 29, 30a, 32, 37, 38) (SB).

——Arts. 105, 122, 194 and 212—Officers and members of Parliament or Legislature—Court's power to interfere with their legislative functions.

A Speaker of Parliament or Legislature or a Chairman of the Rajya Sabha are officers within the meaning of Art. 122 or 212. Ministers of the Government whether of the Centre or of States are also members respectively of Parliament or Legislature; as such the Courts cannot interfere with them in the part they play in the proceedings or business of the Assemblies nor can they interfere with their privileges, as the rights of any of them to introduce any Bill in their respective assemblies are rights and privileges of these members whether as members or as Ministers. Per Das Gupta, C. J.—There is nothing in principle or authority that would permit delegation of the question to a subordinate body as to how the rate of tax should be determined. The legislation in S. 229, Calcutta Municipal Act, in so far as it leaves the determination of the rate of what it calls a license fee but is in reality a tax to the Corporation with the approval of the State Government is beyond the limits of permissible delegation and so invalid.

Per Bachawat, J., Contra.—The delegation made by S. 229 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1951, to the Corporation of Calcutta of the power to fix the rates of tax for different classes of advertisements is valid. Such a delegation of power to municipal corporation is constitutionally permissible. The provisions of the State List, Item 5, Art. 110 (1), Art. 199 (2) and Art. 277 of the Constitution sufficiently indicate that the delegation to a municipality or other local authority of the power to impose and levy a tax enumerated in the State List is permitted by the Constitution. Section 229 empowers the Corporation of Calcutta to prescribe the rate of taxation by rules with the approval of the State Government. Such a delegation is permissible in law. Section 229 is not invalid on the ground that it delegates legislative functions beyond the permissible limits of delegation.

Per Das Gupta, C. J. and Bachawat, J.—The power to select cases for exemptions which have been left to the Corporation under S. 229 is permissible. AIR 1959 Cal 704 (708, 709, 714) (Pt A) (Prs 17, 20, 57, 58, 59) (DB).

Article 123 (1) empowers the President to promulgate an Ordinance when two conditions are fulfilled : (i) that both Houses of Parliament are not in session, and (ii) the President is satisfied that circumstances exist which render it necessary for him to take immediate action. On the terms of the Preamble of the Essential Services Maintenance Ordinance, 1960, promulgated by the President, it is clear that both these conditions were satisfied at the time of the promulgation of the Ordinance. ●——Arts. 129, 194 (3) and 215—Contempt of Court and Legislature — Power to punish for contempt to be exercised cautiously.

A Court should never forget that the power to punish for contempt large as it is, must always be exercised cautiously, wisely and with circumspection. Frequent or indiscriminate use of this power in anger or irritation would not help to sustain the dignity or status of the Court, but may sometimes affect it adversely. Wise Judges never forget that the best way to sustain the dignity and status of their office is to deserve respect from the public at large by the quality of their judgments, the fearlessness, fairness and objectivity of their approach, and by the restraint, dignity and decorum which they observe in their judicial conduct. What is true of the judicature is equally true of the Legislatures. ●——Arts. 129, 215 — Contempt of Court — What constitutes —Breach of undertaking—(Contempt of Courts Act (1952), S. 5).

The petitioner had made a petition to the Supreme Court in respect of a consignment of goods for carriage by sea. This petition had come before the Supreme Court for hearing on 24th March 1955. The Solicitor-General of India made a statement to the Court indicating that the goods which had been confiscated by the Customs Authorities would not be sold or otherwise dealt with for a month from the date of the communication to the petitioner of the final order that the Central Government might pass in the revisional petition preferred by him before them.

Held, that the assumption that the Supreme Court's order required that his revisional petition should be disposed of by the Central Government within a month, was entirely unwarranted. The period of one month which was mentioned in the order was the period granted to the petitioner to move the Supreme Court for special leave after the decision of his revision petition by the Central Government was communicated to him. If no undertaking was given as assumed by the petitioner no contempt could arise on the ground that the undertaking had not been complied with. Bhatnagars and Co. v. Union of India, (1957) S C J 546 : 1957 S C A 810 : 1957 S C R 700 : AIR 1957 S C 478 (481, 482) (Pt F) (Pr 5).

●——Arts. 129 and 215— Contempt — Interference with course of administration of justice—Punishment.

In order to constitute contempt it is not necessary that there should in fact be an actual interference with the course of administration of justice but it is enough if the offending publication is likely or if it tends in any way to interfere with the proper administration of law. The summary jurisdiction exercised by superior Courts in punishing contempt of their authority exists for the purpose of preventing interference with the course of justice and for maintaining the authority of law as is administered in the Court and thereby affording protection to public interest in the purity of the administration of justice. This is certainly an extraordinary power which must be sparingly exercised but where the public interest demands it the Court will not shrink from exercising it and imposing punishment even by way of imprisonment, in cases where a mere fine may not be adequate.

A party to a pending appeal in the Supreme Court in which the State of Uttar Pradesh was the respondent distributed in the Court premises a printed leaflet which contained the following paragraph :

"The public has full and firm faith in the Supreme Court but sources that are in the know say that the Government acts with partiality in the matter of appointment of those Hon'ble Judges as Ambassadors, Governors, High Commissioners, etc., who give judgments against Government but this has so far not made any difference in the firmness and justice of the Hon'ble Judges."

Held, (1) that the object of writing this paragraph and particularly of publishing it at the time it was actually done was quite clearly to affect the minds of the Judges and to deflect them from the strict performance of their duties. The offending passage and the time and place of its publication certainly tended to hinder or obstruct the due administration of justice and was a contempt of Court.

(2) that even if the passage about the Judges was not in the leaflet the rest would still amount to a serious contempt of Court. There was in it a strong denunciation of the State of Uttar Pradesh, a party to the appeal and the petitions, regarding the very matters then under the consideration of the Court. It was not fair comment on the proceedings but an attempt to prejudice the Court against the State and to stir up public feeling on the very question then pending for decision. The manner in which the leaflets were distributed, the language used in them and the timing of their publication could only have had one object namely, to try and influence the Judges in favour of the petitioner and the others who were in the same position as himself. This again was a clear contempt of the Court.

(3) that in all the circumstances of this case it was a fit case where the power of the Court should be exercised and that it was necessary to impose the punishment of imprisonment. Hiralal Dixit v. Where a newspaper article while criticising a Supreme Court decision not merely preached to the Courts of law the sermon of divine detachment from extraneous considerations such as politics and policies but also proceeded to attribute improper motives to the Judges, it was held that the article not only transgressed the limits of fair and bona fide criticism but had a clear tendency to affect the dignity and prestige of the Court and therefore amounted to gross contempt of Court. 1. Scope.

——Art. 132 — Scope of — Right conferred by this article and Art. 134. See Ibid, Art. 134. A I R 1954 Ajmer 18 (1).

——Art. 132 (1) — Scope — Power of High Court to grant bail to, or suspend execution of sentence of, convicted person who has been granted certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) or Art. 132 (1). See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 426 (2-B). 1958 Cri L J 1107 : A I R 1958 All 667.

——Arts. 132 (1) and 133 (1) and (2)—Scope of enquiry.

Per A. P. Srivastava, J.—A certificate under Art. 133 entitles the applicant to raise in his appeal all questions including questions relating to the interpretation of the Constitution which he may like to raise. It is, therefore, not necessary to grant to him a certificate under Art. 132 also. ILR (1958) 1 All 318: AIR 1958 All 621 (633) (Pt D) (Pr 66) (DB).

——Arts. 132, 133 and 134—Power to stay execution or operation of order passed by High Court.

Per Desai J.—Arts. 132, 133 and 134 simply confer jurisdiction upon a High Court to issue a certificate. The power to stay execution or operation of a decree or order passed by it because an appeal from it is contemplated or has been filed cannot be said to be a power incidental to the power of granting a certificate and cannot be assumed to be included in it. 1957 All W R (H C) 268 : A I R 1957 All 505 (519) (Pt Q) (Pr 24) (DB).

——Arts. 132 and 133—Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 109 and 110 and O. 45, R. 3—Power of High Court to issue certificate of fitness in case of appeal to Supreme Court—Respective scopes of provisions.

The provisions of Ss. 109 and 110, Civil P. C., must be and are expressed to be, subject to the constitutional rights. Therefore, the person cannot be denied his constitutional rights merely on the ground that the circumstances in which he claims the rights are not governed by the provisions of Ss. 109 and 110.

These two Articles 132 and 133 grant a right of appeal in certain circumstances and the provisions in the Civil P C are expressed to deal with only some of them. Therefore the provisions in the Code cannot be said to be at variance with those of the Constitution. Hence, merely because Ss. 109 and 110 and O. 45, Civil P. C. provide for the granting of a certificate in certain circumstances, it cannot be argued that the High Court cannot, under the provisions contained in Arts. 132 and 133, Constitution of India, grant a certificate in other circumstances. AIR 1949 P C 239, Dist. AIR 1957 All 28 (32, 33) (Pt A) (Pr 9) (DB).

——Arts. 132 (1), 134 and 136 (1)—Interpretation of —Liberal construction if should be given —Right of appeal in criminal matters—Intention of legislature. See Ibid, Art. 134 (1) (c). AIR 1957 Andh Pra 871 (DB).

——Arts. 132 (1), 133 (1) & (3) — Scope — Certificate under Art. 133 (1) (c) granted — Case also involving wrong decision on a substantial question of law as to interpretation of Constitution — Whether leave under Art. 132 also is necessary. See Ibid, Art. 133 (1) and (3). AIR 1953 Assam 101.

——Arts. 132, 133 Distinction between—Decision on vital issue—Same can be appealed against under Art. 132 but not under Art. 133.

There is a marked difference in approach between the two Articles. Article 132 permits a decision on a vital issue to be agitated before the Supreme Court even if it is a decision on just an issue, whereas Art. 133 does not permit an appeal to be taken, unless the order proposed to be appealed from is a complete adjudication determining the rights of the parties. The absence of an explanation like the one attached to Art. 132 is an indication that unless an order proposed to be appealed from under Art. 133 completely disposes of and determines the rights of the parties, no appeal was intended to be permitted under that article. (1964) 51 ITR 807 : AIR 1963 Cal 281 (288) (Pt C) (Pr 24) (DB).

——Art. 132 — Object underlying Article.

Under Art 132 proceedings which involve a substantial question of law as to interpretation of the Constitution are placed by the Constitution in a special category irrespective of the nature of the proceedings in which they arise and an appeal to the Supreme Court of the widest amplitude is allowed in cases involving such questions. The main object underlying the Article is that the final authority of interpreting the Constitution must rest with the Supreme Court. (1964) 2 Mad L J 289 : (1964) 2 I T J 287 : 1964-54 I T R 293.

2. "Judgment, decree or final order".

●——Arts. 132 and 133—Abatement of appeal—Preliminary issue in suit raising question of vires of Act—State impleaded as party—Certificate of appeal to defendant against finding on issue—Death of plaintiff—Effect Maintainability of appeal - (Civil P. C. (1908), O. 22, R. 1).

While the suit of the plaintiff for a declaration was pending, the Bombay Prevention of Ex-communication Act (Bombay Act 42 of 1949) came into force. The defendant contended that the Act had no retrospective operation and that it was unconstitutional. As one of the issues tried as a preliminary issue, raised the question of vires of the Act the State of Bombay was impleaded as the second defendant. The Single Judge of the High Court who tried the preliminary issue held that the impugned Act was retrospective in its operation and it was within the competence of the Provincial Legislature. Against this finding the defendant preferred an appeal. The Court granted a certificate to appeal to the Supreme Court under Arts. 132 and 133 of the Constitution of India. During the pendency of the appeal the plaintiff-respondent died. The only parties who were before the Supreme Court were the defendant-appellant and the State of Bombay.

Held, that (1) as the claim with which the plaintiff came to Court was an action personal to him, on the principle actio personalis moritur cum persona, when he died, the suit should abate. As an appeal is only a continuation of the suit, there could be no question of continuing what did not exist. The appeal could not be continued against the State for seeking decision on the validity of the Act. AIR 1941 F C 16, Distinguished.

(2) Apart from this, the order appealed against was only a decision on one of the issues and it did not dispose of the suit. There was no judgment, decree or final order and therefore the appeal was not maintainable. The fact that the certificate had been granted would not alter the position as no certificate could be granted in respect of an interlocutory finding. Syedna Taher Saifuddian Saheb v. State of Bombay, 1958 S C J 403 : (1958) 1 Mad L J (S C) 127 (1958) 1 Andh W R (SC) 127 : 1955 S C A 431 : 1958 S C R 1007. AIR 1958 S C 253 (254, 255) (Prs 7, 8, 9).

——Arts. 132 and 133—Order of High Court on a reference under S. 82, Hyderabad Income-tax Act—Appeal - (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109))—(Income-tax Act (1922), S. 66) — (Hyderabad Income-tax Act (1357) Fasli (8 of 1357F) Ss. 82 and 33).

When a forum is abolished without any forum substituted in its place the vested right perishes. Inasmuch as the State Judicial Committee the forum for appeals has been abolished by virtue of Cl. (4) of Art. 374 of the Constitution and having regard to the fact that an appeal from a reference under S. 82, Hyderabad Income-tax Act being a creature of the Statute, the absence of a statutory provision providing for the forum of appeal would not confer a right of appeal to the Supreme Court. Clause (23) of the Adaptation of Laws Order (1950) cannot be said to substitute the Supreme Court in the place of the State Judicial Committee; particularly when an appeal to the State Judicial Committee was a prerogative right exercised by the Nizam and was subject to his assent, the Supreme Court cannot be said to be a corresponding authority to the authority abolished, namely, the State Judicial Committee.

A 'judgment' on a reference under S. 82, Hyderabad Income tax Act is not meant as a 'judgment, decree or final order' within the meaning of Art. 132 or 133. Hence an application filed under S 109, Civil P. C. read with Art. 133 of the Constitution and S. 83, Hyderabad Income-tax Act for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court must be dismissed. AIR 1951 Mad 590, Diss. from. ILR (1956) Hyd 555 : (1956) 30 ITR 726 : AIR 1956 Hyd 136 (136, 137, 138, 139) (Prs 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8) (DB).

——Arts. 132, Expl and 134 (1) – Provisions of Act impugned - Reference made to High Court - Order thereon - No leave to appeal to Supreme Court.

Where on certain sections of the Madras Prohibition Act being impugned as being invalid on one ground or the other, the Magistrate makes a reference to the High Court, even before any evidence is taken, and the High Court decides that none of the provisions so impugned is void, the order of the High Court is not covered by the Explanation to Art. 132.

In such a case as there is neither a judgment, final order nor sentence the petitioners are not entitled to obtain leave under Art. 134 either. 1955 Mad W N 342 (1) : AIR 1955 Mad 532 (532, 533) (Prs 1, 2, 3) (DB)

● ——Art. 132 (1)—Scope of – (Government of India Act (1935), S 205 (1)).

The language of Article 132 is materially different from that of sub-s. (1) of S. 205, Government of India Act, 1935. The change in language in Art 132 (1) is deliberate and that it was intended by the makers of the Constitution to confer a right of appeal from a judgment, decree or final order not only in civil and criminal proceedings but from a judgment or final order in other proceedings as well, provided a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution was involved The insertion of the words "or other proceeding" has widened the range of decisions which can be the subject of appeal to the Supreme Court. Case-law discussed.

No narrow interpretation should be applied to the interpretation of the words "judgment in other proceeding" occurring in the Article. AIR 1939 F C 43, Relied on Sriram Gulabdas v Board of Revenue, M. P., 1953 Nag L J 561 : ILR (1953) Nag 871 : A I R 1954 Nag 1 (10, 11) (Pt C) (Pr 53) (FB).

● ——Art. 132 (1) -'Judgment' – Meaning – Decision of High Court in reference under S 24 (6) C. P. and Berar Sales Tax Act, 1947 Appeal to Supreme Court – (Sales Tax – C P and Berar Sales Tax Act (21 of 1947), S 23 (5)) - (Income-tax Act (1922) S 66 5) – (Letters Patent (Nagpur), Cl. 29).

The term 'judgment" is used in Art 132 (1) in the wider sense to include any decision given by the High Court on a question or questions at issue between the parties to any proceeding properly before the Court which finally determines the rights of parties so far as the Court is concerned. In this sense a decision under S. 23 (5) of the C P and Berar Sales Tax Act or under S 66 (5) of the Income tax Act is clearly a "judgment". It finally determines the rights of the parties so far as the High Court is concerned though the Tribunal may have to reopen the assessment proceedings and make or order further enquiry to give effect to the decision of the High Court.

The decision under S. 23 (5) of the C. P. and Berar Sales Tax Act being thus a 'judgment" in revenue proceedings, the applicant is entitled to a certificate under Art. 132 (1) of the Constitution.

Per Contra. – The jurisdiction exercised by the High Court, whether it be under the Income-tax Act or the Sales Tax Act, is merely advisory and consultative and the opinion given on the questions mooted neither ranks as a "final order" nor even as a 'judgment'. The order does not decide the controversies but merely gives expression to an opinion for the guidance of the referring authority. The opinion, though binding on the Board of Revenue, is not on an "issue" and is not "sufficient for the final disposal of the case". Such decisions did not fall either within the expression "judgment, decree or final order" as used in the Letters Patent of the High Courts or in the Constituion Act in force before the present Constitution The use of the words "civil, criminal or other proceeding" does not make Art. 132 wider than S. 205 of the Government of India Act, 1935. The use of the same expression, namely, "judgment, decree or final order" once again in Art. 132 clearly imports the decisions under S. 205 for the interpretation of that phrase. The addition of the words "other proceeding" does not enlarge the ambit of the section beyond what was included in section 205 of the earlier Constitution and it is not open to the Courts to depart from the view so consistently taken.

The explanation widens the ambit of Art. 132 beyond that of S. 205 but the advisory opinion is not generally an order "sufficient" for the final disposal of the case Sriram Gulabdas v. Board of Revenue, M. P., ILR (1953) Nag 871 : 1953 Nag L J 561 : AIR 1954 Nag 1 (4, 5, 11) (Pt D) (Prs 18, 19, 20, 54, 55) (FB).

3 "Final order."

——Art. 132—"Final Order," meaning of. See Ibid, Art. 133 AIR 1954 Ajmer 12 (2).

——Arts. 132 and 133 — Final order in revision by High Court — Appeal to Supreme Court — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109).

There is no provision in the Civil P. C. similar to that contained in Art. 132 of the Constitution. Since, the Constitution is supreme the right of appeal conferred by Art 133 cannot be abridged or abrogated by any Legislature There can, therefore, be no doubt that an order passed in revision by the High Court, which is a final order in civil proceeding, would be the subject of appeal before the Supreme Court if the other conditions under Art. 133 of the Constitution are fulfilled. 4. High Court.

——Art 132 (1) – Applicability – Bhopal High Court – If "High Court" as defined in Art. 366 — Appeal to Supreme Court from judgments and orders — Competency

For purposes of Art. 132 (1) of the Constitution of India, the Bhopal High Court which owes its existence to the charter granted to it by the Ex-Ruler of Bhopal is not a High Court as defined in Art. 366 of the Constitution nor is it a High Court within the meaning of the Rules of the Supreme Court. The mere fact that the Federal Court Act was applied to the Chief Commissioner's Court of Bhopal cannot confer on it the status of a High Court as defined by Art. 366. Hence no judgment or order of the Bhopal

High Court is appealable to the Supreme Court. AIR 1951 Bhopal 11 (12) (Prs 7, 8, 9).

Where a single Judge of a High Court dismisses certain writ petitions following an earlier decision of the Division Bench of the same High Court leave to appeal to the Supreme Court from the decision of the Single Judge cannot be granted by virtue of cl. (3) of Art. 133 on the ground that they are fit cases for appeal to the Supreme Court as is provided under sub-cl. (c) of cl. (1) of Art. 133; and the mere fact that there hss been an order of Division Bench granting leave to appeal under Art. 133 will not entitle the applicants ipso facto to an order in their favour. But there is no bar for granting a certificate under Art. 132 from such a decision of the single Judge.

Per Desai J. — In civil and criminal proceedings a party has a right of appeal to the Supreme Court if he has obtained a certain certificate; but no party in any other proceeding has a right of appeal to the Supreme Court except when a question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution is involved. If a party to a proceeding that is neither civil nor criminal desires to appeal, even though the proceeding does not involve a question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution, he can do so only after obtaining special leave from the Supreme Court. 1957 All W R (H C) 268 : AIR 1957 All 505 (510) (Pt B) (Pr 3) (DB).

——Art. 132—Civil, criminal or other proceedings—American law.

Whereas according to the American law a proceeding that is not criminal must be civil, it is not so according to our Constitution, because it can be not civil also. Moveover, it cannot be assumed that the words 'civil proceedings' and 'criminal proceedings' have established meanings and that what is a civil proceeding in one country is a civil proceeding in another. 1957 All W R (H C) 268 : AIR 1957 All 505 (512) (Pt C) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Art. 132—Civil or other proceedings.

Per Desai J. — The simplest definition of 'civil proceeding' is a proceeding in a Court of civil jurisdiction, the words 'jurisdiction' and 'proceeding' are interchangeable. The Code of Civil Procedure is meant to govern the procedure in Civil Courts but its applicability is not the test of a civil proceeding, because it may be applied to revenue and other proceedings also. The expression 'other proceedings' does seem to envisage the existence of certain types of proceedings which may be regarded to be neither civil nor criminal.

What Art. 133 lays down is that judgment or decree or final order which is souqht to be appealed against should be passed in a 'civil proceeding'. It does not lay down that the Court passing the order should be a Civil Court. A civil proceeding is one which is taken for the enforcement of a civil right. Whether a proceeding is civil or not depends on the nature of the subject-matter of the proceeding and its object, and not on the mode adopted or the forum provided for enforcement of the right. 1957 All W R (H C) 268 : AIR 1957 All 505 (515, 521, 522) (Pt F) (Prs 12, 28, 31, 32) (DB).

The words 'civil proceeding' are wide enough to cover any proceeding of a civil nature and would include proceedings held by the High Court in exercise of its original jurisdiction and also proceedings held by it in exercise of its appellate jurisdiction and there is no warrant whatsoever for excluding proceedings held by it in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction from their scope. AIR 1957 All 28 (32, 33) (Pt B) (Pr 9) (DB).

——Art. 132—'Civil proceedings'—Meaning of.

It is only when the questions of law involved relate to the interpretation of the Articles of the Constitution that the petitioner could get a certificate under Art. 132 of the Constitution. In order that the petitioner may be entitled to get a certificate under Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution of India he has to satisfy the High Court that the judgment of the High Court in appeal was an order arising in a civil proceeding. Ordinarily, 'civil proceedings' are proceedings relating to right to property, status of a person or right to an office. 'Proceeding' means in the ordinary sense, the form in which action is brought or defended. The right to election is a creature of the statute. It is not a right vested in one person with the duty on the other to obey the right. It is also not a right which could be enforced in a Court of Law. When it is not a right which could be enforced in a Court of Law and which does not create an obligation on the other party and does not vest any right in the petitioner, it cannot be deemed to be a civil right. (1957) 1 Mad L J (Cri) 700 : 1958 Cri L J 1290 : (1958) 2 Andh W R 324 : 1958 Andh L T 1118 : AIR 1958 Andh Pra 642 (642, 643) (Pts A, B) (Prs 2, 5) (DB).

——Arts. 132, 133, 226—Writ proceedings—Nature of—'Civil, criminal or other proceedings'—Demands upon and takes colour from proceedings in inferior tribunals—Judgment in writ proceedings relating to assessment to income-tax — Not civil proceedings—Leave to appeal to Supreme Court—Not sustainable—Constitution—Substantial question of law as to interpretation of — Supreme Court, final authority — Final order, extended meaning of — Right of appeal of widest amplitude — Equality clause—Question if provision of Income-tax Act violates—Not a question of law as to interpretation of Constitution—Interpretation — Constitution — Interpretation of and application of — Distinction — Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (Central Act 11 of 1922), S. 3.

In assessment proceedings culminating in reference to the High Court, it was held that the petitioner had to be assessed for the assessment years 1952-53 to 1956-57 as the principal officer of an Association of persons under S. 3 of Income-tax Act. Then the petitioner applied under Art. 226 of the Constitution seeking to restrain the Income-tax Officer from enforcing the collection of income-tax arrears from him on the ground that S. 3 of the Act allowing the Officer in his discretion to assess an Association of persons or the members thereof individually offended the equality clause enshrined in Art. 14 of the Constitution. A Bench of the High Court dismissed the application. The petitioner sought leave to appeal to the Supreme Court against the order, under Arts. 132 and 133 of the Constitution.

Held, it is clear from the provisions of the Constitution that there can be proceedings other than civil and criminal and that it is impossible to say that any proceeding other than a criminal proceeding must necessarily be a civil proceeding. The proceedings relating to liability to pay tax partake the character of revenue proceedings. The proceeding under Art. 226 of the Constitution seeking to correct, direct or prohibit proceedings before inferior tribunals will necessarily take its colour from the nature of the original proceeding before the inferior tribunal. The writ proceeding will be a 'civil proceeding' or a 'criminal proceeding' or 'other proceeding' according to the nature of the application and how the questions were raised and decided in the proceeding and how ultimately it reflects upon the proceeding before the inferior tribunal or upon the rights of the aggrieved party. The writ proceeding cannot be deemed to be a civil proceeding merely because an infringement of a fundamental right under Art. 14 of the Constitution is complained of.

Article 133 of the Constitution would not apply because the writ proceeding relating to liability to income-tax is not a civil proceeding. Under Art. 132 of the Constitution, proceedings which involve a substantial question of law as to interpretation of the Constitution are placed by the Constitution in a special category irrespective of the nature of the proceedings in which they arise and a right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the widest amplitude is allowed in cases involving such questions. The main object underlying the Article is that the final authority of interpreting the Constitution must rest with the Supreme Court. With the same idea, an enlarged definition of the expression 'final order' is given in the Article significantly different from Arts. 133 and 134. In an application under Art. 132, two conditions must be satisfied concurrently; (i) the case should involve a decision on the interpretation of the Constitution; and (ii) that decision should also involve a substantial question of law touching that aspect.

Merely because Art. 14, has to be referred to, to find out whether S. 3 of the Income tax Act violates Art. 14 of the Constitution, a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution cannot be said to be involved in the case. ● ——Art. 132 (1)—Other proceedings — Meaning—Includes revenue proceedings.

The words "other proceedings" in Art. 132 should not be construed ejusdem generis with what precedes. Those are words of wide amplitude and include all proceedings other than civil or criminal proceedings and thus include revenue proceedings. AIR 1950 S C 169, Ref.

Substantial constitutional questions arise not only in civil and criminal proceedings but in other proceedings as well. The Supreme Court is the final authority on constitutional matters. It cannot therefore be the intention to exclude the right of appeal from the revenue proceedings even though substantial questions of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution arise in such proceedings. ——Art. 132 — Substantial question of law—(Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110).

Substantial question of law means that (i) the question involved must be one of law, and (ii) it must be a substantial question. The question of law, to be substantial must be in regard to which there is difference of opinion between the different High Courts. AIR 1957 Manipur 7 (9) (Pt B) (Pr 15).

The term "substantial question of law" in Art. 132 of the Constitution of India does not mean a question of general importance but a substantial question of law as between the parties to the case and a question of law in order to be a substantial question must be a question in respect of which there may be a difference of opinion. 5 L. 260 and 9 L. 581, Referred to. 3 Pepsu L R 26 : AIR 1951 Pepsu 61 (61) (Prs 2, 3).

The term 'substantial question of law' in Art. 132 must be interpreted in the same manner as it was done under S. 110, Civil P. C.

Where the only question was whether the Principal of a College was competent to rusticate a student of his College during the subsistence of his studentship for issuing and printing a handbill in which he had condemned the authorities of the College in very strong terms, it was held that there was no difference of opinion regarding the question involved and hence was not a fi case for granting the certificate. 1952 Cri L J 403 : 2 Pepsu L R 506 : AIR 1951 Pepsu 59 (60, 61) (Pr 5).

The term 'substantial question of law' in Art. 132, does not mean a question of general importance but a substantial question of law as between the parties to the case and the question must be one in respect of which there may be a difference of opinion. A I R 1951 Pepsu 61, Rel. on.

A person holding a permanent post of Excise Head Clerk was promoted and was working as Office Superintendent for an indefinite period. He was reverted. On a petition for a writ of mandamus and certiorari his reversion was set aside. The State applied under Art. 132 for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court.

Held, (i) There was no substantial question of law involved regarding the interpretation of the word 'holding' as used in Art. 311 of the Constitution of India.

(ii) There was no substantial question of law involved so far as 'the reduction in rank' of the respondent was concerned. AIR 1957 Tripura 22 (23, 24, 25) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 10, 13, 15).

● — Art. 132 (2) — 'Substantial question of law'—Law finally and authoritatively decided by Supreme Court —Effect.

The interpretation of Art. 14 in the context of classification has been finally settled by the highest Court of this land and under Art. 141 of the Constitution that interpretation is binding on all the Courts within the territory of India — What remained to be done by the High Court was only to apply that interpretation to the facts before it. A substantial question of law therefore cannot arise where that law has been finally and authoritatively decided by the Supreme Court. State of J and K. v. ● ——Arts. 132 (3) and 311 (2)—Substantial question of law — Failure to give reasonable opportunity of showing cause against dismissal.

The State Government asked the respondent to show cause why he should not be dismissed from service for making false declarations with regard to his date of birth to Government and also in his application for the post of Assistant Superintendent Jails addressed to the Public Service Commission. The respondent was not asked to show any cause apart from what was stated in that letter ; after the respondent had submitted his explanation and given documentary evidence in proof of his correct age, he received no communication from Government except his order of dismissal—On his dismissal by the Government the respondent filed a writ petition to the High Court which held that the order of dismissal passed against the respondent was made in violation of the constitutional guarantee contained in Art. 311 (2) and was on that ground void and ineffective.

Held, that, in the circumstances, there was no substantial question of law regarding the interpretation of Art. 311 and on the facts the High Court having found that the respondent had no reasonable opportunity of showing cause against the action proposed to be taken against him, there were no good or compelling reasons for expressing dissent from that view. ——Art. 132 (2)—Substantial question of law—Rules under Art. 309, Rr. 11 and 17 —High Court's jurisdiction to hold enquiry against a Subordinate Judge —Question as to.

Where the High Court has held that it has jurisdiction under Rr. 11 and 17 of the Rules framed under Art. 309 to hold an enquiry into charges against a Subordinate Judge without its being initiated by the State Government, there is no substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution involved in the case in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in AIR 1959 S C 512. Having regard to the fact that the provisions of S. 5 of Sch. 5 of the Constitution are substantially the same as of S. 92 of the Government of India Act, on which there is authoritative pronouncement of the Federal Court the question of law as to the interpretation of S. 5 in Sch. 5 of the Constitution involved in this case can no longer be regarded as substantial as to warrant the grant of leave under Art. 132. The scope and implications of Art. 19 and Art. 14 of the Constitution of India have been the subject of several decisions of the Supreme Court and are now well-known. So it cannot be said now that merely because in considering the question whether a particular statute offends against the Constitution, Art. 19 (1) (g) and Art. 14 have to be referred to for finding out whether the provisions of the Constitution are violated by the impugned statute, there is substantial question as to the interpretation of the Constitution involved in the case. 61 Cal W N 694 : (1958-59) 15 F J R 193 : (1958) I Lab L J 285 : AIR 1957 Cal 702 (709) (Pt F) (Pr 23).

——Art. 132—Substantial questions of law.

Every question of law cannot be regarded as a substantial question of law which would warrant the grant of leave to appeal to the Supreme Court—Applications under Art 226 of the Constitution were directed against an order of 'requisition' made by the Collector of Warangal (then styled as the Civil Administrator of Warangal) under the Defence of Hyderabad Regulation for public purposes. The main objections that were raised with regard to the validity of the order were:—(a) that this order offended Art. 19(1) of the Constitution of India inasmuch as it deprived the petitioners of possessing and holding the property; (b) that this order infringed Art. 31 of the Constitution of India because there was deprivation of the property without payment of compensation; (c) that it was against the fundamental rights conferred under the Constitution under Art. 14 of the Constitution because it went against the principle of equal protection of the laws; (d) that according to S. 15 of the Defence of Hyderabad Regulation it was obligatory that an order of requisitioning should be made causing the least inconvenience to the person who was deprived of his property and the matter as to whether the least inconvenience was being caused to the Petitioners required enquiry and in his case no enquiry had been made and therefore the order was bad; and (e) the pre-requisite of there being a public purpose before a property could be requisitioned had not been satisfied in this case.

Held, that every one of these aspects had been considered and the law with regard to these various points had been laid down by the Supreme Court. The legal objections that could be raised as regards the validity of the order and the right of the Court to go into the question as to whether the requisitioning order was rightly issued were matters which did not warrant reconsideration by the Supreme Court. ——Art. 132—Constitutional question taken in previous application but not pressed at hearing — Question also concluded by authority—Leave to appeal.

Where the question of interpretation of the Constitution taken up in petition u Art. 226 was not pressed at the time of the hearing of that application but was raised by way of argument at the time of petition for granting leave to appeal and the question was concluded by authority of the Supreme Court:

Held, that leave to appeal could not be granted. 23 Cut L T 245 : I L R (1957) Cut 328 : A I R 1958 Orissa 18 (19, 20) (Pt D) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Arts. 132 (1) and 133 (1) (c) — Substantial question of law—Contempt proceedings—Leave to appeal to Supreme Court—Nature of proceedings—Mandamus — Writ of — Alleged invasion of fundamental right under Art. 19 (1) (f) — Power of High Court under Art. 226—Leave to appeal—Art. 134 (1) (c).

A contempt of court may be committed either when a person's action or inaction is in disobedience of an order of Court or when his action or conduct is in disregard of an undertaking given to the Court. An agreement between the parties together with the Court's order thereon may amount to an injunction.

At the hearing of a proceeding after an ad interim order of injunction, a consent order was passed in pursuance of the agreement of the parties one of the terms thereof was: "The respondent will take possession only after the purchase to which he claims to be entitled has been legally completed." After the consent order was recorded, the ad interim order of injunction was vacated. The petitioner, alleging that the respondent disturbed his possession, by forcible entry, in violation of the consent order moved the Court praying for a writ of mandamus against the respondent, directing him to forbear from interfering with the petitioner's possession and also for a rule committing him for contempt of Court. But the rules were discharged, the Court holding that no injunction was called for, that no case was made out, for a writ of mandamus, and that the respondent had not committed any contempt of Court. The petitioner applied for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court by means of two applications, one under Art. 133 and the other under Art. 132 of the Constitution:

Held, (1) that with regard to the question whether the respondent committed any contempt of Court, two views were possible, namely (a) that a consent order remains in the domain of contract, and no undertaking could be implied simply by reason of the fact that a command of the Court was superadded to the agreement, and since no undertaking was given to the Court the taking of possession by the respondent was in breach of an undertaking to the petitioner only and not of an undertaking to the Court, and no contempt was committed; and (b) that the order of the Court read as a whole was in the nature of a prohibitory injunction by the Court, commanding the respondent to refrain from doing anything in breach of the undertaking and the respondent was therefore guilty of contempt in taking possession in violation of the injunction and in breach of the implied promise to the Court; and therefore the point was of great public as well as private importance and the case was a fit case for appeal to the Supreme Court and leave should be granted; (2) that even if the contempt proceedings were treated as criminal proceedings, in view of the fact that the principle involved is of wide public as well as private importance, the High Court would be justified in granting a certificate of fitness under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution; (3) that, however proceedings in Court are to be regarded as anomalous in their nature, and are sui juris; for purposes of leave to appeal to the Supreme Court they are civil proceedings, since the remedy to the petitioner could be given only by way of civil execution, and therefore leave should be granted under Art. 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution; (4) that with regard to the question whether it was a case in which a mandamus should issue under Art. 226, to restore possession to the petitioner, that involved a substantial question of law within the meaning of Art. 132, in view of constitutional questions raised as to the powers of the Court under Art. 226 and as to whether any fundamental right to hold property under Art. 19 (1) (f) has been invaded by reason of the respondent taking possession, which would entitle the petitioner to move the Court for enforcement of such fundamental right and (5) that therefore a certificate should be granted under Arts. 132 (1) and 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court.

Per Reuben, J.—In considering whether there has been an invasion of a fundamental right under Art. 19 (1) (f) a distinction has to be made between the right of a citizen "to hold property" and his title to, hold a particular property, and when the latter, is disputed by a party and definite answer cannot be given without an investigation, it must be held that there is substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution. 42 Cal W N 203; AIR 1948 Cal 294; A I R 1929 Pat 72 (FB) Ref. I L R 30 Pat 287 : A I R 1952 Pat 23 (25, 27, 28) (Pt A) (Prs 10, 11, 12, 21, 24) (DB).

——Art. 132—Substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution.

In a proceeding against the petitioners under S. 137, Companies Act, the Registrar of the Joint Stock Companies made a first information report on the basis of which the Police started investigation. The petitioners applied to the High Court under Art. 226, Constitution of India and contended that an investigation by the Police under Criminal P. C., was excluded when an investigation had been made under the provisions of the Companies Act, because otherwise a discrimination in the procedure would be introduced which would be in conflict with Art. 14 of the Constitution. This argument was rejected by the High Court Thereupon the petitioners applied for leave to appeal under Arts. 132, 133 and 134 of the Constitution to the Supreme Court:

Held, that it could not be said that the case involved a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution and Art. 132 was therefore, not applicable. 57 Punj L R 332 : I L R (1955) Punj 1345 : AIR 1956 Punj 1 (2) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

——Art. 132—'Substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution' — Question of academical interest.

On a petition for mandamus and certiorari, the reversion of a Government servant was set aside and he was reinstated to the post of the Office Superintendent. He was paid the arrears of his salary in compliance with the Court's order without any protest by the Government. Subsequently, the State made an application under Art. 132 for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court.

Held, that even if the application be not deemed to be barred by estoppel, it was not a fit case for being certified as involving a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution of India. A I R 1957 Tripura 22 (25) (Pt B) (Pr 18).

——Arts. 132, 133 (i) (c), 134 (i) (c) — Certificate of fitness—Substantial question of law.

Under an agreement between the promoters of the Light Railway Company and the District Board of Patna the latter had a right of purchasing the Light Railway, subject to certain conditions, in accordance with the provisions of S. 41 of the Bengal Tramways Act. The District Board on the 16-12-1949, gave six months' notice in writing to the Company, according to the provision of S 41 of the Act, declaring its intention to exercise its right of purchasing the Light Railway with effect from the 25-6-1950. On the 17-5-1950, the petitioner company moved the High Court and prayed for a writ of mandamus, restraining the District Board from taking possession of the Light Railway "except in due course of law." A rule was issued by the High Court on the 23-6-1950, and a consent order was passed. One of the terms of the agreement between the parties was thus :

"The District Board will take possession of the undertaking, viz., the Bihar Bukhtiyarpur Light Railway (including the Rajgir Extension) only after the purchase, to which the District Board claims to be entitled, has been legally completed." The petitioner's case was that the opposite party disturbed its possession by a forcible entry at midnight of the 24-6-1950, in violation of the consent order, and a petition was moved in the High Court on the 28-6-1950, praying for a writ of mandamus against opposite parties Nos. 1 and 2 and others, directing them to forbear from interfering with the possession of the petitioner over the Light Railway and also for a rule committing the opposite parties Nos. 1 and 2 for contempt of Court. On the 19-7-1950, the petitioner filed a supplementary petition on the ground of complete dispossession and obtained a further rule calling upon the opposite parties Nos. 1 and 2 to show cause why a mandatory injunction should not issue against them directing them to restore possession of the Light Railway to the petitioner. In view of the admission that dispossession was complete, the rule relating to the issue of a writ to restrain the opposite party from disturbing the petitioner's possession was discharged by the High Court. It had been found that the opposite party had not, by its action complained of, committed any contempt of Court, nor had the petitioner made out a case for the issue of a writ of mandamus asked for.

Held (1) that a contempt of Court may be committed either when a person's action or inaction is in disobedience of an order of a Court or when his action or conduct is in disregard of an undertaking given to the Court. The order of the High Court incorporating the agreement was divisible into parts, namely, (1) the agreement between the parties, and (2) the command of the Court superadded to it. It was open to two constructions. According to one view a consent order remains in the domain of contract and no undertaking to the Court can be implied simply by reason of the fact that a command of the Court is superadded to the agreement. According to the other view as soon as the sanction of the Court is superadded to an agreement undertaking by the party to the Court is implied. The point raised was of great public as well as private importance, and the principle when finally decided by the Supreme Court would be of benefit not only to the parties who were directly involved in the present litigation but to a considerable body of other people also. Therefore it was a fit case for appeal to the Supreme Court and leave should be granted under Art. 133 (1) (c). Even treating the proceeding in the High Court as a criminal proceeding, in view of the fact that the principle involved was of wide public as well as private importance, the High Court would be justified in granting a certificate of fitness under Art. 134 (1) (c).

(2) the writ of mandamus can issue to a person, (or corporation) requiring him to do some particular thing which appertains to his office and is in the nature of a public duty. It could not, however, be said that taking possession of the Light Railway by the District Board or its Chairman was in breach of duty appertaining to the office of the Chairman or the corporation, for their duties are defined in the Local Self-Government Act. If there was an infringement of a fundamental right, it is a substantial point for consideration whether or not the power under Art. 226 is coupled with a duty. In deciding whether decision of the High Court could be supported it would be necessary to consider one or both of two questions: — (1) Is the right alleged to have been infringed a fundamental right? and (2), if it is a fundamental right, does Art. 226 impose a duty in addition to conferring a power? Both of these were questions as to the interpretation of the Constitution of India and were substantial questions of law. The questions raised were ;matters of wide public importance; and in the absence of any authoritative decision of the Supreme Court directly on the point, the High Court ought to grant a certificate under Art. 132. The question whether the law or custom of pre-emption is repugnant to the fundamental rights given in Art. 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution is one involving the interpretation of a provision of the Constitution and is therefore a substantial question of law under Art. 132 (1) of the Constitution. But the question whether the principle of pre-emption by vicinage should apply to an entire mauza, which is one of reasonableness with reference to the circumstances of each case, such as, the area sought to be pre-empted, the length over which there is vicinage, the facilities for cultivation and the like, etc., is not a substantial question of law which would justify the grant of a certificate for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 132 (1) or Art. 133 (1) (c). A I R 1951 Vindh Pra 38 (39) (Pts A, B) (Prs 4, 6).

The question whether the circular dated 29-7-1957 issued by the Railway Board under R. 157 of the Railway Establishment Code is a part of the existing law or not is not a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution because S. 241 (2), Government of India Act, 1935 and Arts. 313 and 366 (10) of the Constitution and the ruling of Supreme Court in AIR 1961 S C 751 have fully clarified the position in this regard. The High Court ought to be extremely chary of exercising its power under Cl. (c) of Art. 134 of the Constitution of India against a person released from detention. The intention of the framers of the Constitution seems to have been that if on the one hand absolute immunity from appeal against an order of release obtaining in England is not to be imported into India, appealability in India ought not to be treted as a matter of course on the other hand. The Constitution provides accordingly for a certificate of fitness and (b) of Art. 134 (1) of the Constitution of India, the High Courts as a sine qua non for imperilling the liberty of a released subject. In all other criminal matters than those falling under sub-cls. (a) and (b) of Art. 134 (1) of the Constitution of India, the High Courts in the respective States in the territory of India should ordinarily be the final Court of appeal. This is a fact which should not be lost sight of when considering the question as to whether a certificate of fitness should or should not issue in any case.

The jurisdiction to certify a case as a fit one for further appeal is to a certain extent discretionary and the jurisdiction to give leave or to refuse leave to appeal is a very delicate one. (Cf. judgment of Lord Esher, M. R., in (1886) 17 L R Q B D 521 at 528).

Where petitions to give leave to appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 134 (1)(c) were filed by the Government of Madras against orders for release of a detenu.

Held, (1) that making any allowance for possible difference between considerations pertinent to civil cases and those pertinent to criminal cases, in the matter of application of tests, those laid down under S. 109 (c), Civil P. C., are broadly applicable to petitions under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution.

(2) That under the Constitution which contains fuller and wider provisions as to appeal than those of the Government of India Act of 1935 which contained only S. 205 corresponding to Art. 132 of the Constitution, there is no such immunity from appealability in the case of an order of release on an application for a writ of habeas corpus as obtains in England.

——Arts. 132 (1) and 133 (1) (c) — "It shall be lawful" in S. 13, Police Act — Wrong interpretation of — Leave to appeal—(Police Act (1861), S. 13).

The Police Act was enacted to reorganize the police and to make it a very efficient instrument for the prevention and detection of crime, and S. 13 gives a statutory protection to the authorities if they act in the manner provided therein. It imposes no obligation on any of them to exercise the power if they do not consider it necessary to do so. It cannot therefore be contended that the use of the expression "it shall be lawful" in S. 13 of the Police Act makes it obligatory on the officers concerned to act in the manner indicated in the section and failure to act in such a manner entitled the person aggrieved to ask for a writ. But assuming that the contention is right, the question involved is one of interpretation of S. 13 of the Police Act; and even if the High Court be held to have rejected the application of the petitioner for the issue of a writ of mandamus on a wrong interpretation of the statute, leave to appeal cannot be granted under the provision of Art. 132 (1) of the Constitution because no question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution arises. Nor can leave be granted under Art. 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution, because the High Court has not passed any order in a Civil proceeding nor is any matter of wide public importance involved in the case. I L R 30 Pat 1252 : 1952 Cri L J 1639 : AIR 1952 Pat 386 (387) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB.)

——Arts. 132 (1) and 134 (1) (c)—Criminal case — Leave to appeal—Grounds—Competency of High Court Judge to hear and decide case if proper ground—Constitution of India, Art. 376 (2).

The petitioners accused were convicted on a murder charge and sentenced to imprisonment for life. The sentence was confirmed on a reference and appeal to a Division Bench of the High Court. The petitioner thereupon applied under Art. 132 (1) and Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution of India for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court on the grounds (1) that one of the judges constituting the Bench which disposed of the appeal was not validly appointed to the office of the Chief Justice and as such the Bench had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal (2) that on the merits the decision confirming the conviction and sentence was wrong and unsustainable in law.

Per Koshi J. — Held that even assuming that the appointment of the Chief Justice was not Constitutionally correct, in view of the events that had become accomplished facts when the decision in the case was given, it was not open in law to the petitioner to raise the competency of the Chief Justice to hear and decide the appeal when it was taken up for hearing or in a proceeding for leave to appeal or in the appeal before the Supreme Court itself, inasmuch as it would amount to a collateral attack which the law did not permit. The first ground raised being devoid of any merit leave to appeal could not be granted on that ground. 1919-46 D L R 547 and Cooley's Constitutional Limitations 8th Edn. Rel. on.

Held also, that the construction of Art. 376 (2) which is involved in the first ground and which occurs in Part 21 of the Constitution is not a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution within the meaning of Art. 132 (1).

Held further, that the second ground urged in support of the application merely involved the question of the appreciation of the approver's evidence and the form of the judgment and therefore it was hardly a matter that could be made the subject of appeal to the Supreme Court. Leave to appeal is not granted except where some clear departure from the requirements of justice exists nor unless by a disregard of the forms of legal process, or by some violation of the principles of natural justice or otherwise substantial and grave injustice has been done. Where the grounds suggested cannot sustain the appeal itself leave cannot be given. 1950 Ker L T 439 : AIR 1951 Trav-Co 45 (48, 50) (Pts A and B) (Prs 10, 14, 16) (DB).

9. Special leave.

● ——Art. 132 (2) — Applicability—Special leave — Grant of—Conditions.

Under Cl (2) of Art. 132 there is no scope for granting a special leave unless two conditions are satisfied: (i) the case should involve a question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution; and (ii) the said question should be a substantial question of law. The principle underlying the Article is that the final authority of interpreting the Constitution must rest with the Supreme Court. With that object the Article is freed from other limitations imposed under Arts. 133 and 134 and the right of appeal of the widest amplitude is allowed irrespective of the nature of the proceedings in a case involving only a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution. ● ——Art. 132 (1) — Grant of certificate—Question of interpretation of Preventive Detention Act

Before the Supreme Court can grant a certificate under Art. 132 (1) of the Constitution, the case must involve a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution of India. Before the High Court, in a writ petition, the argument was based on the plea that the petitioner's product was medicinal and, therefore, was exempt under Cl. 16 (1) (c) of the Fruit Products Order, 1955. The High Court held against the contention. The point that the product was not an essential commodity within the meaning of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955, was not raised. It was assumed that the product was an essential commodity.

Held, that the point that it was not an essential commodity within the meaning of the Essential Commodities Act could not be raised for the first time in an appeal before the Supreme Court against the order of the High Court. Hamdard Dawakhana (Wakf), Delhi v. Union of India, 1965 S C D 348 :

● —Arts. 132 and 136 — Certificate of fitness under Art. 132 — Appellant cannot raise grounds other than those on which certificate is granted except with leave of Court – Such leave when can be granted.

A person appealing to the Supreme Court under Art. 132 of the Constitution may not challenge the correctness or propriety of the decision appealed against on grounds other than those on which the certificate is granted, unless the Supreme Court grants him leave to raise other questions. Such leave is generally granted where the trial before the High Court has resulted in grave miscarriage of justice or where the appeal raises such substantial questions, that on an application made to the Supreme Court under Art. 136 of the Constitution leave would be granted to the applicant to appeal against the decision on those questions.

The Assam Sales Tax Act, 1947, provides a hierarchy of taxing tribunals competent to decide question as to the liability of the tax-payer under the Act, with a right to have questions of law arising out of the order decided by the High Court of the Province. The scheme evolved by the Legislature for determination of tax liability is that all questions of fact are to be decided by the taxing authorities and on questions of law arising out of the decision of the taxing authorities the opinion of the High Court may be obtained. The High Court is again not an appellate authority over the decision of the Commissioner; it has merely to give its opinion on questions of law arising out of order of the Commissioner. Whether the decision of the Commissioner is not supported by any evidence or is based upon a view of facts which could never be reasonably entertained, is a question of law which arises out of the order.

The assessee appellants who were assessed to sales tax without resorting to the machinery provided under S. 32 of the Act, moved the High Court under its writ jurisdiction and invited the High Court to reopen the decision of the taxing authorities on questions of fact and this they did without even raising the questions before the Superintendent of Taxes and the Assistant Commissioner. The High Court declined to consider whether the conclusions of the taxing authorities on questions of fact were correct but granted a certificate under Art. 132 of the Constitution on the ground that the plea about vires of S. 2 (12) of the Act raised a substantial question as to the interpretation of the Constitution At the hearing the appellant sought to raise grounds other than constitutional on which certificate had been granted.

Held, that the Supreme Court would decline to entertain the application to raise questions other than those raised by the certificate granted by the High Court because the questions sought to be raised were questions of facts which were not canvassed at the appropriate stage before the taxing authorities and the machinery provided under the Act for determination of questions relating to liability to tax was attempted to be by-passed. ● —Arts. 132, 133—Scope—Certificate under Article 133—High Court cannot limit certificate to any particular point — Entire appeal is before Supreme Court —Point though not argued before High Court not abandoned—Supreme Court dealt with the same.

Order 16, R 4 and O. 18, R. 3 (2) of the Supreme Court Rules (1950) do not proprio vigore lay down that the High Court can issue a limited certificate; but they assume that under certain circumstances it can do so. Article 133 of the Constitution does not empower the High Court to limit the certificate to any particular point. If the decree of the High Court is one of affirmance, the High Court certifies that the appeal involves a substantial question of law; and it has been the practice of some of the High Courts to state the substantial question of law in the certificate issued. Once the certificate is issued and the appeal is properly presented before the Supreme Court, the entire appeal will be before it. The assumption underlying the said rules of the Supreme Court may appropriately refer to a certificate issued by a High Court under Art 132 of the Constitution. Where the certificate is given under Art. 133 the entire appeal is before the Supreme Court. But it does not follow from this legal position that the Supreme Court should allow the appellants to raise a plea before it if they had failed to do so before the High Court. Where the appellant did not argue a point before the High Court but at the same time did not abandon it, Supreme Court dealt with the same. Chandrasekhara Mudaliar v. Where a High Court in granting a certificate under Art 132 (1) holds, rightly or wrongly, that the case involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of Art 226 and not Art. 311 the effect of the certificate is to enable the appellant to appeal to the Supreme Court on the ground that the question of the interpretation of Art. 226 has been wrongly decided by the High Court, and if the appellant wishes to appeal on any other ground, he can move the Supreme Court for necessary leave as required by Article 132 (3). Where the appeals have come up before Supreme Court on the strength of a certificate granted under Art. 132 (1) the appellants are not entitled to challenge the propriety of the decision appealed against on a ground other than that on which the certificate was given except with the leave of the Supreme Court. ——Art. 132 — Scope — Appeal to Supreme Court—Conditions.

Per Desai, J.—Three facts emerge from the provisions of Art 132 (1) that proceedings are divisible into three classes, 'Civil', 'Criminal' and 'other' proceedings; (2) that the appeal must be filed after the certificate is given by the High Court and not before; (3) that it must be filed in the Supreme Court, and not in the High Court, the grounds of appeal may, with the leave of the Supreme Court, include grounds other than that the question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution has been wrongly decided; it follows that they are expected to be prepared after the certificate is given or the leave is granted. If the appellant wants to appeal on any other ground, he must after receiving the certificate from the High Court or the special leave from the Supreme Court obtain the leave of the Supreme Court for the same, 1957 All W R (H C) 268 : AIR 1957 All 505 (510) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

——Art. 132 — Scope — Certificate granted under Art. 132 (1)—Appellant wishing to urge other grounds —Leave of Supreme Court and not further certificate from High Court is necessary — (Government of India Act (1935), S. 205 (2)).

Under clause (3) of Art. 132 if any appellant to the Supreme Court who has obtained from the High Court a certificate under Cl. (1) wishes to urge other grounds in his appeal, he can do so if the Supreme Court gives him the necessary leave and only if such leave is given. There is no scope for the High Court granting a further certificate under Art. 133 for the purpose of authorising the further grounds to be taken in the appeal. The intermediate class of grounds which was contemplated by S. 205 (2), Government of India Act, (namely those on which a party could have appealed without special leave to His Majesty in Council, if no certificate under S. 205 (1) had been given), has now disappeared and does not find a place in Cl. (3) of Art. 132. That clause knows only of two broad divisions, namely, grounds authorised by the certificate granted under Cl. (1) and such other grounds as the Supreme Court may permit the appellant to take. 61 Cal W N 600 : AIR 1957 Cal 528 (529, 530) (Pt C) (Prs 4, 5, 6) (DB).

11. Form of certificate.

——Art. 132—Form of certificate.

No particular form is required for a certificate under Art. 132. It can be granted by the Judge by an observation at the end of the judgment. 61 Cal W N 600 : AIR 1957 Cal 528 (529) (Pt A) (Pr 2) (DB).

The Adaptation of Laws Order, 1950, made suitable amendments to Ss. 109 and 110 and O. 45 of the C. P. Code and the Supreme Court by virtue of rule-making power conferred upon it by the Constitution in regard to matters pertaining to appeals have made the rules in O. 12 applying the provisions of O. 45 of the Civil P. C. to appeals preferred under Arts. 132 (1) and 133 (1) and 135 of the Constitution.

Where after an appeal had been filed in the Supreme Court the appellant fails to furnish security and also the deposit towards defraying charges of printing he cannot escape the consequences of cancellation of his certificate by relying on the fact that O. 45, Civil P C., had not been suitably amended by the High Court. 1951 Mad W N 527 : (1951) 2 Mad L J 197 : AIR 1952 Mad 94 (Pr 6) (DB).

14. Effect of grant of certificate.

●——Art. 132—Interlocutory orders.

Where the order appealed against is only a decision on one of the issues and it does not dispose of the suit there is no judgment, decree or final order and hence no appeal to the Supreme Court is maintainable. The fact that the certificate of fitness has been granted would not alter the position as no certificate can be granted in respect of all interlocutory orders. Syednor Taher Saifuddin Saheb v. State of Bombay, (1958) 1 Mad L J (S C) 127 : (1958) 1 Andh W R (S C) 127 : 1958 S C R 1007 : 1958 S C A 431 : 1958 S C J 403 : AIR 1958 S C 253 (254, 255) (Pr 7, 8, 9).

——Arts. 132, 133, 134 and 136 -Leave to appeal—Grant of—Effect—(High Court Rules and Orders—Allahabad Rules of Court (1952), Chap. 23, R. 1)

Per Desai, J.—There is nothing like applying for leave to appeal; what an intending appellant has to apply for is simply a certificate. Leave to appeal is to be sought for only under Art. 136 and from the Supreme Court not from the High Court or under Art. 132 or 133 or 134. A High Court has no power to grant leave to appeal, still applications for leave to appeal are being presented though what they really ask for is one certificate or another. This practice, which is undoubtedly wrong has unfortunately received some support from Rules of Court (Allahabad) which erroneously refer to such applications as applications 'for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court', Vide R. 1 of Chap. 23. When an application for a certificate is made to a High Court, all that it has to decide is whether the facts to be certified exist or have been established: it is beyond its jurisdiction to consider whether an appeal lies on the basis of the certificate or not. It cannot refuse to grant a certificate on the ground that no appeal lies from the order even if the certificate is granted : this is a matter within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. The grant of a certificate or the entertainment of an application for a certificate does not mean that in the opinion of the High Court an appeal lies 1957 All W R (H C) 268 : AIR 1957 All 505 (515) (Pt G) (Pr 15) (DB).

——Art. 132 (1)—Certificate under—Effect of — If becomes appeal — Further petition for appeal — Necessity for filing.

There is no provision for lodging a petition of appeal directly in the Supreme Court within the period of limitation after a certificate under Art. 132 (1) is granted. The whole procedure prior to the admission of the appeal lies in the High Court. Therefore the mere grant of a certificate under Art. 132 (1) by the Judge does not bring an appeal into existence. A certificate under Art. 132 (1), embodied in the judgment, is a mere declaration as to the nature of the case and is not granted to any particular party. On the strength of that certificate, any of the parties aggrieved by the judgment can prefer an appeal. Unless therefore, there is a further petition by a party actually desiring to appeal, it cannot be known that anybody is going to appeal at all or who the appellant is or that the appeal is in time and in form. In order that there may be an appeal, a further petition is thus necessary. 61 Cal W N 600 : AIR 1957 Cal 528 (531) (Pt D) (Pr 12) (DB).

■——Arts. 132 and 133 — Discretion - Interference with—Facts of case considered and discretion properly exercised by High Court—Supreme Court would not interfere. Union of India v. Shree Ram Bohra. (1965) 1 S C W R 811 : 1965 2 S C A 29 : 1965 B L J R 589 : AIR 1965 S C 1531 (1535) (Pt C) (Pr 18).

——Arts. 132, 133 and 134 — Appeals to Supreme Court—Procedure for obtaining leave.

The scheme under Art. 132 and Arts. 133 and 134 as regards appeals to the Supreme Court is different. Under Art. 132 (1), it is the Judges who deal with the case in the High Court who have to certify whether the case involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution. That however is not the final certificate for leave to appeal. The Bench, dealing with applications for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court, examines the application and sees whether the other requirements as to limitation and the like are satisfied. Where an application is made to the High Court for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 132 (1) of the Constitution of India, but no certificate, as contemplated by that Article granted by the Judges who dealt with the case in the High Court, is produced, the application is not maintainable. A I R 1961 Cal 527 (527) (Pr 1) (DB).

■—— Arts. 132, 133 (1) (c) and 134 (1) (c) — Applications under — To whom to be made — Practice in Calcutta High Court — Calcutta High Court Rules (Original Side) Chap. 33-A, Rr 2 and 4 — Appellate Side Rules, Part 2, Chap. 6, Rr. 2 and 5 and Vol. I, Chap. 2, R. 14.

Under the Calcutta High Court Rules, as developed by practice and certain Division Bench decisions, not only Bench different from the Bench deciding the case itself, deals with the question whether a certificate should or should not be granted under Art. 132 (1) and Art. 133 (1) (c), but also two applications have to be made and two certificates, one informal and another formal, should be given, the informal certificate being granted under Art. 132 (1) by the Bench which decided the case. Bijon Krishna Mukherjee v. Commissioner of Police. A I R 1961 Cal 521 (524, 526) (Pt B) (Prs 11, 14, 22) (SB).

C, (5 of 1908), O. 45, R. 13 (2) (d) —Scope — If can be invoked to restrict or prevent successful party from exercising the right under the Order of High Court under appeal.

Order 45, R. 13 (2) (d) of the Civil P. C. only enables the High Court to place the party seeking its assistance under any condition which the Court may think fit to impose. It enables the High Court to give such other directions, i. e., a direction other than a direction placing the party under any condition respecting the subject-matter of the appeal such as for instance, by an order directing the appointment of a Receiver. The provision does not enable the High Court to give any direction to the successful party by way of obstructing or preventing him from exercising the rights to which he has become entitled under the final order of the High Court.

Where an application for the issue of a writ of mandamus directing the Government to forbear from taking possession of the petitioner (an electrical undertaking) under a G. O. was dismissed and leave to appeal to Supreme Court was granted and the petitioner then prayed for a stay of operation of the G. O. pending disposal of the appeal to the Supreme Court.

——Arts. 132, 133 — Form of application to High Court.

Reference to O. 45, Civil Procedure Code in the petition for a certificate under Art. 132 or Art. 133 of the Constitution appears to be necessary. Again the grounds of Appeal have to be mentioned in the petition as appears to be necessary under R. 3 of O. 45, Civil Procedure Code. An affidavit to the effect that what is stated in the petition is true to peiitioner's knowledge, information and belief should be filed duly sworn before proper authority. Under O. 6, R. 15, Civil Procedure Code, pleadings, i. e., plaints or written statements are to be verified at the foot, but not petition for leave to appeal in a writ petition and in proceeding subsequent thereto. AIR 1956 Manipur 33 (34) (Pt C) (Pr 10).

——Arts. 132, 133—Form of application—Parties.

Where in a writ petition under Art. 226 the Deputy Commissioner of Manipur and the State of Manipur were the contesting opposite parties, but they had not been made parties to the petition under Arts 132, 133 and the petitioners did not file any affidavit during the course of hearing of that writ petition in order to rebut the allegations made in the writ petition.

Held, that the form of the petition would be deemed to be defective. A I R 1956 Manipur 33 (34) (Pt D) (Pr 11).

17. Limitation.

——Art. 132—Limitation. See Limitation Act (1963), S. 12 (2) and Art. 132. AIR 1965 Cal 630 (DB).

——Arts. 132 and 133 — Application for leave to appeal—Order under Art. 226 — Judgment — Time requisite for copy — Exclusion of — Presentation of application for leave—Clerk of Advocate General — Competency—Non-impleadment of a party by oversight—S. 5, Limitation Act applied.

Order on petition under Art. 226 was made on 19-10-1951. Application for copy of judgment made on 15-1-1952, copy delivered on 30-1-1952. Application for leave to appeal made on 30-1-1952. The application for leave to appeal by the Government was presented by the clerk of the Advocate General and one of the petitioners in the petition under Art. 226 was not impleaded as respondent by mistake. The application was opposed as not maintainable.

Held, the word "order" in Limitation Act, S. 12 (2) must cover judgments in cases under Art. 226 of the Constitution of India. In cases covered by Art. 226 the judgment itself is the order to be appealed from and the time taken in obtaining the copy of the judgment has to be excluded.

One of the petitioners in whose favour the order under Art. 226 was, was not impleaded by oversight and the Court condoned the delay in impleading him as a party caused by such oversight.

Order 3, R. 1, Civil P. C., provides that any act in any Court required or authorised by law to be made or done by a party may, except when otherwise provided, be made or done by the party or his agent or by a pleader. The presentation of the application for leave is an act governed by O. 3, R. 1, Civil P. C. The Government Advocate represents the State; but the presentation by his clerk is not permitted under the rule. But considering the prevailing practice, which is to cease, the time between the presentation to the date of the appearance of the Advocate-General in the petition which date might be taken as the date of presentation was condoned under S. 5 of Limitation Act. 1952 Raj L W 511 : ILR (1952) 2 Raj 492 : AIR 1952 Raj 180 (181) (Pts A, B) (Prs. 7, 8, 9) (DB).

● —Art. 133—Right of applicant to ply buses lawfully extinguished – He cannot challenge right of State Transport undertaking to ply their buses with or without permits — Application under Art. 226 dismissed — He is not entitled to maintain appeal. See Ibid, Art. 32. AIR 1962 S C 1183.

● —Art. 133—Scope—Bihar Hindu Religious Trusts Act, S. 55 (2) — If overrides Article — Bihar Hindu Religious Trusts Act (1 of 1951), S. 55 (2) Moti Das v. S. P. Sahi, ILR 38 Pat 639 : (1959) 2 S C R (Supp) 563 : (1959) 2 S C A 432 : 1959 S C J 1144 : AIR 1959 S C 942 (950, 951) (Pt H) (Pr 16).

—Arts. 133, 134 and 136 — Applicability—Proceedings not covered by Art. 133 or Art. 134—Remedy is under Art. 136.

It cannot be said that all proceedings must fall either within the purview of Art. 133 or Art. 134. There are many proceedings like the proceedings before the Election Tribunals which are not within the purview of either Art. 133 or Art. 134. In such cases, the remedy lies in applying direct for special leave under Art. 136. 1956 Cri L J 358 (1) : AIR 1956 Ajmer 40 (1) (40) (Pt B) (Pr 2).

—Art. 133—Scope of. See Ibid, Art. 134. 1954 Cri L J 540 : AIR 1954 Ajmer 18 (1).

—Art. 133 (1) (a)—Order passed on revision—Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109 (a).

Article 133 (1) (a) of the Constitution of India presupposes that the order impugned is passed on appeal and not otherwise. Where the order in question is passed on the revisional side of the High Court no leave can be granted under Art. 133 (1) (c). AIR 1945 P C 239, Rel. on. 1951 A M L J 84 : AIR 1952 Ajmer 15 (15) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

——Art. 133—Scope.

Order in proceeding that is neither civil nor criminal—Appeal to Supreme Court when lies. See Ibid, Art. 132. AIR 1957 All 505 (DB).

——Art. 133—Final order in revision by High Court —Appeal to Supreme Court. See Ibid, Art. 132. AIR 1957 All 28 (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) — Reference in income-tax proceeding — Decision by High Court under Income-Tax Act, S. 66 — Petition for leave to appeal to Supreme Court—(Income-Tax (1922), Ss. 66, 66A).

The expression "judgment, decree or final order" used in Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution does not apply to a decision given by the High Court under S. 66 of the Income-tax Act on a reference. Therefore, when a petition is made to the High Court arising out of a reference decided by the High Court for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court, apart from Art. 132 the High Court has to consider whether leave should be granted or not only under S. 66A (2) of Income-Tax Act and not under Art. 133 of the Constitution (1952) 22 I T R 150 : 54 Bom L R 609 : ILR (1953) Bom 549 : AIR 1952 Bom 479 (482, 483) (Pt A) (Pr 10) (DB).

——Art. 133—Art. 135 not applicable—Art. 133 does not apply.

Obiter : It is not logical to turn to Art. 133 after it is found that Art. 135 does not apply to a particular case. The order in which the provisions of the Constitution are arranged is that Arts. 133 and 134 provide for civil and criminal cases respectively and then Art. 135 makes further provisions for a certain class of cases to which Arts. 133 and 134 do not apply. 58 Cal W N 354 : (1954) 25 I T R 418 : AIR 1954 Cal 477 (480) (Pt B) (Pr 12) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) — Not applicable to appeal in income-tax matter—Income-tax Act (1922), S. 66-A(2).

Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution has no applicability to appeal in income-tax matters and cannot be invoked in an application under S. 66-A (2) of the Income-tax Act. AIR 1952 Bom 479 and AIR 1954 Cal 477, Rel. on. 1961 Ker L J 1436.

——Art. 133 — Applicability — Right of appeal — Nature of—Words ambiguous—Court should uphold right—Constitution not to be read as departing from established law.

Per Jagadisan, J.—A right of appeal is a substantive right, though it stems from a statute or the Constitution, and is not inherent in every defeated suitor. The constitutional provisions dealing with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court have to be read with due regard to the qualifications, limitations and restrictions contained therein, but with a liberality which would favour an appeal being preferred rather than with the stringency that would defeat it. If the words are sufficiently clear, either for or against an appeal, there can be no issue regarding the right. If, however, the words are ambiguous and are capable of being construed as sustaining a right of appeal, or as conferring such a right, it would be proper and legitimate for the Court to uphold the right. Broadly stated, the ambiguity resulting from the language of an enactment is resolved by adopting that meaning which accords with justice and good sense. As between two constructions which are open, both being equally plausible, the Court may lean in favour of the more reasonable of the two. (1882) 7 A C 694 and 1917 A C 260, Rel. on.

The Constitution should not be read as departing from the established law, if the words therein do not lean to that conclusion. In choosing one of two meanings where words are equally susceptible of both the meanings, the Constitution should be read as far as possible in harmony with the existing provisions of law. ● ——Arts. 133, 226—Order granting or refusing to grant a writ applied for under Art. 226 of Constitution — If a "judgment or final order" for appeal to Supreme Court—Article 226 — Proceedings under—Nature and scope of—Original in nature—Quashing orders of inferior Tribunals — Power of the High Court to issue directions in appropriate cases.

The petitioner failed to secure a stage carriage permit before the Regional Transport Authority but succeeded in appeal before the State Transport Appellate Tribunal. The propriety of the grant was challenged by the respondent in an application under Art. 226 of the Constitution but without success. But in appeal the respondent succeeded and the writ was issued quashing the order of the Appellate Tribunal. On the question of the right of the petitioner to appeal to the Supreme Court against the order quashing the order of the Appellate Tribunal :

Held, an order on an application under Art. 226 of the Constitution, whether it quashes the order of the inferior Tribunal or not, will be a judgment or final order within the meaning of Art. 133 of the Constitution for the purpose of an appeal to the Supreme Court. The essential tests which have been applied for the interpretation of the word "judgment" in clause 15 of the Letters Patent, will equally apply to Art. 133 of the Constitution. The scope of Art. 133, which confers a valuable right of appeal to the highest Court cannot be whittled down by resorting to analogies and fictions.

The proceedings under Art. 226 of the Constitution, are original in nature and founded on rights of parties aggrieved, with a view to keep the orders of statutory tribunals within the bounds of law. The subject-matter of a petition under Art. 226 will be entirely different from the matters in controversy agitated before the inferior tribunal, the former relating to vindication of a constitutional right. The merits of the controversy in proceedings cannot be equated to the controversy regarding the rights or privileges asserted or claimed before the inferior Tribunal whose order is sought to be quashed in those proceedings. The only question in the writ proceedings will be whether a fundamental right of the party has been infringed or whether the order of the tribunal is outside the authority conferred on it by the statute. The proceedings before the High Court under Art. 226 would be independent and not a continuation of the original proceedings before the statutory authority. Where a Superior Court issues a writ of certiorari quashing the order of an inferior Tribunal, thereby enabling it to hear the case before it afresh and come to a correct conclusion thereon, it cannot be said that the judgment of the Superior Court is interlocutory or a preliminary one, depending for its finality on the ultimate decision on the controversy by the Tribunal. It must follow that the finality of an order under Art. 226 cannot be made to depend on the revival or pendency or otherwise of the controversy before the Tribunal. A writ issued in the exercise of an original jurisdiction possessed by the High Court cannot either amount to or be likened with an order of remand. An order passed by a single Judge on applications under Art. 226 of the Constitution whichever way it went and whatever its effect on the proceedings before ihe inferior Tribunal might be, will amount to a judgment capable of being appealed against under Clause 15 of the Letters Patent. 2. Conditions under which appeal lies under the Article.

——Art. 133—Scope.

The result on analysis of Art. 133 is that an appeal to the Supreme Court will lie in the following cases : (i) where the judgment, decree or final order of the High Court is not one of affirmance, the requisites as to value are satisfied ; (ii) where the judgment, decree or final order of the High Court is one of affirmance, firstly, the requisites as to the value are satisfied, and secondly, a substantial question of law is involved in the appeal ; and (iii) where the High Court certifies that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court. A I R 1957 All 28 (33) (Pt D) (Pr 10) (DB).

The right of a party to appeal to the Supreme Court from a judgment of a High Court passed after the commencement of the Constitution is prima facie to be determined by Art. 133 ; and where the amount or the value of the subject-matter of the dispute is less than Rs. 20,000 and the requirements of sub-clauses (b) and (c) of clause (1) of that article are not fulfilled, a High Court has no power to give the requisite certificate and leave to appeal cannot be granted under that Article. 1955 All W R (H C) 724 : A I R 1956 All 321 (322) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

● ——Art. 133 (1) — Distinction between cl. (a) or (b) and cl. (c).

There is a real distinction between an appeal under sub-cl. (a) or (b) of cl. (1) of Art. 133 and under sub-cl. (c). An appeal under sub-cl. (a) or (b) is one as of right, for a party becomes entitled to appeal under either of these sub-clauses ex facto when certain facts and conditions are found to exist after investigation. There is no such right of appeal under sub-clause (c). An appeal under sub-clause (c) of Art. 133 (1) depends solely on the volition and discretion of the High Court. It is a misnomer to say that the appellant has a right of appeal under that sub-clause. A person cannot be said to have a right to do anything when he cannot do it except with the permission of some other person or authority. ——Art. 133 (1) (a) and (b) — Subject-matter incapable of valuation.

The petitioner was removed from Government service. His application under Art. 226 against that order of dismissal was also dismissed and he sought leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. He claimed that he was entitled as of right to a leave under Art. 133 (1) (a) and (b) as he was put to loss to the tune of Rs. 90,000 which he would have earned had he continued in service till his retirement.

Held, that as the petitioner failed to show how the question of the applicant's dismissal from service is a subject-matter capable of valuation for the purposes of Art. 133 (1) (a) or as to how the order of High Court sought to be appealed against involves directly or indirectly some claim or question respecting property of a value not less than Rs. 20,000 at the time of the order, cl. (a) or (b) of Art. 133 (1) had clearly no applicability. 1957 Jab L J 728 : AIR 1957 Madh Pra 226 (227) (Pt B) (Pr 2) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (a) (b) and (c)—Suit claiming right to joint Muthawalliship in a wakf involving properties worth more than Rs. 20,000 — High Court decreeing suit reversing decision of Court below — Case involving no substantial question of law — Appeal to Supreme Court—Certificate under Article 133, if can be granted.

Whenever a right for joint Muthawalliship or trusteeship is involved in a suit the pecuniary value of it would be incapable of valuation. Where, therefore, a suit filed by the plaintiff claiming that he is entitled along with the defendant to joint Muthawalliship of a wakf is decreed by the High Court reversing the decision of the Court below, the defendant cannot invoke Art. 133 (1) (a) or (b) of the Constitution of India (1950) for the purpose of obtaining leave to appeal to the Supreme Court as the eal subject-matter in dispute between the parties, viz., claim to joint Mutha wallishiip, would be incapable of valuation and when such a case does not involve any substantial question of law leave to appeal cannot be granted even under Art 133 (1) (c). ——Art. 133 — Conditions requisite for grant of leave.

The conditions requisite for the grant of a certificate are : firstly, that the order sought to be appealed against should be a judgment, decree or final order in a civil proceeding of the High Court; secondly, that the High Court should certify that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court under sub-cl. (c), Art. 133; in the other cases, the subject-matter of the dis ute should be valued at not less than twenty thousand rupees; and lastly, if the final order is one of affirmation the appeal should involve some substantial question of law in the opinion of the High Court. 21 Cut L T 292 : ILR (1955) Cut 25 : AIR 1955 Orissa 71 (72) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

● ——Art. 133 (1) (c)—Right of appeal under cl. (c) —Essentials.

Two essential requisites of a right of appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 133 (1) (c) are (1) that the appeal should be from any "judgment, decree or final order," and (2) that the said "judgment decree or final order" must have been passed in civil proceeding. These two requisites of the article must be satisfied before a litigant can be held to be entitled to a right of appeal to the Supreme Court. Tobacco Manufacturers (India) Ltd. v. ——Art. 133—Interlocutory order—Leave to appeal cannot be given.

Under Art. 133 leave to appeal can be given only against a decree or final order or judgment which finally disposes of the case and does not keep it alive. ● ——Art. 133 — Valuation of the subject-matter in dispute for obtaining leave to appeal to Supreme Court—Rules—S. 110, Civil P. C.—Distinction.

The rules for determining the value of the subject-matter of suits and appeals under S. 110 (1) and (2), C. P. Code and Art. 133 (1) and (2) of the Constitution may be stated as follows :

(1) For valuation under S. 110 of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance, the matter should be looked at from the point of view of the plaintiff.

(2) For also the valuation under Art. 133 (1) (a) of the subject-matter of the dispute in the Court of first instance, the matter must be looked at from the point of view of the plaintiff.

(3) For the valuation of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to the Supreme Court, both under S. 110, paragraph 1 and Art. 133 (1) (a), the effect of the judgment appealed from must be looked at from the point of view of the appellant as on the date of the judgment. It is the amount or the value of the reliefs determined under R. (2) supra in respect of which he is prejudiced by the judgment.

(4) For also the valuation of an appeal under S. 110, paragraph 2 and under Art. 133 (1) (b), the judgment appealed from must be looked at from the point of view of the appellant as on the date of the judgment.

There is no difference in principle in determining the subject-matter of a suit for the purpose of jurisdiction and for the purpose of S. 110, Civil Procedure Code. AIR 1937 All 169, Diss. from Smt. ——Art. 133—C. P. Code (1908), S. 110—Scope.

Section 110 of the Civil P. ——Art. 133 — Applicability — Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109—How far can be read as supplementary.

It is true that in the absence of any inconsistency between the Constitution and the Civil Procedure Code, the provisions of the latter can be invoked. But in cases of conflict between Art. 133 of the Constitution and S. 109, Civil P. C., the former alone will prevail. Where there is no right of appeal under Art. 133, Civil Procedure Code cannot be read as a supplementary enactment conferring such a right of appeal. 1963 Mad W N 288 : ILR (1963) Mad 33 : (1963) 1 Mad L J 127 : 5 Mad L W 536 : AIR 1962 Mad 508 (509, 510) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

Section 109 (c), Civil P. C., after its amendment by the Adaptation of Laws Order (1950) is subject to the provisions of Art. 133. ——Art. 133 — Art. 133 and S. 109 — (C. P. Code (1908), S. 109).

Article 133 (1) (a) is wider in scope than S. 109 (a), Civil P. C. Under S 100 (a) the right of appeal is restricted to a judgment decree or final order passed on appeal. The words "passed on appeal" are omitted from Art 133. An appeal under this Article from an order passed by the High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction is, therefore, competent. Article 133 (1) (c), however, requires that the order must be a final order though it need not be so under S. 109 (c), Civil P. C. AIR 1949 PC 239 (241), Rel on. ILR (1955) Nag 675 : 1955 Nag L J 468 : AIR 1955 Nag 287 (288, 289) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 9) (DB).

Unlike paras. (i) and (ii) of S. 110, Civil Procedure Code, sub-clauses (a) and (b) of Art. 133 (1) are wholly independent. Each of the sub-clauses stands on its own terms. AIR 1952 Pat 450, Rel. on. The value of the subject-matter of dispute in the Court of first instance is inmaterial under Art. 133 (1) (b). AIR 1952 Mad 771 (FB), Rel. on. Therefore, the petitioner for leave to appeal can press his case either under sub-clause (a) or sub-clause (b) or alternatively under both. ——Art. 133 — Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109—S. 109 is subject to Art. 133.

——Art. 133 (1) (a) and (b)—Final order in revision —Grant of leave (Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 109 (a) and 115.)

S. 109 Civil P. C., as it now stands, itself shows that it must be read subject to the provisions of Art. 133. Leave to appeal to the Supreme Court can therefore be granted under Art. 133 (1) (a) from the final order of a High Court passed in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction.

Even if it be assumed that the case does not fall within the purview of Art. 133 (1) (a), it is clearly covered by the provisions of Art. 133 (1) (b) which must be read independently of Cl. (a). 30 Pat 1274 : AIR 1952 Pat 450 (451, 452) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 6) (DB).

When there is any conflict between Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution and S. 110 and O. 45, R. 3, C. P. Code, the Constitution will prevail; and leave to appeal to the Supreme Court may be granted under Art. 133 (1) (a) if the High Court is satisfied that there is involved a substantial question of law, though the requirements of S. 110, C. P. Code, as to valuation are not satisfied in the case of a judgment of affirmance. 30 Pat 1274 : A I R 1952 Pat 450 (452, 453) (Pt B) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) and Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110—Relative scope and difference between.

Each of the clauses in Art. 133 (1) is marked separately and begins with the conjunction 'that' and they stand in the article as independent entities and not as an alternative to any portion of the next preceding clause. Therefore, many of the observations contained in the earller judgment as to the precise meaning and application of the wording in S. 110, C. P. Code, must now be read subject to this vital difference. 1956 Raj L W 519 : ILR (1956) 6 Raj 531 : AIR 1956 Raj 169 (170) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Art. 133—Difference between Art. 133 and C. P. Code (1908), S. 109.

The wording of Art. 133 is in one material respect different from S. 109 of the C. P. Code. Cls. (a) and (b) of S. 109 provide for appeals from any decree or final order, while Cl. (c) provides an appeal from any decree or order. But Art. 133 uses the words 'judgment, decree, or final order' with respect to all the three Cls (a) (b) and (c). Therefore, before leave is granted under any of the Cls. (a), (b) and (c) of Art. 133, the Court has to see that the order from which leave to appeal is prayed for is final. ●——Art. 133 — Final Judgment of Kerala High Court restoring decree of Travancore High Court passed before coming into force of Constitution—Appeal—Maintainability.

The preliminary objection as to the maintainability of the appeal on the ground that although the final judgment of the Kerala High Court was passed on 13th December, 1956, it only restored the decree of the majority of the Travancore High Court pronounced on 8th August, 1946, and accordingly, that being a decree passed before the commencement of the Constitution, no appeal would lie under Art. 133 of the Constitution has to be rejected as untenable. Per Majority (Venkatarama Ayyar, J., Contra)—The legal pursuit of a remedy, suit, appeal and second appeal are really but steps in a series of proceedings all connected by an intrinsic unity and are to be regarded as one legal proceeding. The right of appeal is not a mere matter of procedure but is a substantive right. The institution of the suit carries with it the implication that all rights of appeal then in force are preserved to the parties thereto till the rest of the career of the suit.

The right of appeal is a vested right and such a right accrues to the litigant and exists as on and from the date the lis commences and such right is to be governed by the law prevailing at the date of the institution of the suit or proceeding and not by the law that prevails at the date of its decision or at the date of the filing of the appeal. This vested right of appeal can be taken away only by a subsequent enactment, if it so provides expressly or by necessary intendment and not otherwise. It is erroneous to say that the language of Art. 133 impliedly takes away the right of appeal.

The Constitution by Art. 395 repealed the Government of India Act and thereby abolished the Federal Court. It however, continued the Abolition of Privy Council Jurisdiction Act, 1949, which directed that the Federal Court, in addition to the powers conferred on it by the Federal Court (Enlargement of Jurisdiction) Act, 1947 would have all the appellate powers exercised by the Privy Council. Though the Federal Court (Enlargement of Jurisdiction) Act, 1947 being an Act amending or supplementing the Government of India Act, 1935, was repealed, yet notwithstanding such repeal the provisions of the Act were continued in force under Art. 372 (1) subject to the other provisions of the Constitution. The Adaptation of Laws Order, 1950, modified Ss. 109 and 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, inter alia, by raising the valuation from Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 20,000 but that provision did not, by virtue of Cl. 20 of the Order, affect any right, privilege, obligation or liability already acquired, accrued or incurred under any existing law. The true implication of the above provision is that the pre-existing right of appeal to the Federal Court continued to exist and the old law, which created that right of appeal also continued to exist, and the Federal Court having been abolished the Supreme Court is substituted for the Federal Court as the machinery for the purpose of giving effect to the exercise of that right of appeal. The old law must govern the exercise and enforcement of that right of appeal. The continuance of the old law, however, is subject to the other provisions of the Constitution.

Art. 133 should be read as covering all judgments, decrees or final orders of a High Court passed after the commencement of the Constitution other than those in respect of which a vested right of appeal existed from before the Constitution. Clause 20 of the Adaptation Order will be meaningless if Art. 133 is not read in a restricted sense.

Article 135 confers on the Supreme Court the same jurisdiction and power with respect to any matter to which the provisions of Art. 133 or Art. 134 do not apply, if the jurisdiction and power in relation to that matter are exercisable by the Federal Court immediately before the Constitution under any existing law. If the position that at the date of the institution of the civil proceeding a right vested in the litigant to appeal to the Federal Court, be accepted, then it becomes difficult to hold that such vested right did not constitute a "matter" in relation to which jurisdiction and powers were exercisable by the Federal Court immediately before the commencement of the Constitution. There is no reason why the operation of Art. 135 should be limited to cases where the right of appeal was not mere potentially but had actually arisen in a concrete form immediately before the commencement of the Constitution.

Where the suit, has been instituted before the date of the Constitution the parties thereto have from the date of the institution of the suit, a vested right of appeal upon terms and conditions then in force and where the judgment sought to be appealed from is a judgment of a reversal and the value of the subject-matter is above Rs. 10,000 the aggrieved party has a vested right of appeal to the Federal Court under the provisions of the old Civil Procedure Code read with the Government of India Act, 1935 and the Federal Court (Enlargement of Jurisdiction) Act, 1947. Such a vested right of appeal is a matter which does not fall within Art. 133 and jurisdiction and powers with respect to such right of appeal was exercisable by the Federal Court immediately before the commencement of the Constitution and consequently the aggrieved party has a right of appeal under Art 135. Venkatarama Ayyar, J., (Dissentient).—The correct interpretation to be put on Art. 133 is that it applies to all appeals against judgments, decrees and final orders of the High Court in the territory of India made after the commencement of the Constitution in civil proceedings, irrespective of whether those proceedings were instituted before or after the Constitution. Such an interpretation would furnish a simple, clear and uniform law for the whole of India and that it would also avoid discrimination between suitors who instituted actions prior to the Constitution and those who instituted them after, and between those who have instituted proceedings in Part A States and those who have instituted proceedings in Part B States. In this view, the present petition for leave falls within Art. 133 and the appeal must be held to be incompetent for failure to satisfy the requirements in the matter of valuation of Art. 133 (1) (a). Plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court of Jaipur. The appeal was allowed. The defendant applied for review of this judgment. Meanwhile the Jaipur High Court had become defunct and the review was heard by the Rajasthan High Court as successor to the Jaipur High Court under the High Courts Ordinance and was partially allowed on the 5th of April 1950, and the decree was accordingly amended. It was against this judgment and decree passed after the coming into force of the Constitution of India that the present appeal had been preferred to the Supreme Court by leave of the Rajasthan High Court under Art. 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution.

Held, that the only operative decree in the suit which finally and conclusively determined the right of the parties was the decree passed on the 5th of April, 1950, by the Rajasthan High Court and that having been passed after the coming into force of the Constitution of India the provisions of Art. 133 were attracted to it and it was appealable to Supreme Court provided the requirements of that Article were fulfilled. The Code of Civil Procedure of the Jaipur State could not determine the jurisdiction of Supreme Court and had no relevancy to the maintainability of the appeal. Nathoolal v. ——Art. 133 and Art. 135 — Leave to appeal — Pre-constitutional final order—Art. 133 does not apply—Art. 135 applies—No appeal to Supreme Court lies if such order is passed in revision.

Article 133 of the Constitution does not apply to orders passed in proceedings which commenced before the Constitution came into force. In such a case the matter is governed by Art. 135. If so then no appeal lies to the Supreme Court if the order which is sought to be appealed from is passed not in appeal but in revision. Section 109 (a) and S. 110 of the Civil P. In a suit, which was instituted in 1940 and where the valuation of the subject-matter in appeal was more than Rs. 10,000 but less than Rs. 20,000 it was contended on behalf of the appellant that a right of appeal had vested in him when the suit was instituted and hence he had a right of appeal to Supreme Court, irrespective of the provision of the amending Acts passed thereafter.

Held, that as no appeal was pending in the Privy Council or in the Federal Court none could be transferred to the Supreme Court. As no provision was made in the Constitution for cases in which a right of appeal would be deemed to have vested but in which no appeal had actually been filed before the abolition of the Federal Court a right of appeal in such cases would be deemed to have been negatived. Hence as the value of the subject matter of the appeal in this case was below Rs. 20 000 no appeal lay as of right to the Supreme Court. The institution of a suit, no doubt, carries with it the implication that rights of appeal then in force are preserved to the parties thereto till the rest of the career of that suit. But this rule is not inflexible, for instance, such right of appeal might be taken away by an enactment with retrospective effect. Again, that right of appeal would be lost if the Court to which an appeal lay at the time of the institution of the suit is later on abolished.

In a suit instituted in 1940, as second appeal was filed before the Ijlas-i alia in the State of Bilaspur. Due to constitutional changes, the Ijlas-i-alia was abolished and its place was taken over by the Judicial Commissioner's Court which dismissed the appeal on 1-6-1951. But a subsequent application for review was allowed and by an order, dated 11-12-1952, the second appeal was directed to be reheard. The other party applied for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court against the order and contended that S. 109 (c), Civil P. C., which was the law at the time of the institution of the suit, governed the application and not Art. 133 (1).

Held, that the right to appeal to Ijlas i-alia which the party had under the law at the time of the institution of his suit was lost when that Court was abolished.

(2) That no provision similar to Art. 374 (4) was made in respect of the pending appeals in final Courts of appeal in Part C States.

(3) That since the order sought to be appealed against was passed after the Constitution came into force the case would be governed by Art. 133 and not by S. 109 (c), Civil P. C.

(4) That Art. 133 did not apply to the order in question which was only an interlocutory order. In all matters where there was a right of appeal under S. 110, Civil P. C., that right continues in respect of all suits filed prior to the coming into force of the Constitution and there is nothing in Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution by which the litigant is deprived of that right. The position is made still more clear by S. 27 of the Adaptation of Laws Order, 1950, which brings S. 110, Civil P. C., in conformity with Art. 133 (1) by substituting 'Rs. 20,000' in place of 'Rs. 10,000' in the section. The right of appeal already accrued to the party is expressly saved by S. 27 of the Order. Even apart from it, the matter being one in respect of which the Federal Court had jurisdiction, the Supreme Court has jurisdiction to entertain the appeal under Art. 135 which confers upon the Supreme Court a different and wider jurisdiction than that under Arts. 133 and 134. The right to appeal already vested in the party is not therefore lost because of the abolition of the Privy Council, or of the Federal Court or because the matter is not covered by Art. 133 (1). ——Art. 133—Retrospective operation— (Interpretation of Statutes.)

It is true that as soon as a suit is brought the right to prefer an appeal or appeals provided by the law, current at the time, becomes vested in the parties and such right cannot be taken away except by a new law and except by the express words or the necessary intendment of such law. But in order that the right of appeal may subsist, it is necessary that the conditions under which the right can be exercised should also subsist. It may be that when the judicial system and the hierarchy of the Courts remain the same, the right of an eventual appeal or appeals, accrued at the date of a suit remains unaffected by subsequent changes in the law unless modified expressly or by necessary implication, but when the whole political structure of a country, including the judicial system itself changes and a new Court of final appeal is set up under a new Constitution with a new jurisdiction created for and assigned to it, there can no longer be any question of appealing to such new jurisdiction under the old right, except so far as it may be expressly provided for. Hence where leave to appeal to the Supreme Court is sought after the commencement of the Constitution, there can be no appeal to the Supreme Court, as exercising jurisdiction under Art. 133, except under conditions laid down in that article, even though the suit was brought long before the commencement of the Constitution. 57 Cal W N 933 : A I R 1954 Cal 289 (292) (Pt D) (Pr 13) (DB).

——Arts. 133 and 135—Scope and applicability.

Where the judgment sought to be appealed from was delivered after the commencement of the Constitution and the application for leave to appeal is made thereafter it is Art. 133 which applies and not Art 135 It follows that the valuation limit of Rs. 10,000 is not applicable to such an appeal.

Read in a plain manner Art. 133 would seem to contemplate not any pending proceedings, but only subject-matters. But assuming that proceedings are also contemplated, the operation of the Article is limited to cases where the right of appeal in such proceedings was not a mere potentiality but had actually arisen in a concrete form immediately before the commencement of the Constitution, such as, where an application for leave to appeal had already been made to the Federal Court or when, at least, the decision of the High Court sought to be appealed from, had been given. 57 Cal W N 933 : A I R 1954 Cal 289 (292) (Pt E) (Pr 13) (DB).

The plaintiff's suit was dismissed on 7th March, 1955 by the District Judge, Gwalior (then in the State of Madhya Bharat, a Part B State). The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the High Court of Madhya Bharat on 14th May, 1955 That appeal was transferred to the High Court of Madhya Pradesh on the reorganization of States on 1st November, 1956 and was decided by it on 31st July, 1959.

Held, that as the valuation of the suit in the Court of first instance was below Rs. 20 000, the petitioner could not be granted a certificate under Art. 133 (1) (a) though it was above Rs. 10,000 because on the date of the suit he had no right of further appeal from the judgment of the High Court of the Princely State to the Federal Court or to the Supreme Court, and his vested right of appeal to the Privy Council of that State came to an end when it was abolished. ● ——Arts. 133 (1), 135 Suit instituted before Constitution – Judgment after commencement of Constitution –Second appeal — Applicability of Arts. 133 (1) and 135—(C P. Code (1908), Ss. 109, 110).

If a judgment is delivered on a decree or final order is made in a civil proceeding of a High Court after the commencement of the Constitution then the provisions of Art. 133 (1) would directly apply even though the suit from which it originated was instituted before the commencement of the Constitution. There is no justification for construing the words "any judgment, decree or final order" in Art 133, as meaning "any judgment, decree or final order in a suit or other proceeding instituted after the coming into force of the Constitution." Such construction will practically render Art. 133 (1) a dead letter for many years to come.

Further, it is a wrong construction of that expression to say that Art. 133 does not apply to a case when what is meant is that the case does not fulfil the requirements of the Article because the valuation is less than Rs 20,000. Hence it cannot be held that this is a matter to which the provisions of Art. 133 do not apply and therefore Art. 135 will apply.

Held, that Art. 133 (1) applied to the case and the requirement as to valuation must be determined by the provisions of clause (a). ——Art. 133 — Applicability — Value of subject-matter of suit and appeal Rs. 10 000 in regard to judgment delivered prior to the date when the Constitution came into force — Right to leave to appeal to Supreme Court—Suit for redemption—Valuation of subject-matter.

An appeal will lie to the Supreme Court if the value of the subject-matter of the suit and that of the appeal was Rs. 10,000 in regard to judgment delivered prior to the date when the Constitution came into force.

In a suit for redemption it is not correct to state that the property in dispute is the security given for the loan. The subject-matter is the loan for which the security was given. Where the value of such loan is less than Rs. 10,000 leave to appeal to the Supreme Court cannot be granted.

The mere fact that if the loan is not repaid in the time fixed by the decree, the mortgaged property will be sold does not raise any question affecting the security. ILR (1937) All 405 and A I R 1941 Pat 288, Diss. from; 27 Pat 237, Rel. on. 30 M L J 317; 39 Mad 843, Ref.

An application for leave to Federal Court from a reversing decision of the High Court in respect of subject-matter the value of which exceeded Rs. 10,000 but was less than Rs. 20,000 was pending when the Constitution came into force. It was contended that the valuation being less than Rs. 20,000, Art. 133 of the Constitution barred the appeal to Supreme Court :

Held, (1) Art. 133 was not made retrospective either expressly or by necessary intendment and did not take away the right to appeal to Federal Court which was vested in the party in a pending case.

(2) that the Abolition of Privy Council Jurisdiction Act, 1949, was still on the Statute Book and the jurisdiction of the Federal Court under that Act still vested in the Supreme Court, To that extent Art. 133 did not apply to the case and the jurisdiction being preserved by Art. 135, the appeal to Supreme Court was not barred. 1950 Nag L J 181 : ILR (1950) Nag 830 : AIR 1950 Nag 222 (223) (Pr 12) (DB).

——Arts. 133 (1) and 135 — Applicability — Suits instituted before Constitution — Vested right of appeal — If affected — (Civil P. C (1908), S. 110).

If a specific Article governs the pecuniary limits of an appeal then Art. 135 will not be applicable. The institution of the suit carries with it the preservation of the vested right of parties in regard to the appeal but with the exception that there is no right of appeal where the right is expressly or impliedly taken away or the Court to which the appeal was to be taken is abolished.

In case of suits filed before the Constitution, when they were filed the final Court of appeal would have been the Federal Court and when this Court was abolished on coming into force of the Constitution the proceedings pending in the Federal Court in regard to appeals stood removed to the Supreme Court but there was no provision made as regards proceedings by way of appeal or otherwise not pending in the Federal Court at the commencement of the Constitution.

Hence in regard to a judgment which is passed after the Constitution came into force the appeal is to be governed by Art. 133 (1) (a) and not by S. 110, Civil P. C., as it existed before the Constitution AIR 1953 Mad 878; AIR 1921 P C 219 and AIR 1929 Mad 381 (FB), Rel. on. 58 Pun L R 361 : I L R (1956) Punj 1173 : A I R 1956 Punj 228 (229, 230) (Pt B) (Prs 4, 5, 6) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (c)—Retrospective operation—(Civil P. C (1908), Preamble and S. 109).

Where in a suit, filed before the Constitution of India came into force, there is no right of appeal from the decision of the High Court in appeal therefrom according to the law then in force but such right is given by the Constitution for the first time then if the decision of the High Court is given after coming into force of the Constitution, it would be appealable under the Constitution.

A distinction should be drawn between the case where the right o appeal is taken away and the case where a right of appeal has been given Interference with the rights of the parties is clearly of a different nature in the two cases The right of appeal is a positive right and it accrues at the time of the filing of the suit but the absence of the right of appeal cannot be called a right at all. The prohibition of appeal by the law at the time of the institution of the suit does not amount to a substantive or existing right accruing to the parties. It is a mere negation of such rights. If the law therefore chooses to give such a right during the pendency of the case, there is no principle of law which prevents it from doing so. Misc No. 9 of 1951 dated 20th August 1951 (Raj), Foll. ——Art. 133 (1)—'Judgment, decree or final order'—Meaning of.

The tribunal constituted under the Kanpur Urban Area Development Act is not a civil Court except for purposes of Court-fees. Its order is not a decree; it is an award. The proceeding before the Tribunal partakes of the nature of an arbitration proceeding. An appeal is a rehearing of the original proceeding, and accordingly the appellate proceeding shall ordinarily partake of the character of the original proceeding. The appellate order of the High Court is consequently also an award; and it is not a judgment, decree or final order within the meaning of those expressions in Art. 133. ● —Art. 133 — Appeal to Supreme Court—Several matters of controversy in a case—High Court varying decision of the trial Court with respect to some and affirming it in respect of other:— Right of appeal — "Judgment, decree or final order appealed from" — Interpretation of—Distinct matters—Subject-matter of appeal and cross-objections—Effect.

P claimed the estate in dispute as the widow of the predeceased adopted son taken in adoption by a widow of the last male owner alleging the estate vested in him from the date of adoption under a family settlement and custom and filed a suit for such a declaration of title. D, the defendant reversioner disputed the adoption as also the custom and settlement relied on by P.

The trial Court found the adoption to be valid but not the custom or family settlement in support of the title and gave a declaration that P was entitled to get a maintenance allowance of Rs. 3,000 a year and to remain in the house she was living in. D appealed to the High Court against the grant of the declaration for maintenance and P filed cross-objections against the rest of decree. A Bench of the High Court affirming the finding of the trial Court on the question of title to the estate in D and disallowing the grant of the declaration for the maintenance allowance to P allowed the appeal by D and dismissed the cross-objections by P.

P applied for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court; the grounds made no reference to the question of maintenance. P contended that the proposed appeal was in respect of the whole of the matter in appeal in the High Court so that the question of maintenance was also the subject-matter of the proposed appeal; further she had made an application for leave to amend the grounds by inclusion of the claim of maintenance which was disallowed by the High Court. The application for leave to appeal along with the permission petition to amend the grounds was referred to a Full Bench of more than 3 for disposal in view of the conflict of rulings in the matter.

Held: The expression "judgment, decree or final order appealed from" in Art. 133 means not necessarily the judgment, decree, or final order of the High Court in its entirety, but the whole or any portion of it which is the subject-matter of the proposed appeal. The affirmance or variance of the "decision of the Court below" has to be seen in respect of the subject-matter of the proposed appeal. The entire subject-matter of the proposed appeal should be taken up as one whole and as one unit for seeing if there is a variance or affirmance and not be cut up into parts affirming and parts varying.

Hence the contention of the applicant that irrespective of the subject matter of the proposed appeal to Supreme Court, if the judgment .... of the High Court as a whole varied even a part of the decision of the Court below, an appeal will lie as of right, even though the appeal was confined to that part of the decision of the Court below affirmed, is untenable. (Per Majority of the Full Bench).

It is not necessary to construe the expression "judgment, decree or final order appealed from" in conjunction with or as relating to "subject-matter of dispute in the proposed appeal" or to hold that it means the subject-matter of the "judgment, decree or final order appealed from". The expression is to be interpreted independently and with reference to the context and given its plain meaning. The expression "the decision of the Court below in any case...." is to be similarly interpreted to mean the whole decision of the suit by that Court. The significance of the words "in any case" cannot be lost sight of and consequently it is the decision in the suit and not of any matter in controversy that has to be taken into consideration.

It is not possible to decide whether the 'decree of the High Court' affirms or varies the 'decision of the Court below' without comparing the whole decision of the Court below with the decree of the High Court as a whole. (Per P. L. Bhargava, J.)

Right of appeal to Supreme Court — Where there are several matters of controversy in a suit and the High Court varies the decision of the trial Court with regard to one or more of such matters and affirms in respect of other matters then.

(a) if the proposed appeal to the Supreme Court is in respect of the matter varied—in favour of the appellant or against him — he has a right of appeal (subject to the matter being of the required valuation of Rs. 20,000);

(b) if the proposed appeal consists of matters some of which were affirmed and some varied there is again a right of appeal subject to the value of the entire matter in the proposed appeal being not less than Rs. 20,000;

(c) if the proposed appeal be in respect only of the matters concerning which the decree of the High Court affirmed the decision of the Court below there is no right of appeal unless there is a substantial question of law involved ;

(d) the fact that against the decision of the Court below there was an appeal and a cross objection in the High Court is immaterial as only one decree is prepared by the High Court in respect of both, and the principles in (a) (b) and (c) will apply to the composite decree ;

(e) but if there were two appeals from one decree of the Court below then the decree of the High Court in each of the appeals will be separately considered and if the proposed appeals to the Supreme Court arising out of one of such decrees relates to a matter on which the decree ha affirmed the decision of the Court below there will be no right of appeal without a substantial question of law being involved. ——Art. 133 (1)—"Judgment, decree or final order" —Test—Judgment in writ petition.

The three words 'judgment, decree or final order' in Art. 133 (1) imply the same amount of finality and if after the order is passed the suit or proceeding is still left alive it cannot be taken to be a judgment, decree or final order; but if on the passing of the order of the High Court the matter is completely sealed and there remains nothing further to be agitated by either of the parties, it is regarded as a final order as contemplated under Art. 133.

Thus where the Court below in a particular case decides the plaintiff's case against him and dismisses the suit on the preliminary ground that it was barred by res judicata or limitation and the High Court confirms the above view, the order is a judgment, decree or final order as it puts the last seal on the case by virtue of the judgment. But if the High Court reverses and remands the case it is not such a "judgment, decree or final order" as contemplated under Art 133 as the suit is still undetermined. There would be no right of appeal under Art. 133 against a judgment unless the rights of the parties have been finally determined.

Hence where the Judicial Commissioner's Court has held that the Civil Court has jurisdiction to try the suit and has directed the trial Court to proceed with the suit in accordance with law the judgment does not finally dispose of the suit between the parties and hence appeal under Art. 133, does not lie. ● ——Art. 133 (1) — 'Judgment' or 'final order' — Meaning of— Order of High Court in appeal setting side order of trial Court recording compromise — C. P. C. (1908), Ss. 109, 110; O. 23, R. 3; O. 43, R. 1 (m).

Per Beg J.—In order that an order may be declared to be a final order, the following propositions of law stand established :

(1) that an order is final only if it finally disposes of the rights of parties; (2) that the finality of the order must be determined in relation to the suit; (3) that the order cannot be treated to be a final order if the suit is still left alive for the purpose of determining the rights and liabilities of the parties in the ordinary way; (4) that the mere fact that a cardinal point in the suit has been decided or even a vital and important issue determined in the case is not enough to make the order a final one. AIR 1933 P C 58, Foll.

An order of the High Court in appeal reversing the order of the trial Court recording a compromise is neither a judgment nor final order within the meaning of those terms in Art. 133 of the Constitution. The order is an interlocutory order.

A 'judgment' as contemplated in Art. 133 should fulfil the following three conditions :

(1) It should terminate the proceedings in the High Court (2) It should determine the rights and liabilities of the parties. (3) The determination of the rights and liabilities as envisaged in condition No. 2 should be on merits, and should further be final and conclusive.

Held on facts that if this test is applied to the impugned decision, the decision obviously fails to fulfil conditions Nos. 2 and 3 specified above. It cannot, therefore, be treated as a 'judgment' for Art. 133 (1). Article 133 does not apply to a decision on a reference under S. 66, Income-tax Act. The word 'judgment' in Art. 133 is used in the sense of final declaration or determination of the rights of parties and a decision on merits and would not cover opinion given by the High Court in its advisory jurisdiction.

That apart, the Income-tax Act makes a provision for the High Court issuing a certificate of fitness for appeal to the Supreme Court under S. 66-A (2) and that section does not lay down any of the conditions envisaged by Art. 133. The only requirement is that the High Court should feel that the matter is fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court. It is this specific provision that is applicable to matters falling within the ambit of S. 66.

The expression 'so far as may be' in S. 66 (3), Income-tax Act, would not attract the provisions of Ss. 109 and 110, C. P. Code also. It is only in those cases where a certificate of fitness is granted by the High Court and in no other case, would an appeal lie to the Supreme Court. ——Art. 133—"Judgment, decree or final order."

An appeal lies to the Supreme Court under Art. 133 if the order complained of finally disposes of the rights of the parties. It should not be an interlocutory order but a final order deciding the rights of the parties. The word 'judgment' in the Article in the context means a final judgment in the sense that it finally decides the rights of the parties. An interim order made pending an appeal cannot be final order. ——Art. 133 (1) — Reference to High Court in income tax proceeding — Decision under Income-Tax Act (1922), S. 66 (5) is not "Judgment"—(Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109).

The word "judgment" used in the Civil Procedure Code and S. 66 (5), Income Tax Act, has the sense of the grounds on which the decision of a Court is based. But the expression "judgment, decree or final order" used in Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution is used in its technical English sense, which means a final declaration or determination of the rights of parties and it also means a decision given on merits. "Judgment, decree or final order" is a compendious expression and each one of the parts of this expression bear the same connotation, viz., that there is an adjudication by the Court upon the rights of the parties who appear before it. "Judgment" must not be read in this context in contradistinction to "decree or final order."

Under S. 66, Income-Tax Act, the High Court has to decide the question and deliver the judgment and the Appellate Tribunal is bound to conform to the judgment. But notwithstanding all this, the jurisdiction of the High Court continues to remain advisory or consultative, and the decision which it gives and the judgment which it delivers is not a 'judgment" within the meaning of Art. 131 of the Constitution. The provisional assessment proceedings under R. 15 and the order of the High Court under S. 12-B of the Madras General Sales-Tax Act in relation to them, are only in the nature of interlocutory orders in the civil proceedings, that is, the assessment proceedings, even though the claim of the assessee to the deduction under R. 18 (2) was a vital issue therein. It is still open to the assessee to appeal against the final assessment, when the correctness of the interlocutory order can be challenged.

Thus, there can be no finality to the interlocutory order, within the meaning of Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution. Case law Ref.

For finding out the meaning of the word 'judgment' in Art. 133 no reliance can be placed on the definition of that word given in S. 2 (9) of the C P. Code. The definition given in C. P. Code can only govern the provisions therein. It is not possible to accept the contention that adaptations were made in Ss. 109 and 110, C. P. Code to carry out the intention of the Constitution and hence the Court must fall back on the definition of judgment in the C. P. Code to ascertain the true meaning of that word in Art. 133 of the Constitution. ● ——Art. 133—' Final order"—Test of—S. T. Commissioner not admitting appeal for failure to deposit assessed tax — Application to High Court under Art. 226 of the Constitution for direction to him rejected—Appeal to Supreme Court.

The test for determining the finality of an order, is whether the judgment or order finally disposes of the rights of the parties. The mere fact that the order decides an important and even a vital issue is by itself not material, unless the decision puts to an end to the suit. The finality must thus be a finality in relation to the suit. Further, a judgment or final order to be appealable to the Supreme Court must affect the merits of the case between the parties by determining some right or liability. Where an appeal was not admitted by the Sales Tax Commissioner on the ground that the appellant had not deposited the assessed tax as required under the proviso to S. 22 (1), C. P. and Berar Sales Tax Act, 1947, and an application made thereupon to the High Court under Art. 226 of the Constitution for a direction to the Commissioner of Sales-Tax to admit the appeal was rejected, the order of the High Court is not an order on merits, that is, with regard to iability to pay the tax, and does not determine any right except the one to prosecute the appeal before the Commissioner of Sales Tax without paying the assessed tax. The right to continue the appeal without paying the tax has nothing to do with the merits of the appeal and therefore the decision of the High Court cannot be regarded as a "judgment' or "final order" within the meaning of Art. 133 of the Constitution and as such is not appealable to the Supreme Court. Hossen Kasam Dada v. State of Madhya Pradesh I L R (1952) Nag 204 : (1952) 3 S T C 289 : AIR 1952 Nag 305 (307) (Pt A) (Prs 8, 10) (FB).

Held, that the order of the High Court was neither a 'judgment' nor a 'final order' within the meaning of Art. 133 of the Constitution. Although a vital issue was determined by the High Court the decision of the High Court did not finally determine the rights of the parties in the execution proceedings. Although there was no specific order of remand made by the High Court the effect of the decision was to keep alive the execution proceedings because the order dropping the execution proceedings was set aside. ● ——Art. 133 (1)(c)—Construction—Right of appeal —Essentials—"Judgment, decree or final order in a civil proceeding' — Meaning of—Decision of High Court on reference under S. 21 (3), Bihar Sales Tax Act.

The two essential requisites of a right of appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution of India are (1) that the appeal should be from any judgment, decree or final order, and (2) that the said judgment, decree or final order must have been passed in a civil proceeding. These two requisites of the Article must be satisfied before a litigant can be held to be entitled to a right of appeal to the Supreme Court.

The decision pronounced by the High Court on a reference under S 21 (3) of the Bihar Sales Tax Act is not a "judgment" within the meaning of Art. 133 of the Constitution. The term "judgment" in Art. 133 has been used in the same sense as in S. 205, Government of India Act (1935), and the dropping of the word "final" before the word "judgment" in the Article does not make any difference Nor is the proceeding in question a "civil proceeding" within the meaning of Art. 133 (1) (c). Hence the High Court will not grant leave to appeal to the Supreme Court against such a decision under Art. 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution. Any judgment which the High Court pronounces in regard to the questions of law referred to it by the Revenue authorities is not a judgment in the technical sense of the terms, but merely a sort of opinion or advice; on those questions of reference the Revenue authorities are governed by and have to mould their order of assessment in the light of the advice so tendered by the High Court. The words "judgment", "decree" and "order" are not to be construed distributively. Regard must be had to the cummulative effect, and the phrase "any judgment, decree or final order" made in a civil proceeding must be regarded as a single compendious phrase, embracing every decision in a civil proceeding which is not a final but is merely a preliminary or an interlocutory order. ● ——Art. 133 — "Judgment, decree or final order" —(C. P. Code (1908), S. 109).

For an appeal to be competent under the provisions of Art. 133, there must be inter alia a "judgment, decree or final order," The word "judgment" in the the Article must, in the context, mean something different from the words "decree or final order" which alone were used in Ss 109 and 110 of the pre-Constitution Code of Civil Procedure. Judgment is the adjudication of the proceeding or the suit as the case may be. Final order means an order which finally decides any matter that is directly at issue in the case in respect of the rights of the parties. According to the Constitution an appeal will lie to the Supreme Court if the decision of a Court falls within the words "judgment, decree or final order" and each one of these words has a different connotation. But all of them have reference to adjudication, determination or disposal of a proceeding, suit or rights of the parties. Union of India v. The word 'judgment' used in Art. 133 cannot be taken in its widest possible sense so as to include every order which terminates a proceeding pending in a High Court. The judgment must partake of the nature of finality attributed to a decree and a final order, when it is used in conjunction with the words 'decree' or 'final order'. When the High Court is dealing under Art. 133, with revision or appeal to the High Court, the judgment according to the C. The word "judgment" in Art. 133 has been used in the sense of a decision finally determining the rights of the parties in the proceeding and not as defined in the Code of Civil Procedure.

A writ petition under Art 226 of Constitution of India was filed on the ground that the Board of Revenue had no power to entertain a second application for review, that S. 2, U. P. ——Art. 133 (1) (a)—'Judgment'—Meaning — Order refusing to issue writ under Art. 226 is not judgment or final order—(Constitution of India, Art 226).

Unless a decision finally disposes of the rights of the parties it is not a 'judgment'. The mere fact that the order has decided an important and even a vital issue is not by itself conclusive of the matter, unless the decision puts an end to the litigation. The decision or order, in order to be called a judgment, must affect the merits of the controversy between the parties by determining some right or liability.

Ordinarily the extraordinary jurisdiction vested in the High Court under Art. 226 is not meant to declare any rights. A writ under Art. 226 issues only to ensure that the law of the land was being properly administered and the refusal to issue the writ has only the effect of saying that the High Court does not see any irregularity in the administration of the relevant law. Such a decision is not covered either by the word 'judgment' or the phrase 'final order' in Art. 133 (1).

Hence a certificate under Art. 133 (1) cannot be granted against such an order. A I R 1951 Pat 626, Expl., 17 Suth W R 364, Rel. on. 1955 Nag L J 738 : ILR 1955 Nag 704 : A I R 1955 Nag 257 (257, 258) (Prs 4, 5) (DB).

● ——Arts. 133, 226 — 'Judgment', decree or final order—Meaning of—Order dismissing petition under Art. 226.

In Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution of India the words 'judgment, decree and final order' are textually the same as those used in S. 205 of the Constitution Act of 1935.

In order that a decision should fall within the definition of the word 'judgment' or final order' (1) it must finally decide the rights of the parties and the word 'judgment' means a final judgment and not an interlocutory judgment, and by which right to the relief claimed is decided with regard to all matters in issue, and (2) an order is final if it finally disposes of the rights of the parties and if it does not, it is not final even though it may decide a vital issue in the case. The mere fact that the Court refuses to issue a writ or direction under Art. 226 does not take it out of the definition of the words 'judgment, decree or final order' but it will depend upon the facts, circumstances and the nature of decision in each case. Where the matter came by way of appeal to the High Court against an award of a Court, the decision is not a judgment, decree or order under the Code of Civil Procedure. The awards passed in land acquisition proceedings under S. 21 of the Hyderabad Land Acquisition Act were not regarded as decrees under the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 54 of the Indian Land Aquisition Act had been amended so as to confer a right of appeal against the decree of the High Court, the award having been treated as a decree by virtue of the provisions of sub s. (2) of S. 26 of the Indian Act. Therefore, the right of appeal is specifically provided under the Indian Act, which is not to be found in the corresponding section, viz., S. 53 of the Hyderabad Act. Where, therefore, the award passed could not be regarded as a decree under the Hyderabad Land Acquisition Act, there could be no appeal to the Supreme Court. Under Art. 133 a preliminary decree as well as a final decree is appealable. The word 'decree' which occurs in that Article and in S. 109, Civil P. C., is not qualified by the words "preliminary" or "final".

The test of finality is whether the rights of the parties have been finally determined by the judgment or order and whether the suit is a live suit not for the purpose of working out the details in accordance with the judgment or order but for the purpose of determining the rights of the parties.

In a suit for rendition of accounts after the passing of the preliminary decree, further proceedings in the suit are not proceedings in which the rights of the parties have to be determined. Where, a preliminary decree directs the defendant to render accounts to the plaintiff, and the valuation of the subject matter in the original Court, as well as in the appeal before the High Court was Rs. 21 000 and the decree sought to be appealed from was not one of affirmance of the decree passed by the trial Court.

The expression 'final order' has been given a wider scope so far as Art. 132 is concerned. The word 'final order' when it occurs in Art. 133 is not to be interpreted in terms of the explanation of Art. 132. The absence of any such explanation in Art. 133 and the fact that such an explanation was considered necessary to be added to Art. 132 clearly shows that 'final order' does not ordinarily include an order deciding an issue which, if decided in favour of the appellant, would be sufficient for the final disposal of the case. AIR 1954 Ajmer 12 (2) (13) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

An order is not a final order even if it disposes of the most vital issue before a Court. If the proceedings do not come to an end with the adjudication of the most important issue but there is something still left over for that Court itself to accomplish, the order cannot be a final one within the meaning of Art. 133 (1).

Where on an application under S. 22 of the Patents and Designs Act for the grant of compulsory licence, the Controller, after coming to the conclusion that the applicants had made out a case for the grant of the licence, directed the applicants to file within one month a draft licence setting out the terms and conditions which they considered reasonable, for the purpose of deciding what should be the reasonable terms upon which the licence should be granted as the patentee had refused to co-operate in the matter and before the Controller had an opportunity of considering the matter further, the patentee preferred an appeal to the High Court which upheld the decision of the Controller and the patentee desired to go up to the Supreme Court from the said decision.

Held, that it was doubtful whether the order of the Controller could be described as an order under S 23 of the Patents and Designs Act Even assuming that some order within the ambit of S. 23 of the Act had been made, there was no final order by the Controller within the meaning of Art. 133 1). 67 Cal W N 743 : AIR 1963 Cal 433 (440) (Pt D) (Pr 21) (DB).

Distinguished. To be final, the order must be such as puts an end to the litigation of the parties or at all events disposes of substantially the matters in issue between them and it is not sufficient merely to decide an important or even a vital issue in the case. Therefore the decision of the Court cannot be regarded as a final order within the meaning of Art. 133. ILR (1964) Guj 388.

——Art. 133 (1) "Final Order"—"Judgment".

In order to constitute a final order, it is necessary that the order should be one by which the suit or the proceedings is finally disposed of whichever way the decision went The test to be applied is, whether the proceeding is disposed of completely and the case is not kept alive for being dealt with in the ordinary way.

If the order is such as would dispose of the proceeding if decided one way, but would not have that effect if it was decided the other way, the order would not be a final order. The final order must contain a final adjudication of the matter in contest between the parties to the action.

Held on facts, that the order of injunction passed by the trial Court was not an order passed in the suit which was pending in the Asansol Court. It also did not have the effect of disposing of either that suit or the respondent's suit finally. The word 'judgment' read in the context in which it is used in Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution also means a final judgment of the Court by which the rights and the liabilities of the parties to action are finally determined. The order against which the petitioner proposed to file an appeal was neither a judgment, decree nor final order within the meaning of Art. 133 (1) and therefore not appealable. Madh BLR 1956 (Cr) 542 : 1956 Madh B L J 1324 : AIR 1957 Madh B 47 (48, 49) (Prs 17, 18, 19, 21, 24) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1)—"Final order."

A notice of filing an award in Court was served on the petitioner. Instead of filing an application to set aside the award within the time prescribed by Art. 158, Limitation Act, the petitioner filed merely an application purporting to be under S. 5 of the Limitation Act for excusing the delay in filing the application to set aside the award—That application was dismissed by the High Court—The petitioner sought leave to appeal to the Supreme Court:

Held, that an order refusing to excuse the delay in filing an application, could not be treated except as a procedural order; though it may have far reaching consequences and adversely affect the right of parties, by itself it could not be held to have decided the rights of parties. Case-law Ref.

——Art. 133—Final order—Test of.

The test of finality of order is whether the order finally disposes of the rights of the parties on merits. An order is not a final order merely because it goes to the root of the suit viz., the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain it. AIR 1933 P C 58 and AIR 1920 P C 86, Rel. on.

The order under S. 115 Civil P. C. refusing to interfere with the finding of the subordinate Court that the notice of suit under s. 80, Civil P. Where the High Court by an order holds that for the purposes of the Ajmer Abolition of Intermediaries and Land Reforms Act (1955), the compensation payable to the claimants of a certain Jagir village should be determined on the basis of their individual shares in the village the order is not a 'final order' within the meaning of Art. 133 (1) (a). The decision of the High Court does not finally dispose of the rights of the parties and the Compensation Commissioner would have to embark on an inquiry as to the relevant facts in order to determine the amount of compensation payable to each claimant. Orders of remand in suits are not final orders as even after the remand the matter remains to be finally decided and the suit remains pending. As what remains open by the order of the High Court is the acquisition proceeding and not the award it cannot be said that the order is not a final order. AIR 1959 Assam 196 (196, 197) (Pt A) (Pr 1) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1)—Final Order — Notice under S. 34, Income-tax Act (1922)—Validity questioned.— High Court holding notice valid — Decision does not amount to final order.

A notice under S. 34 of the Income-tax Act (1922) was issued by the Income-tax Officer to the petitioner. The petitioner objected to the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer to proceed against the petitioner but the objection was overruled. He moved again the High Court under Art. 226 but the application was dismissed and the decision was confirmed in appeal by a Division Bench of the High Court. It was against this appellate decision that the petitioner proposed to take a further appeal to the Supreme Court :

Held, that the petitioner was not entitled any more to reopen the question of legality or validity of the notice under S. 34 on the ground that he challenged it in the writ proceedings. But the plea of a final determination of his right to challenge the validity of the notice could not be of any assistance to the petitioner in inducing the Court to hold that the order of the High Court in appeal proposed to be appealed against must be regarded as a final order. Nothing whatever had been done in the proceeding commenced by S. 34 of the Income-tax Act. Only a notice had been issued the validity of which was challenged by the petitioner. It was still open to the petitioner to convince the Income-tax Officer that there had been no under-assessment and it would be perfectly open to him to take any step in aid of his contention before that officer and if need be before the Appellate Officer to establish that no re-assessment was called for. Indeed, the entire proceedings by way of re-assessment remained to be gone through. There had been no consideration at all of the merits of the matter. The merits could not possibly be affected by reason of the decision of the High Court in the writ appeal that the proceedings under S. 34 of the Income-tax Act had been validly initiated. Hence the decision proposed to be appealed from was not a final order within the meaning of Art. 133 of the Constitution. A I R 1920 P C 86 and AIR 1933 P C 58 and AIR 1943 F C 24 and AIR 1949 F C 1 and A I R 1950 F C 77 and AIR 1952 Nag 305 (FB) and A I R 1961 All 245 (FB) and A I R 1960 Cal 77 and A I R 1954 Cal 424, Rel. on ; A I R 1955 S C 576 and A I R 1961 S C 794 and AI R 1962 S C 12, Disting. ——Art. 133 — Test of finality — Writ petition to restrain Collector from realising arrears of income-tax due to her husband from petitioner's property — Order dismissing applicaion — If final order or Judgment (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109),

The test for determining the finality of an order is whether the order has finally disposed of the rights of the parties. An order dismissing a writ petition filed by the petitioner for restraining the Collector from proceeding to attach or sell the petitioner's property for realisation of arrears of income-tax due to her husband, without going into the question of title of the petitioner to the property sought to be attached and directing the parties to take such steps before the Collector as they were entitled to in law, is not a final order within the meaning of Art. 133 of the Constitution, inasmuch as it cannot be said that the order dismissing the writ petition filed by the petitioner has terminated the proceedings taken by the Collector to attach the petitioner's property. Once it is held that an order is not a final order it follows that it is not also a judgment within the meaning of Art. 133. An order which is not final cannot be deemed be judgment. ——Art. 133 (1) — Final order — Meaning of — It is one which leaves nothing more to be done in proceedings and by its own force affects rights of parties — Order granting review and directing rehearing of writ petitions, held not a final order.

Aggrieved by the order passed by the Court in two writ petitions presented by A and B to which C was not a party, in connection with their seniority in Government service, C made an application for review of the order. The Court granted that review and directed the rehearing of the writ petitions. On an application for grant of certificate under Article 133 (1) of the Constitution to enable an appeal against the order of review being preferred :

Held, that since the rights of the parties were by no means affected finally by its own force by the order by which review was granted, it should follow that the order was not a final order within the meaning of Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution and hence a certificate could not be granted. All that was decided was that C who was not made a party to the earlier two writ petitions presented by A and B had been injuriously affected by the order made in those writ petitions and that he was, therefore, entitled to seek review. A final order is one which after it was made not only left nothing more to be done in the proceedings in which that final order was made, but also by its own force affected the rights of the parties to those proceedings. P. and Berar Sales Tax (21 of 1947), S. 22 (1)).

The test of the finality of an order is whether the judgment or order finally disposes of the rights of the parties. The mere fact that the order decides an important and even a vital issue is by itself, not material, unless the decision puts an end to the suit. The finality must thus be a finality in relation to the suit. Further, the judgment or the order must affect the merits of the case between the parties by determining some right or liability.

A was assessed to a tax of Rs. 58,000 by the Assistant Commissioner of Sale Tax. His appeal before the Commissioner was not admitted as he had not deposited the amount of tax as required by S. 22 (1), C. P. and Berar Sales Tax Act, 1947. A applied to High Court under Art 226 for issuing a direction to the Commissioner to admit the appeal without deposit. The application was rejected. The question was whether the order of the High Court was a final order within Art. 133 (1) (a) so as to enable A to appeal to the Supreme Court.

Held, that the order was not an order on merits as it did not relate to A's liability to pay the tax and hence was not "a final order" within Art. 133 (1) (a) of the Constitution. The assessees were taxed under S. 23, Income-tax Act, to the amount exceeding Rs. 20,000. Against that order they applied under Arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution and on dismissal of those applications asked for the certificate under Art. 133 (1) (a) and (b).

Held, (i) that the order finally determined the rights of the assessees to obtain writs. As such it was a final order within the meaning of Art. 133 (1).

(ii) But the nature of proceeding started on writ petitions, being under the machinery of Income-tax Act under which there was no right of suit, it was a revenue proceeding and not a civil proceeding within the meaning of Art. 133. A decision is final for the purposes of Art. 133, when it decides and disposes of the whole merits of the case, when it settles conclusively all the legal rights of the parties and when it leaves nothing to be further litigated upon. The decision or order must affect the merits of the controversy between the parties by determining some right or liability. ■ ——Art. 133—Final order—Tests.

Per Beg J.—In order that an order may be declared to be a final order the following propositions of law stand established :

(1) that an order is final only if it finally disposes of the rights of parties (2) that the finality of the order must be determined in relation to the suit (3) that the order cannot be treated to be a final order if the suit is still left alive for the purpose of determining the rights and liabilities of the parties in the ordinary way; (4) that the mere fact that a cardinal point in the suit has been decided or even a vital and important issue determined in the case is not enough to make the order a final one : AIR 1933 P C 58, Foll.

The finality envisaged in Art. 133 of the Constitution is a finality in revision to a suit. To attract that article, the rights of the parties involved in the suit or the appeal must be finally disposed of.

Where an order sought to be appealed against is one passed under O 22 R. 5, Civil P C. and it is limited to the purpose of continuing the appeal, it cannot be regarded as either a judgment, decree or final order within the scope of Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution.

The point as to who should be substituted in the place of the deceased party or the purpose of proceeding with the litigation does not affect the ultimate rights and liabilities of the parties. Consequently it could not be postulated that there is any final adjudication on the questions arising in the suit itself. ——Art. 133 (1) (c) — Decision on interlocutory order—Certificate of fitness for appeal—Not a final order.

High Court was moved to certify a case as fit for appeal to the Supreme Court on the sole ground that the Court erroneously interpreted S. 82 of the Representation of the People Act. High Court held that the section did not forbid all the contesting candidates being joined as respondents even when the prayer is confined to a declaration that the election of the returned candidate is void, and that the election petition does not incur dismissal under S. 90 (3) of the Act merely on the ground that the petitioner has joined as respondents not only the returned candidates but also other contesting candidates.

Held, that the decision did not terminate the dispute between the parties and as such it was not a final order or judgment within the meaning of Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution. An order of the High Court, directing a suit to be stayed under S. 34 of the Arbitration Act, is not a "final order" within the meaning of Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution and therefore no leave should be granted for appeal to the Supreme Court. An order is final only if it finally disposes of the rights of the parties; the finality must be a finality in relation to the suit. The effect of an order staying a suit under S. 34, Arbitration Act, which is only an interlocutory order, is not finally to dispose of the rights of the parties even though it decides a cardinal issue in the suit and it cannot therefore be said to be "final". ——Art. 133 (1) (b) —Final order—Civil P. C (1908), S. 109.

An order setting aside a compromise decree and directing the trial Court to dispose of the suit on merits is not a final order within Art 133 (1) (b). AIR 1927 Pat 363; A I R 1933 P C 58; AIR 1945 All 401, Rel on.

The addition of the words 'in a civil proceeding of a High Court' in Art. 133 of the Constitution of India has not enlarged the meaning of the words 'final order' occurring in that article and in Sections 109 and 110 of the C. ——Art 133 –'Final order' — Remand order if final order.

Unless a remand order finally determines the rights of the parties and the case is sent back to the lower Court only to work out the details in accordance with the decision of the Court it cannot be said to be a final order.

Thus where a suit for declaration was dismissed on the ground of res judicata but on appeal the High Court set aside that finding and remanded the case for decision according to law after recording findings on other issues :

Held, that the order of remand did not finally dispose of the rights of the parties and, in the circumstances certificate for leave to appeal to Supreme Court could not be granted. A I R 1933 P C 58; AIR 1950 F C 83; (1891) 1 Q B 734, Rel on 1955 A L J 59 : AIR 1955 All 252 (253) (Prs 4, 5) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1)—Final order — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109).

An order can be held to be a final order only if it finally disposes of the rights of the parties in the suit or proceedings. What matters is not the form but the substance. If in substance no rights of the parties are outstanding to be decided in the suit, it cannot be said that a mere pendency of a suit on the file of a Court deprives the otherwise final adjudication of the rights of the parties by the High Court of its finality. Where all the material issues have been decided by the High Court and there is nothing more to be done, after remand, by the trial Court except to pass a decree, the order of the High Court is a final order within the meaning of Art. 133 (1). 69 Mad L W (Andh) 6 : 1956 Andh W R 61 : 1955 Andh L T (Civil) 850 : A I R 1956 Andh 126 (128) (Prs 13, 14) (DB).

——Art. 133 — "Final order" — Order remanding execution application for disposal according to law —Appeal to Supreme Court.

An order of the High Court holding that an application for possession made in execution of a decree was not time barred and remanding the case to the Court that passed the decree for disposal according to law, is not a "final order" within the meaning of Art. 133 of the Constitution of India, and no appeal, therefore, lies to the Supreme Court under that article. By the order the execution proceedings are kept alive in that the question of the delivery of possession in accordance with law has still to be decided by the executing Court. The fact that the High Court has decided an important question of limitation, is not by itself material. 54 C W N 874, Applied. 55 C W N 219 : A I R 1951 Assam 73 (74) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Art. 133 – Order remanding case for decision of question of limitation properly.

The second appellate Court agreed with lower appellate Court on the question of title and reversed its finding on the question of adverse possession and in view that the question of limitation had not been properly decided, remanded the case to the lower appellate Court for disposal after coming to a proper decision on that question. The orders of the Court below were set aside. The High Court directed that 'if the suit is not barred by limitation the plaintiff's suit should be decreed for such damages as may be found admissible in law. If the suit is barred by limitation the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed'. The formal order drawn up on the judgment was an order of remand.

——Art. 133 (1)—'Judgment or final order' — Order in appeal against order directing appointment of receiver—(Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109).

An order made in an appeal filed against an order directing the appointment of a Receiver is not a final order within the meaning of Art. 133 of the Constitution as it does not finally decide the rights of the parties. ——Art. 133—Final order—Test of finality—Order appointing or refusing to appoint receiver — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109).

The test of finality is whether the order amounts to a final adjudication of the rights of parties, in other words whether it affects the rights of the parties finally in the suit itself. If the decision whichever way it is given will, if it stands, finally dispose of the matter in dispute, it is final. On the other hand, if that decision, if given in one way, will finally dispose of the matter in dispute, but if given in the other will allow the action to go on, then it is not final but interlocutory. (1891) 1 Q B 734, Rel. on.

An order appointing a Receiver is only an interlocutory order and does not affect the merits of the case. Similarly an order refusing the appointment of a Receiver is not a final order. The appointment is in the discretion of the Court and the order does not decide any cardinal point arising for decision between the parties in the suit. 21 Cut L T 292 : I L R (1955) Cut 25 : A I R 1955 Orissa 71 (72) (Pt D) (Pr 4) (DB).

An appeal was sought to be preferred to the Supreme Court against the decision of the High Court in an appeal under S. 116 B of the Representation of the People Act. The aggrieved party invoked Art. 133 of the Constitution for a certificate for purposes of the appeal. On the question whether an appeal under S. 116-B of the Act is a civil proceeding for purposes of Art. 133 of the Constitution, Held, the weight of authority is overwhelmingly in favour of the conclusion that an appeal under S. 116-B of the Representation of the People Act is a 'civil proceeding' within the sweep and range of Art. 133 of the Constitution. Therefore an aggrieved person could invoke Art. 133 provided the other requirements of the Article are satisfied. The aggrieved person, in the instant case, can have resort only to clause (c) of Art. 133 (1) since obviously he does not come under clause (a) or (b). Having regard to the general importance of the question involved, a certificate of fitness should be issued under Art. 133 (1) (c). AIR 1958 Andh Pra 642, Overruled. C. V K. Rao v. ——Art. 133 (1)—'Civil proceeding'—Meaning of.

Ordinarily 'civil proceedings' are proceedings relating to right to property, status of a person or right to an office. 'Proceeding' means, in the ordinary sense the form in which action is brought or defended. The right to election is not a right to property or relating to any status. It is also not a right which could be enforced in a Court of law. Where the question involved is whether the respondent could be declared as elected there is no question of any right of property or status, and the case is not a case arising in a civil proceeding. The right of a patentee to the exclusive user of the patent for the period of its protection under the Patents and Designs Act is a right to property. An application for compulsory licence thereof is a process which affects that right to property and consequently an appeal under S. 23-F from the determination of the Controller granting the licence would be a proceeding of a civil nature. 67 Cal W N 743 : AIR 1963 Cal 433 (437) (Pt A) (Pr 14) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) 'Civil Proceedings' — Meaning of—Civil rights — What are — Apeal to High Court from decision of Election Tribunal under S. 116-A, Representation of the People Act — Is a 'civil proceeding'.

The Constitution nowhere defines what 'civil proceedings' are and, therefore, the Court must examine the nature of the proceedings to find out whether it can be called a civil proceeding or not. If the proceeding is in aid of establishing a civil right or for disputing one it would be a civil proceeding. The test would be whether but for the provision of any statute the right claimed or denied could be established in a civil Court. Broadly speaking, if the proceedings taken establish or negative a man's office or would affect his right to property of any kind it will be a civil proceeding.

It is difficult to give a comprehensive definition of 'civil rights'. They are not limited to common law rights only and would include inter alia any right to property, reputation, status and office of a person though these may be creatures of statutes.

Although the right to vote or stand at an election may not be a civil right as known to the common law and although the legislature may in its wisdom have thought it best to refer the dispute in connection with an election to a special Tribunal by enacting S. 116 A, Representation of the People Act, the legislature laid down that in hearing appeals from Election Tribunals the High Court was to exercise the jurisdiction vested in it in hearing appeals from the original decrees passed by civil Courts and to that extent desired that the decision of the High Court on appeal should be treated as a decree in appeal from an original decree, passed by a civil Court. The effect of S. 116-A of the Representation of the People Act of 1951 is to attract the provisions of S. 109 of the Code of Civil Procedure and Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution of India with regard to appealability to the Supreme Court.

An appeal from the decision of an Election Tribunal to the High Court under S. 116-A should therefore be treated as a civil proceeding within the meaning of Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution. A I R 1963 Cal 364 (365, 366, 367) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 6, 8, 9, 12) (DB).

——Art. 133 — Judgment, decree or final order in civil proceeding of High Court—Appeal to Supreme Court - Taxation assessment proceedings—Order of Board of Revenue revising Sales-Tax assessment allowed in appeal by High Court - Not made in a civil proceeding — Application for leave to appeal, not competent—Civil proceedings—What are—Civil and Criminal proceedings—Distinction in Constitution.

The assessee filed an appeal against the order of assessment made by the assessing authority, to the Commercial Tax Officer and filed a revision against the appellate order to the Deputy Commercial Tax Officer. The revision was dismissed. Then the Board of Revenue issued a notice to the assessee proposing to revise the assessment and after overruling the objection of the assessee on the question of limitation revised the assessment. The assessee filed an appeal to the High Court against the order of the Board of Revenue and the High Court allowed the appeal. The State sought to file an application seeking leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of India under Art. 133 of the Constitution. On the question whether the order of the High Court was one passed in a civil proceeding.

Held, a proceeding under a taxing enactment cannot be called a 'civil proceeding', within the scope of Art. 133 of the Constitution and an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court from the decision of the High Court allowing an appeal against the orders of the Board of Revenue revising a sales-tax assessment, cannot be sustained. The scheme of the constitutional provision relating to appeals to the Supreme Court rather suggests that the proceedings, capable of being appealed against are susceptible of a bifurcation into two well-defined categories of civil and criminal, mutually exclusive but together exhaustive.

The words 'civil proceedings' in Art. 133 of the Constitution ought not to be understood as any proceeding which are not of criminal nature. The nature of the proceeding whether it is civil or not, cannot be ascertained by merely applying a negative test that the proceeding is not one in relation to a criminal or quasi-criminal proceeding. The nature of the proceeding should have to be determined having regard to the nature of rights of parties involved in a proceeding and not from the nature of the forum in which the rights happen to be decided. The fact that a civil Court is seized of a particular dispute may be a relevant criterion throwing light on the nature of the proceeding, but would not itself be either sufficient or conclusive to hold that such a proceeding is of a civil nature. There cannot be civil proceedings in relation to which the aggrieved subject would have a right to approach a civil forum. So far as the sales-tax is concerned, S. 18 A prohibits the institution of suits arising out of assessments passed under the Madras General Sales Tax Act. The deprivation of a right to attack assessment orders in a civil Court necessarily implies that the statutory rights and obligations arising under the taxing enactment are not of a civil nature.

Assessment proceedings can only be conveniently described as revenue proceedings, to distinguish it from civil proceedings, and they maintain and preserve the same character even in the High Court, either in the shape of prerogative writs or in the form of revision under the provisions of the Constitution. There is no straight and satisfactory formula which can be called in aid to decide the question what a civil proceeding is. A proceeding in a civil Court may normally be civil proceeding. But there may be special statutory rights, which might be permitted to be agitated in a civil forum by special provisions; these rights may not be civil rights and the proceedings pertaining to them would not be civil proceedings. Rights which a municipal Court will enforce at the instance of the citizen or subject may properly be termed civil rights. They consist of the power of acquiring and enjoying property or exercising paternal or marital powers and the like. I R (1964) 1 Mad 48 : (1964) 1 M L J 342 : (1964) 15 S T C 207 : 77 Mad L W 328 : AIR 1964 Mad 494 (495, 496, 497, 499, 500) (Prs 3, 4, 14, 15, 16, 18, 21) (DB).

Simply because a proceeding is not a criminal one, it cannot be taken to be a civil proceeding as contemplated under Art. 133. The Constitution contemplates other miscellaneous proceedings besides civil and criminal, such as, matrimonial, admiralty, etc.

The expression used in Art. 133 is "a civil proceeding of a High Court" and not the expression "civil cause or matter" which is manifestly of wider import. On its general acceptation, the term "proceeding" means the form in which the action is brought or defended, the manner of intervention by parties, the mode of deciding issues, of opposing judgment and of executing. It follows that the expression "civil proceeding of a High Court" must be interpreted to mean the form of proceeding of the High Court in the exercise of its civil jurisdiction. On the regular assessment of the income made on the assessee by the Officer on 31st March, 1953 in respect of the assessment year 1948-49 it was found that the advance tax paid on estimate made by the assessee was less than eighty per cent of the tax determined in the regular assessment, no charge for penal interest was made under S. 18-A (6) though the Officer was obliged to do so under the law as it stood then. But by Act 25 of 1953 a proviso, giving power to the Officer in circumstances to be prescribed by rules, to waive or reduce such interest, was added to the section with retrospective effect from 1st April, 1952. The prescribed circumstances were made in R. 48 only in December, 1953. On the mistake being pointed out in the assessment of the assessee in rectification proceedings under S. 35 of the Act the Officer added the penal interest in 1956. The revision filed to the Commissioner was dismissed. The assessee applied to the High Court under Art. 226 of the Constitution to quash the proceedings, and the High Court allowed the applications by issuing the writ. On the requisite certificate, the Revenue appealed.

Held, the order of the High Court quashing the proceedings in rectification has to be upheld. A proceeding for relief against infringement of civil right of a person is a 'civil proceeding' within the scope of Art. 133 of the Constitution, even if the infringement be in purported enforcement of a taxing statute and an aggrieved party's right of appeal to the Supreme Court from order in those proceedings is exercisable in the same manner as it would be in the case of a decree, order or judgment, in any other civil proceedings. Where a Revenue Authority seeks to levy tax or threatens action in purported exercise of powers conferred by an Act relating to revenue the primary impact of such an act or threat is on the civil rights of the party aggrieved and when relief is claimed in that behalf it is a civil proceeding, even if relief is claimed not in a suit but by resort to the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court to issue writs. Such proceeding does not fall in the 'other proceedings' within the meaning of Article 132 (1) of the Constitution. Further, (held by majority) there was at the date of the original assessment an absolute obligation imposed upon the assessee to pay interest under S. 18-A (6), but by reason of the retrospective operation given to the fifth proviso added to subsection (6) by Act 25 of 1953, the Income-tax Officer was invested with the discretion in prescribed circumstances to reduce or waive interest payable by the assessee, this power of the Income-tax Officer must, in view of the retrospective amendment be deemed in law to have possessed on the date on which the order of assessment was made in the case. Rule 48 as soon as it was framed was to be read along with the proviso and as the proviso is retrospective the rule must also be deemed to be retrospective. There was no absolute power with which the Income-tax Officer was invested to reduce or waive interest; his power could be exercised only in prescribed cases falling within the limits of the authority conferred upon him. The fact that the Income-tax Officer could not in making the assessment have adjusted his approach to the problem before him in the light of those provisions is irrelevant in considering the legality of his order. The order of the Officer which did not take note of the law deemed to be in force must be regarded as defective.

Per Mudholkar, J. — Without further material it cannot be assumed that while making the regular assessment, the Income tax Officer, upon an erroneous view of law, came to the conclusion that he had discretion under S. 18-A (6) to reduce or waive interest and that, therefore, he purported to exercise that discretion. ——Art. 133—'Civil proceeding'—Proceedings under Art. 226 — Proceedings under Income-tax Act — Nature of.

The more liberal view is that a proceeding under Art. 226 of the Constitution is a civil proceeding within meaning of Art. 133, if it relates to civil rights. But the proceedings for assessment of income-tax are not proceedings relating to a civil right. The liability to income-tax is not a civil right enforceable as such in Court of law. No one can claim it as a civil right that he is not liable to pay the tax. Nor can the State claim that any person is liable to income-tax under the common law relating to civil rights. A proceeding relating to liability to income tax partakes of the nature of a proceeding which has been usually described as a revenue proceeding. There is no provision similar to those in Arts. 133 and 134 for grant of certificate by the High Court in respect of its judgments and orders in other proceedings, i e., proceedings, which are not criminal or civil. ——Art. 133 (1) Civil proceeding — Meaning of— Proceeding under Art. 226 for issue of writ of mandamus—Nature of.

Art. 226 does not confer any jurisdiction of a type which can be classed under a separate head. The Article only confers additional powers on the High Court to issue certain writs, directions and orders of the nature more or less as were issued in England under the different prerogative writs. The conferment is of additional powers and not of a particular kind of additional jurisdiction. It would depend upon the nature of each case, decided under Art. 226 whether it was a civil, criminal or other proceeding. Civil proceedings may be defined as a judicial process to enforce a civil right and includes any remedy employed to indicate that right. AIR 1957 Punj 173 (FB), Rel. on. All proceedings which are not criminal in nature are not necessarily civil proceedings, within the meaning of Art. 133 of the Constitution. As to whether the proceedings initiated by a writ application under Art. 226 or Art. 227 are civil proceedings or not would depend on the nature of those proceedings and the relief sought in those proceedings. The proceedings so initiated could be either civil, criminal or other proceedings. The proceedings relating to liability to pay tax partake the character of a revenue proceeding irrespective of the fact whether the proceedings are those taken under the taxing statute itself or initiated by a writ application under Art. 226 or Art. 227 of the Constitution.

On the language of R. 631 of the Original Side Rules and Rule 16 in Chapter 17 of the Appellate Side Rules themselves the orders made by the High Court on applications under Art. 226 are not decrees. The use of the expression 'as it' or 'as' in both these rules clearly indicates that both these rules bring into existence a legal fiction, and the fiction created is that though the orders made on applications under

Art. 226 are not in fact decrees in exercise of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction they be treated, for the purposes of execution of those orders, as decrees made in exercise of the ordinary original jurisdiction. The fiction cannot be carried further than for the purposes it has been enacted.

The Income-tax Officer, Special Circle, Bombay served on the Phalton Sugar Works Ltd. two notices under S. 34 (1) (a) of the Income-tax Act for the purposes of re-assessing their income for the assessment years 1949-50 and 1950-51, on the ground that he had reason to believe that the income for those years had escaped assessment or had been under-assessed. It was these two notices which were challenged by the Phalton Sugar Works in the Writ Petition before the High Court. The Writ Petition was allowed on 4th August 1962 and the High Court made an order, quashing the aforesaid two notices and also made a further order restraining the respondent (the Income-tax Officer) from taking any steps or proceedings in enforcement, furtherance, pursuance or implementation of any of said notices. The Income-tax Officer, Companies Circle II (3), Bombay, applied for a certificate under Art. 133 (1) (a), (b) and (c) of the Constitution of India.

Held, that a party that claims a certificate under Cl. (1) of Art. 133 or under any one or more of the sub-clauses has to establish that there has been a judgment, decree or final order in a civil proceeding of a High Court. The order made by the High Court on 4th August 1962, would be a judgment, decree or final order within the meaning of Cl. (1) of Art. 133. The assessee sought to get quashed the notices issued under S. 34 of the Income tax Act, and also prayed for an order restraining the Income-tax Officer from taking any action in enforcement of the notices. In other words in the proceedings, a protection was sought against action being taken under the process issued under the Income-tax Act. The proceedings under the Income-tax Act were revenue in nature. The writ proceedings with which the Court was dealing, therefore were revenue in nature. The judgment of the High Court, against which a certificate was sought under Art. 133, was not a judgment in a civil proceeding, and therefore the petitioner was not entitled to the certificate as prayed for. It is of no consequence whether such a proceeding is taken in a suit or by way of a writ under Art. 226 of the Constitution. If a right to property or any other civil right is involved in the proceeding, then the proceeding is a civil proceeding, no matter the jurisdiction of the Court invoked is special or extraordinary. ——Art. 133 — 'Civil proceedings' — Proceedings under Art. 226—Nature of.

There is no definition of "civil proceeding" in the Constitution. There is no reason why a proceeding under Art. 226 of the Constitution for the enforcement of a right to property for instance, cannot be deemed to be a civil proceeding. Every application under Art 226 of the Constitution cannot be deemed to be a civil proceeding. To give an obvious example an application for a writ of habeas corpus or a writ of prohibition to prevent prosecution of criminal proceedings may not be properly described as civil proceedings, but if the civil rights of a party are affected by an order of the Executive Government or a party feels aggrieved by the adjudication of a special administrative tribunal relating to his rights in a property or other civil right there is no reason why an application by such an aggrieved party should not be deemed to be a civil proceeding. A writ petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution praying for the issue of a writ of mandamus to restrain the Income-tax Department and the Collector from attaching or selling the petitioner's property for realisation of arrears of income-tax due to her husband is not a revenue proceeding but a civil proceeding within the meaning of Art. 133 inasmuch as the petitioner is asserting her right to the property standing in her name and seeking relief against any interference with that right. 28 I T R 70 : AIR 1956 Pat 175, Dist. 1957 Mad W N 650 : 70 Mad L W 960 : (1957) 2 Mad L J 567 : I L R (1958) Mad 117 : (1958) 34 I T R 738 : A I R 1958 Mad 151 (153, 154) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (DB).

The expression 'civil proceeding of a High Court' in Art. 133 must be interpreted to mean the form of proceeding of the High Court in the exercise of its civil jurisdiction. Further an order rejecting writ petition under Art. 226 is not a 'judgment, decree or final order,' as contemplated under Art. 133.

Again, judging the nature of the proceedings under Art. 226 of the Constitution which is wider than that of a proceeding under Art. 32 it is clear that Art. 133 is not intended to cover proceedings under Art. 226 of the Constitution. In a proceeding arising out of an application under Art. 226, Constitution of India for a writ of mandamus upon the Board of Revenue, Bihar, or the State of Bihar to withdraw from the management of the estate, it was contended that the provisions of the Court of Wards Act as also of the Indian Majority Act in so far as they purported to extend the period of minority of a person to 21 years had become void from the date the Constitution came into force, because those provisions were in conflict with Art. 14 of the Constitution. It was also contended that the petitioner had no reversionary or immediate interest in the impartible estate within the meaning of S. 7 of the Court of Wards Act and that the expression "reversionary interest" could not cover the right, if any, available to the petitioner during the lifetime of his father.

Where a petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution challenging the legality of an assessment made under the Punjab General Sales Tax Act is allowed and the assessment is quashed the order of the High Court on the petition is a judgment, decree or order 'in a civil proceeding' within the meaning of Art. 133 of the Constitution and the High Court has power to issue a certificate of fitness under Art. 133 (c). According to Punjab High Court Rules and Order Vol 5, Chap 4-F petitions under Art. 226 of the Constitution fall into only two categories, namely, habeas corpus petitions which are criminal proceedings, and other petitions for certiorari, etc., which are civil proceedings. The procedure for each category is separately mentioned in F (a) and F (b) respectively. Merely because Art. 132 envisages a third category of proceedings which may be neither criminal nor civil, it does not in any sense follow that there must be proceedings under Art. 226 of the Constitution also which fall neither in the category of criminal proceedings nor that of civil proceedings. The rules of this Court divide writ petitions under Art. 226 into two categories and there is no reason why that should not be considered exhaustive. A I R 1955 Raj 56, Rel. on. The word "Civil" when prefixed before 'proceeding', 'action', 'suit', 'remedy', or other cognate expression relates to private rights and remedies given to individuals or corporations as members of the community in contradistinction to those which are public and relate to Government. An action, which has for its object, the recovery of private or civil rights, or compensation for their infraction is necessarily a civil proceeding. A civil action is a proceeding in a Court of justice by one party against another, for the enforcement or protection of a private right, or for the redress or prevention of a private wrong. The word "criminal" is used in contradistinction to civil proceedings or actions. The former includes proceedings taken in the name of the State, the end and design of which is the punishment of the criminal; while the latter signifies actions for enforcement of civil rights.

The question in controversy pertaining to the private rights of the contestants relating to the allotment of agricultural land in a proceeding under the Administration of Evacuee Property Act is eminently of a civil nature and an order of the Letters Patent Bench in an appeal from an order of a single Judge passed in relation to such question under Art. 226, is made in a civil proceeding. 61 Pun L R 202 : A I R 1959 Punj 58 (60) (Pt B) (Prs 5, 8) (DB).

● ——Arts. 133 and 226 — 'Civil proceedings' — Meaning of — Proceedings under Act 37 of 1850 — Dismissal order by President — Writ Petition—Proceedings, if civil—(Public Servants' Inquiry Act 37 of 1850).

Whether the proceeding in which the Court declines to issue a writ under Art. 226 of the Constitution of India can be regarded as a civil proceeding or not within the meaning of Art. 133, will depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. What a civil proceeding is, may be defined as a judicial process to enforce a right and includes any remedy employed to vindicate that right and covers every step in an action and is equivalent to an action.

To determine the question whether a proceeding is a civil proceeding or not within meaning of Art. 133, one has to see against what wrong is the remedy sought. Where a suit could be brought and the petitioner seeks his remedy by way of a prerogative writ, the proceeding would be civil, but it cannot be that if the suit could not be brought the proceeding would not be civil in nature.

Where the complaint of the petitioner under Art. 226 was that the proceedings which were taken against him under the Public Servants' Inquiry Act (37 of 1850) were vitiated because of certain defects which he pointed out and the High Court has overruled those objections, this amounted to a determination of his civil rights. Even though the proceedings against which the petitioner made an application under Art. 226 of the Constitution of India were merely executive proceedings, one cannot lose sight of the question that the petitioner was agitating the question of his right to remain in service and under S. 9 of the Civil Procedure Code a suit in which the right to property or to office is contested is a suit of a civil nature. ——Art. 133—Applicability.

In a proceeding under S. 137, Companies Act, the police started investigation against the petitioners on the basis of a first information report made by the Registrar, Joint Stock Companies. The petitioners applied under Art. 226 of the Constitution to quash the investigation that the police were making in pursuance of the first information report lodged by the Registrar. The application was dismissed by the High Court and thereupon the petitioners made an application under Arts. 132, 133 and 134, Constitution of India for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court.

Held, that the matter was criminal and, therefore, Art. 133 had no application. (1943) A C 147, Ref. 57 Punj L R 332 : I L R (1955) Punj 1345 : A I R 1956 Punj 1 (2, 3) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1)—Civil proceeding — Application for writ other than habeas corpus is civil proceeding—High Court Rules and Orders — (Rajasthan High Court Rules, Chapters XXI and XXII).

The question whether a proceeding under Art. 226 of the Constitution is a civil proceeding or not depends upon the nature of the proceeding. A I R 1953 Hyd 131, Rel. on.

Under the Rules of the Rajasthan High Court writ proceedings are dealt with in two chapters, namely, Chapter XXI and Chapter XXII. Chapter XXI deals with writs of habeas corpus or with applications under section 491, C. P. Code, while Chapter XXII deals with all writs under Art. 226 of the Constitution other than a writ in the nature of the habeas corpus. It is obvious from this distinction made in the Rules that writs of habeas corpus are criminal proceedings, while all other writs are treated as civil proceedings in this Court. There can be no doubt, therefore, that an application for a writ other than the writ of habeas corpus challenging the validity of an Act is a civil proceeding. Article 133 (1) will, therefore, apply to such a proceeding AIR 1951 Pat 29, Disting. I L R (1955) 5 Raj 321 : 1955 Raj L W 37 : AIR 1955 Raj 56 (56, 57) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 7) (DB).

9 (b). Proceedings under Art. 227.

——Art. 133 (1)—Civil proceeding.

Merely because one of the points raised before the High Court related to the question of the validity of the assessment to excess profits tax does not make the entire proceeding a revenue proceeding.

Courts which decide disputed rights between subjects or between a subject and the State are Civil Courts. It is true a Certificate Officer or the Board of Revenue adjudicates upon disputes relating to revenue or public demands, but such dispute is nevertheless a civil dispute which arises in proceedings for enforcement of civil rights. Before a Certificate Officer or Board of Revenue the person who is sought to be made liable upon the certificate, in other words, the certificate debtor, raises questions disputing his liability or relating to his liability to pay the amount due on the certificate and these authorities have to adjudicate upon such questions and when the decision of the certificate officer or the Board of Revenue is challenged in a proceeding under Art. 227 such proceeding must be regarded as a proceeding involving a dispute with regard to civil rights of the parties and consequently the proceeding before the High Court is a civil proceeding within the meaning of Art. 133 of the Constitution. ●——Art. 133 — Civil proceeding — Meaning of — Nature of jurisdiction under Art. 227—Setting aside order of Election Tribunal—If civil proceeding.

The jurisdiction under Art. 227 is not original jurisdiction and an order of the High Court passed under Art. 227 is an order made in exercise of the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court. The power of revision conferred upon the High Court under Art. 227 is similar in nature to the appellate power of the High Court. The intrinsic quality of the power granted under Art. 227 is the same as appellate power. A I R 1955 Mad 287 and AIR 1953 Cal 636 and ILR 22 Mad 68 and 13 Cal L J 90, Rel. on. AIR 1957 Pat 102, Dist. 10. High Court.

——Arts. 133 and 366 (14) — High Court — Special Appellate Tribunal under Madras Act (30 of 1956)—Neither a High Court nor a Court — Application for leave to appeal to Supreme Court against its decision not maintainable—Civil P. C (1908), S. 109—'Court of final appellate jurisdiction'.

The power of the High Court under Art. 133 to grant leave to appeal is confined and restricted only to 'judgment, decree or final order in a civil proceeding of a High Court', and not of a Tribunal.

The Special Appellate Tribunal constituted under S. 7 of the Madras Estates (Supplementary) Act (30 of 1956) is neither a 'High Court' within the meaning of Art. 133 of the Constitution, nor 'a Court of final appellate jurisdiction' within the meaning of S. 109, Civil P. C., and as such an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court is not maintainable. Section 7 of the Madras Act makes it clear that the Special Appellate Tribunal is not exercising the normal appellate jurisdiction of the High Court. Section 7, sub-s. (2), reinforces this view when it provides and prescribes a procedure for the disposal of the appeal in cases where difference of opinion arises between the judges hearing the appeal. Such a provision would have been wholly unnecessary if the Special Appellate Tribunal were to be treated as the High Court itself in view of the provisions contained in Cl. (36) under the Letters Patent. The character of the tribunal cannot be altered by its personnel which consists of two High Court Judges. An association of judges of the High Court invested with particular powers and jurisdiction outside the ambit of the High Court's jurisdiction cannot be called a High Court. (e) Subject-matter incapable of pecuniary valuation.

(f) Consolidation.

11. Value of subject-matter in Court of first instance—Clause (a).

●——Art. 133 (1) (a)—Applicability.

Under clause (a) what is decisive is the amount or value of the subject-matter in the Court of first instance and still in dispute in appeal to Supreme Court. If in a proposed appeal there is no claim or question raised respecting property other than the subject-matter clause (a) will apply. Chittarmal v. Pannalal, 1965 S C (Notes) 18 : (1965) 1 S C W R 692 : 1966) 1 S C J 88 : AIR 1965 S C 1440 (1441, 1442) (Prs 5, 6).

——Art. 133 (1) (a) and (b)—Clauses (a) and (b) are mutually exclusive.

The two cls. (a) and (b) of Art. 133 are mutually exclusive and the use of different words in the two clauses would indicate that the framers of the Constitution had in view that "the amount or value of the subject-matter of the dispute" in cl. (a) is not necessarily the same as where the judgment, decree or final order involves, directly or indirectly some claim or question respecting property of the like amount or value. AIR 1957 All 28 (34, 35) (Pt C) (Pr 13) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (a) and (b) — Certificate of fitness under, requirements of — Subject-matter of dispute should be Rs. 20,000, or more under cl. (a) — But under cl. (b) property should be of that value.

Where the judgment of the High Court on appeal affirms that of the Court below, in order to entitle the petitioner to the grant of certificate under Art. 133 (1) (a) and (b) of the Constitution of India the Court has to be satisfied first that the value of the subject matter of the dispute in the Court of first instance and still in dispute on appeal was and is Rs. 20,000 or upwards, or that the decree proposed to be appealed from, involves directly or indirectly a claim or question of the like amount and that the intended appeal involves substantial questions of law.

The requirement of sub-clause (b) of Art. 133 (1) would be satisfied if the property to which the claim or question relates is worth Rs. 20,000 or upwards. While under sub-cl. (a) it is the 'subject-matter of dispute' which should be worth Rs. 20,000 or more, it is the 'property' under sub-clause (b) which is to be of the like value. The word 'property' does not necessarily mean 'the subject-matter of the dispute. Sub clause (b) refers to property which is other than the subject-matter of the dispute, but is affected by the decision in the suit AIR 1956 All 348, Rel. on. AIR 1962 Cal 583 (586) (Pt A) (Prs 20, 23) (DB).

11 (a). Court of first instance.

● ——Art. 133 (1) (a) — "Court of first instance" — Meaning of—High Court exercising jurisdiction on original side, whether "court of first instance".

A restricted meaning should not be given to the expression "court of first instance" in Art. 133 (1) (a) to mean only a Court subordinate to the High Court. If against a decision in a matter which comes to the High Court within its original jurisdiction, by internal arrangement an appeal is provided to a fuller or larger Bench of the same High Court, to such a case Article 133 (1) (a) will apply for it is quite possible for the High Court to be the Court of first instance as well as the Court of appeal in the same matter.. Held, that proceedings under O. 21, R. 90 have nothing to do with the subject-matter of the suit in which the decree was passed. They are in respect of sale of proprety which was not the subject-matter of the suit and as such are, in their nature, original proceedings. ——Art. 133 (1) (a)—"Subject-matter of the dispute" —Meaning of.

The phrase "subject-matter of the dispute" mean and can only mean the content of the dispute and therefore as to the magnitude of the monetary value the subject-matter is limited by the dimensions of the dispute and is not necessarily co-extensive with the property to which the dispute appertains. The expression is capable of two meanings but the meaning which appears to be in accord with the true intent of Article 133 (1) (a) is the "content of the dispute". That clause and the next are concerned with limiting the right of appeal in civil proceeding to the cases of and over a stated value on the obvious principle that in order that a dispute may be allowed to go further than the High Court the stake must be sufficiently large. There may be a small dispute with respect to a vast property, affecting only an infinitesimal portion of it or a microscopic interest in it. It would be irrational to hold that the framers of the Constitution intended that even in such cases the value of the dispute should be regarded as the value of the property itself, however small might be the proportion it bore to the actual dispute between the parties. AIR 1958 NUC 4509 (Cal) (D B).

[Overruled in AIR 1966 Cal 205 (FB)].

——Art. 133—Subject-matter of dispute—[C. P. Code (1908) S. 110.]

Under Art. 133 the relevant value is not the value of the suit but the value of the dispute. It is not without significance that whereas the language in S. 110, C. P. Code was and still remains even after the adaptation "the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit", the language of Art. 133 of the Constitution is "the amount of value of the subject-matter of the dispute." The language of the Constitution appears to be more appropriate and accurate because in any contention between two parties, the value of the subject-matter must be the value of the issue between them and not always the value of the suit which may be different. Thus, if a suit raises an issue between two co-defendants, different from the issue as between the plaintiff and them, then, as between themselves, the value of the dispute will be the value of the issue in which they are interested, inter se. 57 Cal W N 933 : AIR 1954 Cal 289 (292, 293) (Pt H) (Pr 15) (DB).

A writ petition to restrain the Collector from realising the dues from the petitioner's property was dismissed by the High Court without going into the question of title of the petitioner to the attachment to continue and left the petitioner to pursue her remedies available to her at law.

Held, tentatively that even assuming that the property attached was worth more than Rs. 20,000 it could not be said that the subject-matter of the dispute was property sought to be attached. Further that order did not even involve directly or indirectly some claim or question to that property. Therefore, the case did not even satisfy the pecuniary requirements of the Art. 133 (1) (a) of the Constitution. 1957 Mad W N 650 : 70 Mad L W 980 : (1957) 2 Mad L J 567 : ILR (1958) Mad 117 : (1958) 34 ITR 738 : AIR 1958 Mad 151 (154) (Pt D) (Pr 8) (DB).

——Art. 133—Subject-matter of dispute.

In execution of a decree the petitioners applied for delivery of possession of the leased property after the expiry of the period fixed in the decree. The executing Court, without notice to the respondent ordered delivery and this was duly effected on 22-7-1951. The respondent thereupon filed a petition for setting aside the ex parte order and as a consequence to restore possession of the property along with some moveables which were represented to have been fixed by him for better enjoyment of the leased premises. He also contended in that petition that the executing Court had no jurisdiction to order delivery of possession of the property without the permission of the Rent Controller under the House Rent Control Order for the reason that the decree passed in the original suit partook of the nature of eviction of a tenant by the landlords. The petition was dismissed by the trial Court and on appeal by the respondent the High Court upheld the contention of the judgment-debtor. It was against that order that the petitioners sought a certificate to appeal to the Supreme Court.

Held, that the moveables were not the subject-matter of dispute under Cl. (1) (a) of the article. ILR (1954) Mys 504 ; AIR 1955 Mys 35 (36, 37) (Pr 5) (DB).

For the purpose of determining the right to a certificate the value of the subject matter in appeal has to be determined with reference to the market value of the property on the date of the decree of the High Court. Where in another suit there arose an issue in respect of the value of the share in certain property, and the Court, on sufficient enquiry, gave certain finding about the market value of such share, that finding may be accepted for the purpose of the application for certificate to appeal to Supreme Court in the previous litigation, and no further inquiry into the question is necessary. 1958 All L J 845 : AIR 1959 All 249 (251) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

In a suit for rent of a patni for a certain period, the claim was for Rs. 12,800. The defence was that the patnidars were entitled to an abatement of rent as a portion of the land comprised in the tenure had been lost by diluvion.

Held, that the dispute in the suit was whether or not the plaintiff was entitled to rent for the period claimed, and that as no claim was made as to the future, what was to occur in the future was not and could not be in dispute. It was impossible to capitalise, as it were, the value of the defence and include it in the value of the dispute. The value of the dispute in the suit could not possibly exceed Rs. 12,800 and therefore no leave could be given unless the case fell within Art. 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution. 11 (d). Applicant for leave, if barred from showing real value—Estoppel and res judicata.

● ——Art. 133 (1) — Suit for redemption of Otti — Plaintiff not barred by valuation of property given in plaint—Value of property at two material times as found by High Court above Rs. 20,000—Certificate by High Court is properly given. Kunju Kesavan v. M. M. Philip. (1964) 3 S C R 634 : 1963 Ker L J 962 : (1963) 2 Ker L R 238 : (1963) 2 S C W R 275 : AIR 1964 SC 164 (166) (Pt A) (Prs 6, 7).

——Art. 133 (1)—Value of subject-matter in dispute —Suit for declaration of title and possession valued at Rs. 5,500—Defendants alleging that value exceeded Rs. 20,000—Question left undetermined—Estoppel—(C. P. Code (1908), S. 110) — (Court-fees Act (1870), S. 7 (iv) (c) and (v)) — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 115).

In respect of a suit which is not required to be valued according to the real or market value the parties are not precluded from showing, for the purpose of an appeal to the Supreme Court, that the value of the subject matter in the Court of first instance was Rs. 20, 000 or over, where the question of valuation had not been decided at an earlier stage and where the lower valuation put upon the plaint had not involved recourse to a different forum. AIR 1937 Cal 292, Rel. on.

Clause 4 of S. 7, Court-fees Act does not require that the value of the subject matter should be the market value of the property. The plaintiff has to value the relief which he claims when a suit under Cl. 4 (c) is for a declaration with consequential relief. There is no statutory obligation on him to value the suit on the basis of market value of the property in dispute. (Distinction drawn between Cls. (iv) and (v) of S. 7, Court-fees Act.)

A suit for declaration of title and possession of property was valued at Rs. 5,500 and although the defendants in their written statement pointed out that the market value of the property in dispute, far exceeded Rs. 20,000 no issue was framed and no finding was given by the trial Court. The suit was dismissed but in appeal it was decreed and in an application under S. 110, C. P. Code, read with Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court the question was whether, in these circumstances, defendants could be estopped from claiming that the market value of the property which was not ascertained during the course of the litigation, could be determined in order to see whether they can appeal as of right as they claim. In an inquiry directed by the High Court it was revealed that the market value of the subject matter in dispute would not be less than Rs. 30,000.

Held, that there could be no estoppel against the defendants. The plaintiffs were not induced to go into any wrong Court and were not otherwise misled by any act or omission on the part of the defendants. The valuation that plaintiffs adopted was of their own choice. The defendants could not also be said to be approbating and reprobating. They were adhering to their allegation made in the written statement. On general principles they could not be debarred on the strength of the rule of estoppel from showing that the valuation of the subject-matter was such that they could appeal to the Supreme Court as of right. The result of the enquiry was also in their favour. The case was therefore a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court under S. 110, C. P. Code, read with Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution. AIR 1955 Assam 126 (128) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (a)—Lower valuation in trial Court —Bar to putting up correct valuation—Doctrine of approbate and reprobate—Applicability—(C. P. Code (1908), S. 110).

The correct test to apply Art. 133 is whether the party seeking to vary the earlier valuation for the purpose of an appeal to the Supreme Court had obtained an advantage on the basis of the previous valuation, now said to be erroneous, and where it could reasonably be said that he had obtained an advantage, it would be said that he was trying to approbate and reprobate and he would be precluded from revising the previous valuation. AIR 1937 Cal 292, Foll.

Held, on facts that as the valuation of property on the date of suit in 1947 was over Rs. 20,000 and as it was a common case of both sides that prices of land had increased after the partition of India, it would be safe to say that on the date of the application for leave to appeal, the value of the matter in dispute in appeal was also over Rs. 20,000, and therefore application for certifiate under Art. 133 (1) (a) should be allowed. AIR 1958 Cal 187 (190, 191) (Prs 7, 10, 14) (DB).

——Art. 133 — Valuation of the subject-matter in dispute in the Court of first instance—(C. P. Code (1908), S. 110).

Where the valuation of the suit by the plaintiff is not objected to by the defendant in the trial Court, but on the other hand he adopts the same valuation for the purpose of his own appeal from the trial Court's decree, he cannot subsequently turn round and say that the valuation was much higher for the purpose of securing leave to appeal to the Supreme Court from the decree of the High Court. The principle of approbate and reprobate applies to such a case. 1 I A 84, Appl. 57 Cal W N 933 : AIR 1954 Cal 289 (294) (Pt I) (Pr 17) (DB).

■ ——Art. 133 (1) (a)—Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110 and O. 45, R. 3 — Application for leave to appeal to Supreme Court—Certificate of fitness—Valuation of subject-matter in suit and appeal - Valuation adopted in plaint and accepted for appeal by defendant — Party applying for certificate can show higher and real value of subject-matter—He is not precluded from doing so by provisions of S. 11, O. 7, R. 1; O. 8, R. 2 or O. 41, R. 1 (2). Civil P. C. or S. 115 of Evidence Act.

For ascertaining the value of the subject matter in dispute for the purpose of Art. 133 of the Constitution and S. 110, C. P. Code in the Court of the first instance or in the proposed appeal it would be open to any party, be he the plaintiff or defendant to go behind the valuation adopted in the plaint or in the memorandum of appeal, as the case may be, and show the real value of the subject-matter in dispute, except where (1) there has been a judicial adjudication of the correctness of the original valuation in such a way as to attract the principle of the rule of res judicata or (2) where the party making the original valuation or the one adopting it had an option to give that value or the correct value and while exercising the option by giving one of such values he gained for himself an advantage or made the opposite party suffer a detriment. AIR 1957 Cal 292 and AIR 1953 Cal 187 and AIR 1927 Mad 862, Rel. on; S C P Nos. 7 and 8 of 1958 (Mad), Overruled.

Held, on facts (1) that the constitutional (Art. 133 of the Constitution) or statutory (S. 110, Civil P. C.) right of appeal could not be curtailed by an erroneous statement as to valuation by the party seeking a certificate; (2) that O. 7, R. 1 or O. 41, R 1 (2) (Madras), Civil P. C. present no difficulty, for it would be open to any party to show what the real value of the property is. 1 Ind App 317 (PC), Rel. on.; (3) that a valuation simpliciter for Court-fee purposes could not, on principle, be held to preclude him from showing the real value; (4) that O. 8, R. 2, Civil P. C., referred only to a plea relating to the maintainability of the suit and not to one for safeguarding a right of appeal in the possible event of the defendant failing. (5) that the principle of constructive res judicata could not apply to cases where there was no duty on the defendant to contest the value mentioned by the plaintiff. (6) that a mere erroneous valuation either for jurisdictional or fiscal purposes could not amount to a representation on which it could be said that the opposite party would suffer a detriment; (7) that no question of approbate and reprobate could arise, Kuppanna Gounder v. Perumal Gounder, 1961 Mad W N 436 : ILR (1961) Mad 1143 : (1962) 1 Mad L J 65 : 74 Mad L W 460 : AIR 1961 Mad 511 (513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518) (Pt A) (Prs 2, 5 to 8, 10, 12, 20, 22, 23) (FB).

——Art. 133 (1) (a) and (b) — Amount of value of subject-matter of dispute in Court of first instance—Proceedings for grant of probate contested by petitioner — Application dismissed by Court of first instance but decreed in appeal by High Court—Leave to appeal under Art. 133 — Petitioner not precluded from showing that value of subject-matter in dispute in Court of first instance exceeds Rs. 20,000 although it was shown less in application for grant of probate —Evidence Act (1372), S. 115.

Except in cases of estoppel or res judicata, a party should not be shut out from this right to appeal merely on account of the valuation given in the plaint. If, however, the question of valuation has been raised and decided at an earlier stage or if the opposite party has been led to act upon the valuation given by the party applying for the certificate he cannot be permitted to depart from that valuation.

Where an application for grant of probate is contested by the petitioner and the application is dismissed in the Court of first instance on the ground that the will sought to be probated was not genuine, and effective but is decreed in appeal by the High Court, the petitioner, in an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 133 (1) (a) and (b) is not precluded from showing that the value of the subject-matter in dispute in the Court of first instance exceeded Rs. 20,000 although it was shown as less than that amount in the application for grant of probate. The valuation was not a matter in respect of which the petitioner while contesting the grant was called upon to express his acceptance or non-acceptance. I L R (1960) Mys 931.

——Art. 133 (1) (a) — Basic principles underlying—Misstatement as to valuation in plaint or memorandum of appeal—Not a bar to consideration of application for determination of value of subject-matter —Exceptions to rule — Value of subject matter means real or market-value — Civil P. C. (1908), O. 45, R. 5.

Two of the basic principles underlying Art. 133 (1) are : (1) The right of appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution is a constitutional right, and cannot be abridged or abrogated by any ordinary legislation, nor can it be circumscribed or whittled down by any consideration extraneous not to be found therein—for example, on the ground of mistake or omission, as a result of some event happening in the meantime, has, by reason of other evidence or procedure ripened into a legal plea open to be raised by the adversary. It is for this reason, therefore, that in a case (i) where there has been a judicial determination of the correctness of the valuation given in the plaint it attracts the principle of res judicata. A I R 1961 Mad 511 (FB) and (1963) 29 Cut L T 28, Rel. on.; (ii) where the petitioner has already obtained an advantage of lower forum whether in the matter of institution of suit or of an appeal on the basis of lower valuation and is thereby hit by the principle of approbation and reprobation, he cannot be permitted to turn round and raise the valuation for the purpose of bringing the case within the specified amount required for appeal to the Supreme Court. (1873) 1 Ind App 84 (PC), Rel. on. But these are exceptions to the general rule. Consequently in a case where these exceptions do not arise for consideration, the general rule shall have its unrestricted application. As such a mere misstatement as to valuation either in the plaint or in the memorandum of appeal cannot and should not operate as a bar to the consideration of any application made for re-determination of the value of the subject-matter, as contemplated under Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution. (2) The 'value of the subject-matter as contemplated under Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution is the real or market-value. It is not any value which may have been stated in the plaint for the requirements of the Court-fees Act or Suits Valuation Act. Each case therefore, has to be judged on its own facts so as to find out whether the value of the subject-matter as given in the plaint is the real or market-value or is based on considerations quite independent of and without regard to, the real or market-value If, upon investigation, it is found that the value as given in the plaint is the real or market value as contemplated in law, the matter ends there and no further enquiry is called for. But where it is found that the value of the subject-matter as given in the plaint is not the real or market-value, an investigation is called for to determine the real or market-value of the subject-matter, both in the Court of first instance as well as in the Court of appeal — as contemplated by sub-clause (a) of the Art. 133 (1) – unless the case is one which is covered by any of the two exceptions mentioned above. ——Art. 133 (1) (a) and (b)—Applicability — Suit by trustees for declaration that temple and its properties were private and not public endowment—Plaint giving valuation of Rs. 5,000 for jurisdiction only as fixed Court fee was payable — Suit decreed by trial Court–Reversal of decree—Leave to appeal under Art. 133 (1) with application under O. 45, R. 5 for determining real value of subject-matter of dispute — Clause (a) and not Cl. (b) of Art. 133 (1) applies– Trial Court directed to determine value of beneficiary interest of plaintiff.

The petitioners, who were the marfatdars of a debottar estate and temple brought a suit under S 64 (3) Orissa Hindu Religious Endowments Act (4 of 1939) to set aside the decision of the Endowments Commissioner under S. 64 (1) and for a declaration that the temple and its estate was a private or family endowment. The suit was decreed on contest but the decision was reversed in appeal. The petitioners applied under Art. 133 (1) (a) and Ss. 109, 110, Civil P. C. for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. They also filed an application under O. 45 R. 5, Civil P. C. for a reference to the trial Court for the determination of the value of the subject-matter of suit. The suit was filed with a fixed Court fee of Rs. 22 as required by law and the valuation of suit for purposes of jurisdiction was stated to be Rs. 5,000. It was claimed by the pet tioners that the real value of the subject-matter in dispute was more than Rs. 20,000 and that, therefore, they were entitled as of right to certificate for leave to appeal either under Cl. (a) or Cl. (b) of Art. 133 (1).

Held, (i) that the application for determination of the value of the subject-matter should be allowed. What had to be determined for the purpose of valuation under sub-cl. (a) of Cl. (1) of Art. 133 was the real or market-value of the beneficiary interest which the plaintiffs claimed to have in the debottar property and the temple. In law 'the value of the action' must mean the value to the plaintiff. (1907) 17 Mad L J 518, Rel on. Since according to the plaintiffs it was the value of the Debottar-Estate that would give the measure of detriment they would be put to, in case the trust was held to be a public trust, what has to be determined for the purpose of valuation under sub-clause (a) of Art. 133 (1) was the real or market-value of the Debottar property on the date of institution of the suit and, thereafter, with reference to the date when the judgment sought to be appealed against was delivered ; (ii) that the mere office of trusteeship may be incapable of valuation. But the beneficiary interest of the family which the plaintiffs claimed to have in debottar property was not incapable of valuation. A I R 1962 Orissa 90, Dist. ; (iii) that the subject-matter in dispute being only the beneficiary interest of the petitioners in the Debottar Estate and there being no claim made respecting any property other than that subject-matter, Art. 133 (1) (b) was not attracted. Under Art. 133 (1) (b) the property respecting which the claim or question arises, must be property in addition to or other than the subject-matter of the dispute. If, in a proposed appeal, there is no claim or question raised respecting property other than the subject matter, clause (a) will apply ; if there is involved in the appeal a claim or question respecting property of an amount or value not less than Rs. 20,000 in addition to or other than the subject-matter of dispute, clause (b) will apply. A I R 1965 S C 1440, Rel. on. ——Art. 133 — Leave to appeal to Supreme Court — Valuation for purposes of appeal — Applicant offering to show that valuation was well above Rs. 20,000/. — Value already determined at a lesser amount by trial Court on contest—Held principle of res judicata applied.

The plaintiff brought a suit for declaration of title and permanent injunction against the defendants — He gave a low valuation for the purpose of paying low court-fee and the entire litigation proceeded on that basis. His valuation was challenged by the defendants in their written statement. The Stamp Reporter pointed out that the valuation was low. The Court gave notice to both parties and ultimately fixed the valuation at Rs. 7,500/. The plaintiff himself understood this order to mean that the valuation of the suit lands was fixed at Rs. 7,500/- and paid court fee accordingly. In an application by the plaintiff under Art. 133 of the Constitution for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court he wanted that the High Court should direct the lower Court to hold an enquiry to ascertain the valuation of the subject-matter in dispute, both in the Court of first instance and in appeal with a view to enable him to show that the valuation is well above the limit of Rs. 20,000/- fixed in Art. 133 of the Constitution.

Held that there was already a decision by the lower Court on the question of valuation of the suit lands in the presence of the parties on contest, who accepted the same, and consequently the principle of res judicata would apply. The plaintiff would not therefore be permitted now to say that the valuation of the property in dispute was in excess of Rs. 20,000/- as to entitle him to ask for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. 11 (e). Subject matter incapable of pecuniary valuation.

——Art. 133 (1) — Value of subject-matter — Question of joint mutavalliship — subject-matter is incapable of pecuniary valuation– Question relates to office and not to wakf properties — Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 110 and 109 (c).

Whenever a right for joint mutavalliship or joint trusteeship is involved in a suit, the pecuniary value of it would be incapable of valuation. In such a case though the properties involved are worth more than Rs. 20,000/-, the question involved viz. the question of mutavalliship, relates only to the office and not to the properties. That being so, the petition for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court is not maintainable as it does not satisfy the requirements of Art. 133 (1) (a), (b) or (c) of the Constitution. The amount or value of the subject matter still in dispute on appeal would be determined by the effect of the judgment appealed from as to what extent, having regard to the reliefs claimed by the plaintiff the appellant defendant is prejudiced or has suffered detriment, on the date of the judgment. The petitioner in assessing the value of the subject matter still in dispute on appeal cannot take into account that portion of the subject matter in relation to which he has suffered no prejudice. ——Art. 133 (1) (a) — Valuation of proposed appeal in a proceeding started before Rent.Control for standardization of rent.

The contractual rent between the landlord of a premise and his tenant was Rs. 350 per month. On an application by the tenant his rent was reduced on standardization to Rs. 143 12-0 Thus the difference between the two amounts was Rs. 206-4-0, that being the measure of the owner's monthly loss. If the annual loss was computed on the basis of monthly loss and such loss capitalised on the basis of twenty years' purchase the resultant figure would exceed the limit of Rs. 20,000. In an application made by the landlord under Art. 133 (1) to the High Court for a certificate for the purpose of going up to the Supreme Court :

Held, that even if in certain circumstances it might in future be possible for the landlord to apply for a revision of the rent, which revision might result in his favour, yet it would not be right to take notice of uncertainties and refuse to proceed on the basis of the existing facts and that the proposed appeal satisfied the valuation test as given in Art. 133 (1) (a). ——Art. 133—Valuation of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal (C. P. Code (1908), S. 110.)

What both the Constitution and Code of Civil Procedure contemplate is the value of the subject-matter of the dispute or, in other words, the value of the proposed appeals. There is no such thing as the value of an application, nor is the requirement of procedure, if not also of law, is satisfied by merely saying that the valuation exceeds the statutory limit. It is always necessary that in the body of the petition the petitioner should say how he reaches the valuation which he has put at the top of the petition and the valuation must be always an exact figure and not merely that it is above a certain sum. 57 Cal W N 933 : AIR 1954 Cal 289 (291) (Pt A) (Pr 10) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) — "Amount or value of subject-matter in appeal"—(C. P. Code (1908), S. 110).

The expression "amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute" in Art. 133 (1) does not mean the amount or value of the subject-matter of all disputes between the parties. The true scope of the expression is indicated by the words "on appeal" which follow, and therefore the true test is, what is really in stake in the appeal itself.

Where the plaintiff is asking for an immediate payment of such amount as may be found due to him on an account being taken and under the decree sought to be appealed from such amount is Rupees 31,443-15-6 and the defendant's case is that he is not liable to render accounts at all and therefore he is not liable to make any cash payment to the plaintiff, the subject-matter of the dispute in the proposed appeal is the whole sum of Rs. 31,443 15-6 and that being so, cl. (a) of Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution is satisfied. AIR 1953 Cal 509 (512) (Pr 12) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (a)—Requirement of—Value of subject-matter of dispute on appeal need not be more than Rs. 20,000 on date of suit.

Article 133 (1) (a) does not require that the value of the subject-matter of the dispute on appeal should have been more than Rs. 20,000, on the date of the suit in the Court of first instance. The requirements of the sub-clause will be satisfied if the value of the subject-matter of the dispute in the Court of first instance was over Rs. 20,000 and the value of the subject matter of the dispute on appeal is more than Rs. 20,000. (a) Illustrative cases.

13. Clause (1) (b) — General.

● ——Art. 133 (1) (a) and (b)—Conditions attracting application of two sub-clauses.

To attract the application of Art. 133 (1) (b) it is essential that there must be, besides other conditions, a judgment involving directly or indirectly some claim or question respecting property of an amount or value not less than Rs. 20,000. The variation in the language used in Cls (a) and (b) of Art. 133 (1) pointedly highlights the conditions which attract the application of the two clauses. Under Cl. (a) what is decisive is the amount or value of the subject-matter in the Court of first instance and 'still in dispute' in appeal to the Supreme Court, under Cl. (b) it is the amount or value of the property respecting which a claim or question is involved in the judgment sought to be appealed from. The expression 'property' is not defined in the C. P. Code but having regard to the use of the expression 'amount' it would apparently include money. But the property respecting which the claim or question arises must be property in addition to or other than the subject-matter of the dispute. If in a proposed appeal there is no claim or question raised respecting property other than the subject-matter, Cl. (a) will apply; if there is involved in the appeal a claim or question respecting property of an amount or value not less than Rs. 20,000 in addition to or other than the subject-matter of the dispute Cl. (b) will apply. It cannot be said that a judgment dealing with a claim to money alleged to be due from an agent for price of property belonging to the principal sold by the agent either directly or indirectly involves a claim or question respecting property which is sold. Chittarmal v. Shah Pannalal Chandulal, (1965) 1 S C W R 692 : AIR 1965 S C 1440 (1441, 1442) (Prs 5, 6).

——Art. 133 (1) (b)—Applicability—Of the like amount or value' Expression qualifies 'property' —(Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110).

The phrase "of the like amount or value" coming immediately after the word property "in Art. 133 (1) (b) qualifies the said word. If the property to which claim or question relates is worth Rs. 20,000 the requirements of this sub clause are satisfied. While under sub-Cl. (a) it is the "subject-matter of the dispute" which should be worth Rs 20,000 or more, it is the "property" under sub-Cl. (b) which is to be of that value. The word "property" does not necessarily mean the "subject-matter of the dispute". It has been interpreted to mean some property which may be other than the subject-matter of the dispute which may be affected by the decision in the suit.

Held on facts, that although the right of tenancy which the applicant claims may be worth less than Rs. 20,000 he is certainly laying claim to possession over the building of the cinema house, which was worth considerably more than Rs. 20,000. Therefore, the case does involve directly a claim in respect of property worth Rs. 20,000 and it satisfies the requirements, of sub Cl. (b) of Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution. ——Art. 133 (1) (b)—Involves claim or question affecting property of the value of Rs. 20,000 or upwards—Interpretation of.

The word property in Art. 133 (1) (b) of the Constitution of India has reference to property other than the property which is the subject matter in dispute. Therefore, even if the claim for ejectment may be of the value which is less than Rs. 20,000 the test laid down in Art. 133 (1) (b) is satisfied, if the property from which the tenant is sought to be ejected is of the value of Rs. 20,000 or upwards. ——Art. 133 (1) cl. (b)—Applicability—Decision not affecting claim or property other than claim or property in dispute—Grant of leave.

In order to come under Cl. (b) it is necessary for the petitioner to prove that the decision complained of affects directly or indirecly some claim or question respecting property which is not the subject-matter of the suit. Unless the decision affects a claim or property other than the claim or property in dispute, clause (b) does not come into operation. Otherwise, the provisions of cl. (a) of Art. 133 (1) would be rendered altogether nugatory. AIR 1916 Mad 985 and 50 Cal W N 255 and AIR 1925 P C 159, Rel. on. AIR 1961 Cal 537 (539) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (b)—Grant of certificate—Valuation —Value of claim involved and and not value of property is the determining factor.

The petitioner will be entitled to obtain a certificate, under clause (b) of Art. 133 (1), if he can show that the order of Court involves, directly or indirectly, some claim or question, respecting property, additional to, or other than, the actual subject-matter, in dispute, and that the value of such claim or question is Rs. 20,000 or more. It is the value of the claim or question, involved, in the decree or order, and not only the value of the property, which is the determining factor, under clause (b).

Where as a result of the order of the High Court the petitioner had to remove the unauthorized structures and to restore possession of the portion encroached upon, to the respondent.

Held, that the mere fact that the building of the petitioner was worth Rs 20,000 could not lead to the inference that he would suffer detriment to the extent of that amount, by the order of the High Court. As the petitioner had failed to prove that the value of the claim involved, was Rs. 20,000 or more, he was not entitled to get a certificate under clause (b). AIR 1965 Him Pra 23 (24, 25) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

——Art. 133 (1) (b)—Applicability—Right of appeal —If dependant on value of property in dispute.

Before sub-clause (b) of Art. 133 (1) can come into play the judgment, decree or final order must involve a claim or question respecting property additional to the subject-matter in dispute and secondly, the total amount or value of the claim or question respecting such other property and of the subject-matter in dispute must be not less than Rs. 20,000. Where the value of the tenancy rights claimed in the disputed property is less than Rs. 20,000, the petitioner will have no right to file an appeal to the Supreme Court by virtue of Art. 133 (1) (b), although the value of the property in dispule was more than Rs. 20,000 A I R 1956 All 348, Not foll.; A I R 1941 Oudh 407 and AIR 1942 Oudh 174 and A I R 1923 Lah 286 (2) and AIR 1918 Mad 632 and AIR 1934 Rang 292 and A IR 1918 Mad 985; AIR 1930 P C 44 Rel. on. AIR 1961 Him Pra 27 (29, 30) (Pt A) (Prs 15, 16).

——Art. 133 (1) (a) and (b), Preamble — Construction Principle of—Certificate under Art. 133 (1) (b) when cannot be granted—(Interpretation of Statutes) —(C. P. Code (1908), Pre., Ss. 109, 110).

The accepted principle of construing statutes is that two provisions regulating the same subject should be construed to be consistent with each other. And if this be true of an ordinary statute, it is equally true of such a ruling instrument as the Constitution.

While in Art. 133 (1) (a) the words "the amount or value of the subject-matter of the dispute" are used in Cl. (b) the words used are "involves directly or indirectly some claim or question respecting property of the like amount or value." If the Courts are to construe the words "involves directly or indirectly" in Art. 133 (1) (b) as authorising appeal in cases where the subject-matter of dispute in the Court of the first instance is less than Rs. 20,000 the words "the amount or value of the subject-matter of the dispute in the Court of first instance" in Art. 133 (1) (a) would become nugatory.

Such a construction of the Constitution cannot be accepted and therefore the proper interpretation of the two clauses is that the words "involves directly or indirectly" in Art. 133 (1) (b) should not be read as including the actual subject-matters in dispute in cases, unless they cannot be valued at all.

Where it is not urged that there is any other matter which cannot be assessed in money or it affects some other property whose valuation is not less than Rs. 20,000, indeed the application for leave did not ask for leave on the latter ground, the argument that the applicant should be given a certificate under Art. 133 (1) (b) because of the valuation of the subject-matter in appeal is not less than Rs. 20,000 even though the valuation may not have been in the Court of the first instance, fails.

Held, however, that the value of the properties at the time of the institution of the suit was not less than Rs. 20,000 and consequently the applicants were entitled to a certificate under Art. 133 (1) (a). Case law discussed. ILR (1955) Hyd 478 : AIR 1955 Hyd 209 (210, 211) (Prs 8, 10) (DB).

C. (1908), S. 110).

Held, on facts that the suit was not at all capable of precise valuation from the pecuniary point of view and therefore, such valuation as the plaintiffs put upon it was plainly notional rather than real. The mere circumstances that the plaintiffs valued their suit for jurisdictional purposes at the sum of Rs. 10,000 should not be allowed to stand in the way of their showing that the suit directly or indirectly affected the property of the value of Rs. 20,000 or over. It was case of this character where the subject matter of dispute was not a sum of money or a specific price of property but was something which was incapable of a precise or arithmetical valuation and which would therefore fall outside the ambit of cl. (1) (a) of Art. 133, that Cl. (b) thereof was intended pre-eminently to apply. Where in such cases the applicant succeeds in showing that the judgment of the High Court would affect directly or indirectly some claim of question relating to property of the requisite value, namely, Rs. 20,000 or over, he would be entitled to obtain leave as a matter of right independently of clause (a) or clause (c) provided of course where the judgment of the High Court is one of affirmance with that of the Court below, the High Court further certifies that the appeal involves some substantial question of law. 1956 Raj L W 519 : I L R (1956) 6 Raj 531 : A I R 1956 Raj 169 (170, 171) (Pt B) (Pr 6) (DB).

The suit property was an estate of one G of the value of Rs. 68,000. He executed a will in and by which he provided, after creating a series of life estates, that the estate should go over to the puthra pouthra santhathies of his daughter R or her heirs or to her husband S and his santhathi. R adopted the second defendant. Under the will he was entitled to inherit the estate of G as puthra pouthra santhathi of R or the santhathi of S. His succeeding to the estate of G entirely depended on the factum and validity of adoption. In suit by the plaintiffs, reversioners of G challenging adoption and alienation, the trial Court and the High Court in appeal held that there was a factum of adoption, but there was difference of opinion in regard to the validity of adoption. In application by the plaintiffs for leave to appeal to Supreme Court :

Held, that if the required permission was not granted to the plaintiffs they would stand to lose estate worth about Rs. 68,000. The application came within the provisions of Art. 133 (1) (b) of the Constitution. Further, if the application was not granted the claim or question respecting the property involved in judgment would become res judicata or have the effect of estopping the plaintiffs from claiming the rights or agitating the same question in respect of such property in future litigations. ——Art. 133—Applicability of Cls. (b) and (c).

A dispute arose between an assessee and the Income-tax department, not as regards the amount assessed as payable by the assessee but, as to whether the department could collect it immediately treating the assessee as a defaulter or, should postpone the collection because the assessee was entitled to the benefit of the bar under the proviso to S. 45, Income-tax Act. The assessee claimed there was a restriction by the law obtaining in Ceylon under which he was not allowed to remit his foreign income into the taxable territory during the relevant period, and hence the department had no jurisdiction to treat him as a defaulter. But as it was admitted before the High Court that the restriction imposed by the Government of Ceylon was not absolute, but that remittances could be made if a proper case was made out for such remittances the High Court passed an order allowing an opportunity to the assessee to prove to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Income-tax that he made bona fide efforts to remit the foreign income into the taxable territory and that notwithstanding such efforts he was not successful, and asked the department to stay its hand for a period of two months for that purpose.

Held, (1) that clause (1) (b) had no application to the case, as there was no dispute directly or indirectly regarding the amount of the tax which the assessee was bound to pay and that the question whether the tax should be paid immediately or should be postponed to a future date was not one that was capable of valuation. —Art. 133 — Applicability—Subject-matter of dispute — Claim respecting property — Certificate of fitness.

In execution of a decree the petitioners applied to the trial Court for delivery of possession of the leased property after the expiry of the period fixed in the decree The executing Court, without notice to the respondent, ordered delivery and this was duly effected on 22nd July 1951. The respondent thereupon filed a petition for setting aside the ex parte order and, as a consequence to restore possession of the property along with some movables which were represented to have been fixed by him for better enjoyment of the leased premises. He also contended in that petition that the executing Court had no jurisdiction to order delivery of possession of the property without the permission of Rent Controller, under the House Rent Control Order, for the reason that the decree actually passed in the original suit partook of the nature of eviction of a tenant by the landlords. That petition was dismissed by the trial Court, and on appeal by the respondent the High Court upheld the contention of the judgment-debtor. It was against that order that the petitioners sought a certificate to appeal to the Supreme Court.

Held, (1) that the movables were not the subject-matter of dispute under Cl. (1) (a) of the Article.

(2) Under Cl. (1) (b) it is the 'rights and claims' which should be worth Rs. 20,000 and not merely the property to which the rights and claims relate. The case did not fall under Cl. (b) of Art. 133, since the claim or question involved was not shown to be worth more than Rs. 20,000. The controversy about the lease of the immovable property was finally set at rest by an affirming judgment of the High Court in regular appeal holding that the judgment-debtor should deliver the property after 1st May, 1951. All that the judgment-debtor claimed was that the decree for eviction could not be enforced by a civil Court without the express permission of the House Rent Controller. The final order sought to be appealed from did not involve a dispute relating to the property of the value of Rs. 20,000 or more.

(3) It was not a case fit for appeal under Cl. (c) of Art. 133 on the ground that the decision involved a substantial point of law touching the interpretation of the Constitution itself. No conflict did exist on 22nd July 1951 between the C. P. Code and T. P. Act and the House Rent Control Order. Section 4 C. P. Code gives a local Act, local validity and the special procedure therein prescribed validity within its own sphere the result being that the special procedure prescribed in the House Rent Control Order should be followed in preference to the provision in the C. P. Code. The other Act, viz., the Central T. P. Act could not be deemed to have been in force in the State in or about July, 1951, when the execution proceedings involved in the dispute took place. Even otherwise the case was not of sufficient private importance to both the parties in the sense in which it was generally understood so as to deserve consideration on that ground. No other case of the nature giving rise to conflict had arisen during the short interval between 1st April, 1951 and 16th August, 1951 of the alleged repugnancy of the local law before it received the assent of the President. Where the subject-matter in dispute is only the petitioner's beneficial interest in the Debottor Estate and there is no claim made respecting any property other than that subject-matter Art. 133 (1) (b) is not attracted. Under Art. 133 (1) (b) the property respecting which the claim or question arises must be property in addition to or other than the subject-matter of the dispute. If in a proposed appeal there is no claim or question raised respecting property other than the subject-matter cl. (a) will apply. The words 'like amount or value' in Art. 133 (1) (b) qualify not merely the word 'property' occurring immediately before them, but the entire expression 'some claim or question respecting property' and the valuation must be determined with reference to the property right of the appellant in respect of which prejudice has been caused to him by the judgment appealed against. Held, that the detriment to the plaintiff arising out of the judgment of the High Court was the deprivation of his right to actual occupation of the disputed house for a period of five years from the date of commencement of Orissa Act 31 of 1958. It was open to the landlord, during the lifetime of the Act, to take steps under the Act for evicting the tenant, and even if the total valuation be calculated on the basis of the income by way of rent for a period of nine years, from 1955 to 1963, it would be far below the limit of Rs. 20,000 fixed in sub-cl. Where a writ application (other than Habeas Corpus) challenging the validity of the Rajasthan Land Reforms and Resumption of Jagirs Act, 1952, was with respect to a jagir, the annual income of which was well over Rs. 20,000:

Held that while there may be doubt as to the valuation of the subject-matter of the dispute in the High Court, for the dispute was about the validity of the Act and it may not be possible to value the subject-matter of the dispute in money, there is no doubt that the judgment of the High Court involved directly or indirectly a question respecting property of the value of Rs. 20,000 and over. ●——Art. 133—Application for leave to High Court —Construction. See Supreme Court Rules (1950), O. 13, R. 2. AIR 1964 S C 215.

●——Arts. 133 (1) (c) and 134 (1) (c) — "Fit one for appeal"—Certificate of fitness for appeal—Exercise of discretion.

The Supreme Court has general powers of judicial superintendence over all Courts in India and is the ultimate interpreter and guardian of the Constitution. It has a duty to see that its provisions are faithfully observed and, where necessary, to expound them. In the case of clause (c) both of Art. 133 (1) and Art. 134 (1), the only condition is the discretion of the High Court but the discretion is a judicial one and must be judicially exercised along the well-established lines which govern these matters. If it is properly exercised on well-established and proper lines, then there would be no interference except on very strong grounds. But if, on the face of the order, it is apparent that the Court has misdirected itself and considered that its discretion was fettered when it was not, or that it had none, then the superior Court must either remit the case or exercise the discretion itself. State of Uttar Pradesh, 1954 Mad W N 741 : (1954) 2 Mad L J 122 : 1954 S C J 570 : 1954 All W R 547 : 1954 All L J 438 : 1954 S C A 642 : 1955 S C R 238 : 1954 Cri L J 1167 : AIR 1954 S C 457 (459) (Pt B) (Pr 6).

——Art. 133 (1) (c) — Certificate of fitness — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109).

The mere fact that the question involved is of considerable public importance is not sufficient to warrant the granting of a certificate under Art. 133 (1) (c) when there is no substantial question of law involved. AIR 1956 Ajmer 70 (71) (Pt C) (Pr 4).

——Art. 133 (1) (c) — House destroyed by fire — Ground floor partly rebuilt only some of arches remaining intact utilized in reconstruction—Two entirely new floors added — Question whether new construction was "mere improvement or structural alteration" for fixing standard rent — Both Courts deciding construction to be mere improvement and fixing rent accordingly — Recurring loss to applicant, though amount involved small — Certificate granted under Art. 133 (1) (c). 1953 A M L J 8 : AIR 1958 Ajmer 10 (11) (Prs 4, 7).

C.—Temporary injunction under O. 39, R. 1 granted against defendant during pendency of suit — Injunction not unjustified in the circumstances — Leave to appeal to Supreme Court against order granting injunction — Case held not fit one for appeal under Art. 133 (1) (c) — Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109. AIR 1950 Ajmer 58 (59) (Prs 1, 4).

——Art. 133 (1)— Certificate of fitness — Decision of High Court in writ proceeding holding that order of reversion of petitioner was invalid on basis of a Railway Board's circular—Mere fact that case involves interpretation of Railway Circular which affects a large number of persons does not entitle petitioner to a certificate unless he is further able to show that some common principle of law governing such cases is involved. I L R (1964) 1 All 397 : AIR 1964 All 125 (126, 127) (Pt C) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Art. 133—Amount involved small — (C. P. Code (1908) S. 109).

If the amount involved in the appeal is small it would be oppressive if the Court granted leave and involved the respondent in the cost of contesting the case in the Supreme Court. 4 Moo Ind App 353 (PC), Foll. 1957 All L J 880 : 1957 All W R (H C) 880 : AIR 1958 All 322 (Pr 3) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (c)—"Certify"—Meaning of.

The term certify used in Art. 133 is a strong term. The High Court must be convinced of the substantiality of the point of the fitness of the case before it can certify under Art. 133. AIR 1959 Andh Pra 359 (360) (Pt C) (Pr 2) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) — Scope — Grant of certificate — Discretion of High Court.

No doubt, sub-clauses (a) and (b) of clause (1) of Art. 133 indicate cases where the party becomes entitled to leave to appeal as of right when certain facts and conditions are found to exist but the same cannot be said of sub-clause (c) for it is a case where the grant of certificate depends mainly on the discretion of the High Court which is to be exercised judicially. Unless the Court is satisfied that the case involves matters or questions of importance and considerable difficulty which ought to be finally decided by the highest Court of the land the High Court would withhold its land from granting a certificate. The term 'certificate' used in the article is a strong term requiring the High Court to be satisfied of the fitness of the case for an appeal to the highest Court of the land. 1959 Andh L T 61.

——Art. 133 (1) (c)—Grant of leave should be dealt with on facts and circumstances of case.

The question of grant of leave to appeal to the Supreme Court must be dealt with on the facts and circumstances of each case. It is neither possible nor desirable to crystallise the rules relating to the exercise of the Court's discretion in the matter under Art. 133 (1) (c). A I R 1944 F C 23, Foll. See Industrial Disputes (Appellate Tribunal) Act (1950), S. 7. A I R 1954 Bom 342 (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) — Civil P. C. (1908), S. 100 — Question of fitness has no connection whatever with question of 'substantive question of law' — Art. 133 cannot be compared with S. 100, Civil P. C. ('64) 68 Cal W N 379.

——Art. 133 (1) — Applicability — Conditions for invoking Art. 133 (1) — Circumstance that case has not been before two Courts including High Court, no bar.

In order that Art. 133 (1) may be invoked it is not necessary that there should be two Courts, namely the Court of first instance and a Court sitting on appeal which would be the High Court. Sub-clauses (a), (b) and (c) are clearly disjunctive and the words 'and where the judgment, decree or final order appealed from affirms a decision of the Court immediately below in any case other than a case referred to in sub-cl. (c)' go to show that where the High Court certifies under sub-cl. (c) that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court, the other considerations will not apply. The High Court is competent to grant a certificate under any of the sub-clauses (a), (b) and (c) and the effect of the portion quoted is that where the High Court certifies under clause (a) or (b) in a matter where the judgment, decree or final order in appeal is of an affirmative nature, the appeal involves some substantial question of law. A case may be fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court quite apart from the question as to whether it involves a substantial question of law. 67 Cal W N 743 : A I R 1963 Cal 433 (437, 438) (Pt B) (Pr 15) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (c) — For applicability there need not have been Court of first instance—Judgment of Revenue Board affirmed by High Court—Certificate can be granted.

The whole object of incorporating the paragraph after cl. (c) in Art. 133 (1) is to provide that it is only in cases where the decision of the Court immediately below is affirmed by any judgment, decree or final order or a High Court in a civil proceeding, that it is necessary for the High Court to further certify in addition to the certificates as to valuation test that the appeal involves some substantial questions of law. This paragraph further makes it abundantly clear that it has no application to a case coming under cl. (c) of Art. 133 (1). The words 'in any case other than a case referred to in sub-cl. (c)' make that clear. For the purpose of attracting the provisions of Art. 133 (1) (c) it is not a condition precedent to the applicability of that clause that there has to be a Court of first instance in the case of a regular Court before the provisions contained in Art. 133 (1) (c) can be availed of or invoked. If the judgment of the High Court affirms the decision of the Revenue Board certificate can be granted under Art. 133 (1) (c). A I R 1955 S C 830, Rel. on. ——Art. 133 — Certificate of fitness — Principles of natural justice — Supersession of Municipal Committee under S. 238, Punjab Municipal Act, without notice—Validity—Fitness of case for appeal—(Municipalities—(Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109).

The Punjab Municipal Act, as it stands, while making it obligatory for the Government under S. 16 to give prior notice to a member before removing him has not made a similar provision in the case of the supersession of the entire Committee under S. 238 of the Act. This may be a lacuna in the law, which obviously, can be remedied only by the Legislature. But this cannot make the case a fit one for appeal. The Court has to administer the law as it stands and it is not possible to go beyond the scope of the statute by having recourse to notions of principles of natural justice. ——Arts. 133 and 226 — Remedy by suit—Dismissal of application under Art. 226 — Expensiveness of remedy—Ground for leave to appeal.

Where a writ petition under Art. 226 is disposed of summarily on the ground that the matter involved can be gone into only in a regular suit after recording the evidence of the parties, the fact that a regular suit would mean considerable expenditure of money would not entitle a petition for leave to appeal to succeed. ● ——Art. 133 (1) — "An appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court"—(Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109).

The expression "an appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court" as used in S. 109, Civil P. C. or in Art. 133 of the Constitution of India means in the context of those provisions no more than this; that if a person has obtained the requisite certificate, he can go to the Supreme Court in appeal and the Supreme Court shall have jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. A distinction has to be drawn between "the power of appeal to the Supreme Court" and "the authority of the High Court to grant leave to do so". That expression has no reference at all to the grant or refusal of leave to appeal under those provisions. From the fact a person acquires a right of appeal to the Supreme Court after having obtained a certificate under sub-clause (c) of clause (1) of Art. 133 it cannot reasonably be inferred that he is entitled to claim that leave to appeal under this sub clause must be given to him as a matter of right. Under O. 13 of the Original Side Rules of the Madras High Court an application by Originating Summons can be made for construction of a trust deed without an administration of the trust. The determination in the application is "final" so far as the Court is concerned and will be binding on the parties, nothing is left for determination in the Originating Summons. A decree follows the judgment. The judgment will be one coming under Art. 133 of the Constitution of India. The difference between Art. 133 (1) (a) and (b) on the one hand and Art. 133 (1) (c) on the other is fairly obvious. A certificate under sub-cls. (a) and (b) of Art. 133 (1) may be obtained as of right if the conditions specified therein are fulfilled. But the granting of a certificate under Cl. Although the granting of a writ under Art. 226 of the Constitution is a matter of discretion with the High Court, it does not follow that the matter of the exercise of discretion is not a fit case for appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 133. Every discretional power is exercised judicially and it cannot be held that no leave can be granted for appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 133, where the High Court has declined to exercise its discretionary power. In writ petition by certain panchas of a Gram Panchayat against their removal from office under S. 102 (2) of the Punjab Gram Panchayat Act, the single Judge found that the orders were made by the Director of Panchayats without issuing any show cause notice to those panchas and without any enquiry worth the name and that those orders were glaringly defective. In the Letters Patent Appeal therefrom, the Government took up the position that an enquiry was actually made by the appropriate authority. When a case involves the decision of a substantial question of law and when that decision is likely to affect a large number of persons the High Court would not be justified in declining to grant a certificate of fitness on the ground only that some expenditure is likely to be incurred by the respondent. ■ ——Arts. 133 (1) (c), 132 (1)—'Civil proceeding' — Proceeding taken for recovery of tax is civil proceeding —Income-tax proceeding—Writ petition—High Court can grant certificate for appeal to Supreme Court.

Proceedings before the High Court on a petition under Art. 226, in the matter of recovery of Income-tax are 'civil proceedings' within the meaning of Art. 133 (1) (c) and the High Court has power to issue the certificate under Art. 133 (1) (c). The power to issue a certificate under Art. 133 may be exercised only in respect of a judgment, decree or final order of a High Court in a civil proceeding and the order passed by the High Court disposing of the petition filed by the assessee for the issue of a writ under Art. 226 is a judgment. If rights of the tax payer are infringed in a manner not warranted by the statute a proceeding to obtain relief whether it is from the tribunal set up by the taxing statute, or from the civil Court would be regarded as a civil proceeding. A civil proceeding is one in which a person seeks to enforce by appropriate relief the alleged infringement of his civil rights against another person or the State, and which if the claim is proved would result in the declaration, express or implied of the right claimed and relief such as payment of debt, damages, compensation, delivery of specific property, enforcement of personal rights, determination of status etc. There is under the Constitution a right of appeal to the Supreme Court with special leave from the adjudications of all Courts and tribunals (except tribunals constituted by or under laws relating to Armed Forces). The infringement of civil right may be in purported enforcement of a taxing statute. Section 66 A (2) of the Income Tax Act 1961 under which an appeal lies to the Supreme Court from any judgment delivered on a reference made under S. 256 of the Act in any case which the High Court certifies to be a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court is not an exception to that rule. Where a revenue authority seeks to levy tax or threatens action in purported exercise of powers conferred by an Act relating to revenue, the primary impact of such an act or threat is on the civil rights of the party aggrieved and when relief is claimed in that behalf it is civil proceeding even if retief is claimed not in a suit but by resort to the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court under Art. 226. A proceeding taken for recovery of a tax is not "other proceeding" under Art. 132 (1) but such a proceeding is a civil proceeding within the meaning of Art. 132 (1). Narayan Row v. ● —Art. 133 — 'Judgment' — Questions of law referred to High Court under S. 108 (1) of Saurashtra Income-tax Ordinance — No certificate for leave under Art. 133 can be granted.

The questions of law which were referred for the decision of the High Court under S. 108 (1) of the Saurashtra Income-tax Ordinance were in the exercise of its advisory or consultative jurisdiction and the provisions of the Constitution in regard to the certificate for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court could not therefore in terms apply, and no certificate for leave to appeal against the judgment of the High Court could be granted. Commr. of I.-T. v. Patel & Co., (1959) 37 ITR 412 : AIR 1960 S C 278 (286) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

——Art. 133 (1) (c)—Final order—(Tenancy Laws—Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act (2 of 1949), S. 28).

By reason of the form in which sub-clause (c) of Art. 133 (1) has been expressed, it is no longer possible for a High Court to grant leave to appeal to the Supreme Court in any case in which the order sought to be appealed from is not a final order.

The original decree for ejectment was passed before the Thika Tenancy Act came into force. After the enactment of the Act, the tenant made an application under S. 28 for a rescission of the decree and the Munsif, dealing with the application by reference to the definition of 'thika tenant' as it then stood, held that the tenant was not a thika tenant at all. In revision the High Court held, in view of the amendments which had in the meantime came into force, that the tenant was a thika tenant and remanded the case.

Held, that the order of remand was not a final order and that therefore no leave under Art. 133 (1) (c) could be granted. 58 Cal W N 774 : AIR 1955 Cal 98 (99, 100) (Prs 2, 6) (DB).

—— Art. 133 — Scope — Certificate under clause (c) cannot be given in respect of order which is not final—'Final order,' meaning of—Provisions in Civil P. C. (1882) considered—Scope and applicability of S. 109, Civil P. C (1908) — Purpose and scope of adaptation—(Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109).

Under clauses (a) and (b) of S. 595 of the Civil P. C. of 1882 an appeal lay to the Privy Council from 'any final decree' but under cl. (c), an appeal lay from 'any decree', if the High Court certified the case to be a fit one for appeal. The decrees appealable under each of the three clauses were separately described and in the case of those appealable under clause (c), no qualifying word was used. By S. 594, 'decree' was defined as including 'judgment and order'.

The effect of those several provisions was that under clauses (a) and (b) of S. 595, an appeal lay from any final decree, final judgment or final order, but in order to be appealable under cl. (c), a decree or judgment or order was not required to be final.

The Code of 1908 maintained the method of giving a description of the appealable orders in each clause and also the difference between the first two clauses and the third. Under cls. (a) and (b) of S. 109 of that Code, an appeal lay from 'any decree or final order', while under cl. (c), an appeal lay from 'any decree or order' provided the High Court certified the fitness of the case for appeal. The decree or order was not required to be final.

Article 133 of the Constitution has adopted a new description of appealable decrees and orders and a new method of applying it to the three clauses. The difference which is material is that for decrees or orders appealable under all the three clauses, a common expression, 'judgment decree or final order', has been used and it has been placed at the beginning of Art. 27 so as to govern all the clauses. The distinction which marked cl. (c) in this regard under the Codes of 1882 and 1908 has thus been removed. In order to be appealable under any of the clauses of Art. 133 (1), the decision must be a 'judgment, decree or final order' and not any the less so under (c).

The effect of the changes is this clauses (a) and (b) of Art. 133 (1) do not contemplate orders which do not terminate suit or proceeding. By use of words 'judgment, decree or final order' nothing more than 'decree or final order' has been included.

In view of the fact that the expression 'judgment, decree or final order' is applicable equally to all the three clauses of the Article, no separate argument under cl. (c) is possible. If the expression 'judgment, decree or final order' does not cover an order which is not final in the sense of not terminating the suit or proceeding, no certificate can now be given under cl. (c) for an appeal from such an order. The only scope for the application of cl. (c) which is now left is that, under it, a certificate can be given in cases where there is a decree or final order fit for appeal, but the valuation requirement is not satisfied.

The word 'judgment' was not intended to bring in orders, not final. The orders which do not terminate the suit or proceeding are not within the contemplation of that article. Case law referred.

Section 109 (c), Civil P. C., does not prevail over Art. 133 (1).

The second appellate Court agreed with the lower appellate Court on the question of title, but reversed its finding on the question of adverse possession and, in the view that the question of limitation had not been properly decided, remanded the case to the lower appellate Court for disposal after coming to a proper decision on the question. The orders of the Courts below were set aside. "If", the High Court directed, "the suit is not barred by limitation, the plaintiff's suit should be decreed for such damages as may be found admissible in law. If the suit is barred by limitation, the plaintiff's suit must be dismissed." The formal order drawn up on the judgment was an order of remand :

Held, that the order was not a final order.

Article 135 has no application to the right of appeal from decrees or orders in a suit. To such a matter Art. 133 applies.

It is impossible to hold that the jurisdiction contemplated by Art. 135 is a jurisdiction to entertain appeals from judgments, decrees or orders which fall outside Arts. 133 and 134 upon those Articles being applied.

Scope of Art. 135 considered.

Purpose and scope of adaptation of Ss. 109 and 110, Civil P. C., discussed. 58 Cal W N 31 : ILR (1955) 2 Cal 411 : AIR 1954 Cal 424 (426, 427, 429, 430, 431, 432) (Prs 2, 6, 7, 8, 20, 24, 25, 30, 32) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (c) — Certificate of fitness — (Civil P. C. 1908), S. 109 (c)).

Under cl. (c) the appeal depends solely on the discretion of the High Court. The discretion is, however, to be exercised on accepted principles of justice, equity and good conscience. The certificate of fitness under cl. (c) is intended to meet special cases. The question involved must be of some general or public or private importance. At the same time, if the question is one of private importance, it will not be a fit case under this clause if the points of law are not substantial. AIR 1957 All 28 (36, 37) (Pt J) (Pr 17) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (c) — Grant of leave to appeal — Question of law—Necessity of—Wide discretion of High Court.

Clause (c) of Art. 133 (1) does not require that there must of necessity be questions of law before leave to appeal may be allowed under this clause. A question of general importance may be one of fact and if it can be found to be of general importance it will fall within the purview of cl. (c) of Art. 133 and afford ample justification for allowing leave. Under cl. (c) the discretion of the Court is very wide. It is for the Court deciding the case to certify that the case is a fit one for appeal. The Constitution has designedly not placed any restrictions in express terms on the powers of the Court in this regard. ILR (1955) 7 Assam 399 : AIR 1956 Assam 1 (2) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (c) — Certificate of fitness — Point involved not of great public or private interest—Whether the fact that there is substantial question of law is sufficient to issue a certificate of fitness. See Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109 (c). AIR 1953 Assam 21.

——Art. 133 (1) (c)—Certificate of fitness for appeal —When can be granted — Tests for decision — Conflict of views on question of law settled by Privy Council decision — Certificate cannot be granted, though question is of public importance.

For a case to fall under Art. 133 (1) (c) the following requirements are necessary. The question of law involved must be one of great public importance. By this it is meant that the question must be capable of arising frequently in Courts and must involve many parties in litigation. The second test would be that the question involved affects the rights of parties substantially in the sense that apart from mere details regarding procedure in trials substantial property rights or other personal rights of citizens are involved.

But, merely because the question involved is held to be a question of great public importance, a litigant is not entitled as of right to a certificate under Art. 133 (1) (c) unless he further satisfies that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court. A litigant is entitled to a certificate if, for example, he is able to satisfy that the law on the subject is not well settled or that there are differing views of the various High Courts which need reconciliation by a pronouncement by the Supreme Court.

Where conflict of views on a question has been settled by a Privy Council decision, the certificate of fitness for appeal cannot be granted although the question involved is of great public importance and also affects the rights of parties substantially. 76 Mad L W 80 : (1963) 1 Mad L J 209 : AIR 1963 Mad 222 (224) (Pr 8) (DB).

—Art. 133 (1) (c) — Scope — Question of general importance but not of sufficient importance to respondent—Leave—Grant of.

It is in the discretion of the High Court to certify under Art. 133 (1) (c) that the case is a fit case for appeal. In such cases it is not improper to consider whether the question is equally important to both parties. After so considering the High Court may refuse to certify the fitness of the point in issue, though it appears to be one of general importance, if it is not of sufficient importance to the respondents to warrant the High Court in putting them to the expense of an appeal to the Supreme Court. AIR 1923 Mad 232 (FB), Foll. 1960 Mad W N 419 : 73 Mad L W 343 : AIR 1960 Mad 509 (510) (Prs 3, 4) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (c)—Certificate—Leave to appeal to Supreme Court—Grant of—Conditions for.

To justify the grant of a certificate of fitness for appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution the wording of which is in exactly the same terms as S. 109 (c), Civil P. C., the existence of a substantial question of law arising between the parties which might be sufficient for purposes of S. 110, Civil P. C., is not enough. The case must be one involving questions of public importance or one in which there may be important precedents governing numerous other cases or in which, while the dispute is not expressly measurable in money, it is of great public or private importance, by "private importance" being meant importance to both parties to the litigation and not only to one of them. ——Art. 133 (1) (c)—Certificate of fitness—When to be granted—(Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109).

The power vested on the High Courts under Art. 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution should be sparingly used to meet particularly hard cases. There may be cases where the point in dispute is not measurable in money, and yet the decision may have far-reaching results. But if there is no such point of great public or private importance, no certificate will be granted. 21 Cut L T 292 : I L R (1955) Cut 25 : A I R 1955 Orissa 71 (73) (Pt E) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (c) — Certificate of fitness — Question of private importance, meaning of.

A question of private importance means a question of private importance to both parties to the litigation and not only to one of them. Hence where the question involved is one of private importance to one of the parties to the litigation only, the case is not a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court. 28 Ind App 11 (PC) and A I R 1923 Mad 232, Foll. 58 Punj L R 361 : I L R (1956) Punj 1173 : A I R 1956 Punj 228 (230) (Pt C) (Pr 7) (DB).

The test to determine whether the case falls within Art. 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution of India is to see whether the point involved is of great public or private importance and is of such nature that a decision thereon might result in a precedent governing numerous cases.

The point whether before an Income-tax Officer can pass an order under S. 25 A of the Income-tax Act, there must be a physical division of the joint Hindu family property, is of such a nature that a decision thereon will result in a precedent governing numerous cases. Where the High Court in appeal declares the election of the petitioner to the State Legislative Assembly void, and the petitioner seeks leave to appeal to the Supreme Court to maintain his election on the ground that a question as to the true interpretation of S. 123 (7) (f) of the Representation of the People Act is involved, it is a fit case for grant of leave under Art. 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution.

Per Das, J.—There is no doubt that the final order passed by the High Court declaring the election of the petitioner to the State Assembly void is an order passed in a civil proceeding of the High Court. Accordingly, it satisfies the condition as laid down under Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution. In this view of the law, Art. 329 (b) would not oust the jurisdiction of the High Court under Art. 133. Where the question of law involved is the true interpretation of S. 123 (7) (f) of the Representation of the People Act, there is an important question of law involved in the case, and the petitioner is entitled to leave to appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 133 (1) (c).

Per Barman, J.—The petitioner, is proposing to file the appeal to the Supreme Court with a view to maintain his election. This is a distinguishing feature which is a complete answer to arguments on Art. 329 (b) operating as a bar. A I R 1955 S C 233, Rel. on.

——Art. 133 (1) (c)—Grant of leave under—Question if pleadings amount to admission.

Whether the pleadings as drafted amounted to an admission or not, cannot be said to be a point of any great public or private importance and is not the sort of question which would entitle the High Court to certify that as a fit case for appeal. It could not also be possibly said that the case involved a substantial point of law under Art. 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution. AIR 1951 Cal 409 (410) (Pt B) (Pr 9) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (c) — Certificate of fitness — [C. P. Code (1908), Ss. 109 and 115.]

High Court in revision holding that petitioner failed to show that the lower appellate Court failed to exercise jurisdiction vested in it by law—Revision dismissed — Basis for opening case on merits before High Court not made out—Case on merits not therefore decided by High Court — Application under Art. 133 (1) (c)—Question before Supreme Court would be whether lower appellate Court failed to exercise jurisdiction—This is not a point of great public or private importance — Question held did not also involve substantial question of law though the mere existence of a substantial question of law would not be sufficient to give the High Court jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal under Art. 133 (1) (c) on the ground of fitness of the case for appeal to the Supreme Court—Fitness of the case must be considered with regard to the point or points that will arise for determination before the Supreme Court, and not with regard to the point or points which will not arise there but which may arise in the High Court or in the Courts below if on a disagreement with the decision of the High Court the Supreme Court were to remand the case. AIR 1954 Him Pra 24 (25, 26) (Prs 7, 8).

——Art. 133—Certificate of fitness — Question as to provision of law governing a second appeal.

The question whether a second appeal is governed by one statute or another does not depend upon the construction of any of their provisions, but upon the value of the subject matter of the suit or the property directly involved in the appellate Court's decree. This again depends on the construction of the judgment of the appellate Court and that of J. C's Court in the second appeal. These may be questions of law, but not of such importance as to justify the grant of a certificate that it is a fit case for appeal to the Supreme Court. AIR 1951 Kutch 90 (91) (Pr 4).

——Art. 133 (1) (c)—Certificate of fitness— Question only of academic importance — Case not fit for appeal to Supreme Court.

A case is not fit for appeal to the Supreme Court if the question to be agitated is one which is only academic at the particular stage though it may assume importance at a subsequent stage. At the stage of adjudication of a person as insolvent neither the Insolvency Court nor the appellate Court is required to say what the effect of the adjudication order would be on the annulment proceedings and it is unnecessary for the transferees to take an appeal to the Supreme Court from the decision of the High Court in appeal on such a point at that stage. High Court will not grant a certificate of fitness under Art. 133 (1) (c) in such a case. 1961 Jab L J 102 : 1961 M P C 203 : 1961 M P L J 976 : A I R 1961 Madh Pra 172 (173) (Pr 10) (DB).

——Art. 133—No repugnancy between central law and local Act—Case also not of sufficient private importance to parties — Certificate of fitness not granted.

Held, it was not a case fit for appeal under Cl. (C) of Art. 133 on the ground that the decision involved a substantial point of law touching the interpretation of the Constitution itself. No conflict did exist on 22-7-1951 (date on which an ex parte order was made in execution directing respondent to deliver the property) between the Civil P. C. and T. P. Act and the House Rent Control Order. S. 4, Civil P. C. gives a local Act local validity and the special procedure prescribed therein validity within its own sphere the result being that the special procedure prescribed in the House Rent Control Order should be followed in preference to the provision in the C. P. Code. The other Act viz., the Central T. P. Act could not be deemed to have been in force in the State in or about July, 1951 when the execution proceedings involved in the dispute took place. Even otherwise the case was not of sufficient private importance to both the parties in the sense in which it was generally understood so as to deserve consideration on that ground. No other case of the nature giving rise to conflict had arisen during the short interval between 1-4-1951 and 16-8-1951 of the alleged repugnancy of the local law before it received the assent of the President. 1LR (1954) Mys 504 : A I R 1955 Mys 35 (37) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (c) — Question whether Art. 142 or 144 of Limitation Act applies — Case fit for leave—Civil P. C (1908), S. 109 (c).

The question as to whether Art. 142 or Art. 144 of the Limitation Act applies, cannot be said to be such an important question of law as to fulfil the test of 'fitness' for granting leave. (1960) 2 O J D 570 : 27 Cut L T 393 : ILR (1961) Cut 128.

Held, that there being difference of opinion between the High Courts as to whether an unregistered partition deed can be admitted in evidence for a collateral purpose and the interpretation of the words 'collateral purpose' and as to whether in the particular circumstances of the case, the putting in possession of the co-sharers of the property allotted to each one of them can be considered as a collateral purpose, the question was of general importance. ——Art. 133 (1) (c)—Certificate of fitness — Divergent views of various High Courts — Question of great private or public importance Questions whether income-tax assessment orders are admissible in evidence—Fit for grant of certificate under Art. 133 (1) (c).

The scope of an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 133 (1) (c) is limited to the question whether a substantial question of law of great private or public importance arises and whether having regard to all the circumstances of the case it is a matter worthy of consideration by the Supreme Court to lay down any authoritative precedent binding on all the Courts. A conflict of judicial decisions on the question of law amongst the various High Courts or an interpretation of Statute affecting the rights of a section of the public or a question of procedural or substantial law which arises frequently may be considered as a good ground for leave : AIR 1964 Mad 166, Rel. on.

Whether Income-tax Act (1922), S. 54 operates as a bar as regards admissibility of assessment orders in evidence is a question on which there is a conflict of judicial opinion and is one which is still not finally decided by the Supreme Court. Hence the question is fit for granting certicate under Art. 133 (1) (c). ILR (1964) Cut 412 : A I R 1965 Orissa 9 (10, 11) (Prs 6, 9) (DB).

● ——Art. 133 (1) (c) — Question of great public or private importance — Point of res judicata — Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109 (c).

It is not possible to lay down definitely that a mere divergence of opinion on any point among the various High Courts would be sufficient to make a question one of general importance. That matter would have to be decided on the importance of the question itself and not merely on the divergence of views of the various High Courts about it. But the fact that various High Courts have differed on a certain question may have an important bearing on arriving at the conclusion whether the question is of general public or private importance or not. Generally speaking, a point of res judicata may not be said to raise question of great public or private importance, but sometimes it may raise such questions. The question whether the decision of a Court of lower jurisdiction would be res judicata in the second suit which is triable only by a Court of higher jurisdiction by virtue of arrears of rent having been allowed to accumulate is of general public importance because suits for arrears of rent and ejectment are very common, and the decision of the Supreme Court on this issue, when there is divergence of opinion among the various High Courts, would settle the law as the question has so far not been considered either by the Privy Council or by the Supreme Court : Case-law discussed. ——Art. 133 (1) (c)—Certificate of fitness—Substantial question of law—Court merely applying principles contained in Supreme Court decisions.

The petitioner can get leave under Art. 133 (1) (c), if the Judicial Commissioner's Court certifies that there is a substantial question of law of general importance on which an authoritative pronouncement has to be given by the Supreme Court. Where though the Court has dealt with various questions of law in deciding the case it has only applied the principles contained in the Supreme Court decisions the Court cannot certify the case to be fit for appeal to the Supreme Court. A I R 1964 Tripura 23 (25) (Pt C) (Pr 7).

14 (d). Leave, if can be granted to both parties.

Neither the provisions of Art. 133 of the Constitution nor S. 109 or 110, Civil P. C., contemplate a right to file a cross appeal or cross objection and there would be no jurisdiction to introduce into these provisions this right. Leave will not be granted to a party if the provisions as to pecuniary valuation are not satisfied, merely because one of the parties to the appeal was granted leave and a part of the decree in appeal in the High Court is attacked in the appeal before the Supreme Court, if a common question is not involved in both the matters. (1957) 1 Andh W R 212 : ILR (1957) Andh Pra 144 : AIR 1957 Andh Pra 852 (354) (Prs 10, 12) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (c) — One party granted leave — Opposite party whether entitled to leave.

The High Court decided that an order of the Ruler of the former Gwalior State levying on the Gwalior Sugar Co., a cane cess of one anna per maund on all sugar cane purchased by the Company was an executive order and not a law under Art. 265 of the Constitution and that the order could not justify the imposition of the cess on the company after 26th January 1950. The State of Madhya Bharat applied for leave to appeal and leave was granted.

Subsequently the Company applied for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court on the ground that the High Court did not consider the point whether in view of its finding that the Durbar order was an executive order, any amount of cess for a period before 26th January 1950 could at all be collected after that date.

Held, that as the State of Madhya Bharat had been granted leave to appeal, the company might also be granted leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. A I R 1954 Mad 876 ; (1955) 2 Mad L J 401, Rel. on. ——Art. 133 (1)—Leave granted to one party— Leave to other parties, if can be granted.

When leave is granted to one party to appeal to the Supreme Court against any decree, leave cannot be withheld from other parties seeking to appeal from the same decree although it may be that, had they individually applied for leave, their applications would have been rightly dismissed for failure to comply with the requirements of Art. 133 (1) (a) or (b). This category of cases would fall within the scope of Art. 133 (1) (c) as being made fit cases for appeal to the Supreme Court by reason of one party to the appeal having been granted leave. In such a case, it is not necessory that the High Court should certify that each appeal sought to be filed against the appellate decree involves a separate substantial question of law.

Where there is scope for the contention that there is a common question in controversy, which would be applicable to the entire case, it will be inequitable to grant leave in respect of a portion of the subject-matter and refuse it in respect of the remaining part, and in such cases nothing would prevent the Court from treating the case as a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court under clause (1) (c) of Art. 133. But it cannot be laid down as a general proposition of law that in all cases, when leave is granted to one of the parties to appeal to the Supreme Court, the other parties also are entitled to leave as a matter of course, even though their applications could not be entertained under Art. 133, clause (1), sub-clauses (a) and (b). 1954 Mad W N 508 : 67 Mad L W 541 : I L R (1955) Mad 786 : (1955) 2 Mad L J 401 : A I R 1954 Mad 876 (877, 878) (Prs 5, 10) (DB).

14 (e). Leave with conditions.

——Art. 133 (1)—Leave subject to condition.

Where the point in issue appears to be one of general importance but not of sufficient importance to the proposed respondent to warrant the High Court in putting him to the expense of an appeal to the Supreme Court, permission will be granted for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court subject to the condition that the respondent will get his taxed costs incurred in the Supreme Court in any event from the petitioners. 14 (f). Effect of granting leave to appeal.

● ——Arts. 133, 136 — Scope — Powers of Supreme Court—Proper certificate granted—Scope of appeal not restricted to certificate.

Under Art. 133, the certificate issued by the High Court in the manner prescribed therein is a pre-condition for the maintainability of an appeal to the Supreme Court. But the terms of the certificate do not circumscribe the scope of the appeal ; that is to say, once a proper certificate is granted, the Supreme Court has undoubtedly the power, as a Court of appeal, to consider the correctness of the decision appealed against from every standpoint, whether on questions of fact or law. A successful party no doubt can question the maintainability of the appeal on the ground that the certificate was issued by the High Court in contravention of the provisions of Art. 133, but once the certificate was good, the provisions of Art. 133, did not confine the scope of the appeal to the certificate. The Supreme Court can exercise an unrestricted power of reviewing the judgment of the High Court in the case of a certificate hedged in with conditions by resorting to its power under Art. 136 of the Constitution. A. Raghavamma v. A. Chenchamma. (1964) 1 S C A 593 : (1964) 2 S C R 933 : A I R 1964 S C 136 (142) (Pt A) (Prs 8, 9).

15. Decree of affirmance.

(a) Variation in extraneous or consequential matters.

15. Decree of affirmance.

● ——Art. 133 (1) (b) — Judgment of affirmance — Proceedings under S. 12 (1) (d), Hindu Marriage Act —City Civil Court granting decree of annulment to husband — Decree set aside on appeal and case remanded for finding on question whether wife was pregnant at time of marriage—Finding that she was not so pregnant—Finding affirmed by High Court—High Court's judgment is one of affirmance.

One of the requirements of cl. (1) of Art. 133, is that in a case other than the one referred to in sub-cl. (c) the appeal must involve a substantial question of law where the judgment appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below. Where the City Civil Court has granted a decree for annulment of marriage to the husband under S. 12 (1) (d) of the Hindu Marriage Act but High Court in appeal dismissed the petition, strictly speaking the judgment of the High Court cannot be regarded as judgment of affirmance of the City Civil Court. But where the High Court remanded an issue whether the wife was pregnant at the time of the marriage and the finding of the City Civil Court on the issue was that she was not so pregnant and this finding was affirmed by the High Court, the decree of the High Court must substantially be regarded as one of affirmance. No doubt, technically, the High Court's decision is not one of affirmance because it has reversed the decree of the City Civil Court. But the Court must have regard to the substance of the matter, the basis of the original decree of the City Civil Court had disappeared after it gave a contrary finding to the one rendered by it earlier on the crucial fact concerning the wife's pregnancy before her marriage. The High Court having accepted that finding there can be no escape from the position that the Supreme Court have a case where upon the crucial question of fact, there are concurrent findings. ● ——Art. 133 (1)—Decree of affirmance– High Court varying decree of trial Court in favour of party intending to prefer appeal to Supreme Court is not decree of affirmance—Variance in matter of costs only, does not make it decree varying trial Court's decree —But variance in matter of interest makes appellate decree one of variance —Variance because of concession by party or by consent of parties does not make appellate decree one of variance. AIR 1952 Mad 771 (FB), 8 Cal W N 294 (FB), AIR 1959 Andh Pra 20, AIR 1952 All 942 (FB), AIR 1952 Assam 134 (FB), AIR 1929 Bom 359, AIR 1949 Bom 164, AIR 1954 Cal 618, AIR 1959 Mys 112 and AIR 1953 Nag 249, Overruled.

If the appellate decree passed by the High Court makes a variance in the decision of the trial Court the said decree cannot be said to affirm the decision of the trial Court under Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution. AIR 1925 P C 60, Foll.

The clause 'appealed from' is merely a descriptive clause and it describes the decree as one from which the appeal arises. If that be so, in determining the character of the decree it would be necessary to take the decree as a whole and enquire whether it is a decree of affirmance or not.

If the word 'decree' in the first part of the relevant clause means not a part of the decree but the whole of the decree, then the word 'decision' must likewise mean the entire decision of the trial Court.

Where appellate decree confirms the decree of the trial Court but merely makes variation in regard to the order as to costs, such variation does not affect the character of the appellate decree which in law is a decree of affirmance. But the variation with regard to the award of interest before the date of the decree, which is a part of the dispute, would affect the character of the appellate decree.

Where the appellate Court makes a variation in the decision of the trial Court either because a concession has been made in that behalf or the variation has been obtained by parties by consent or a part of the subject-matter covered by the decree has been withdrawn, such variation does not affect the character of the appellate decree. Variation or affirmance by the appeal Court should be an act of adjudication. An order which does not judicially discuss the matter in issue is not to be considered an order of affirmance. It is therefore not necessary for the petitioner to satisfy the Court that any substantial question of law is involved. AIR 1952 Madh B 149 (F B) and AIR 1914 P C 66 : 27 M L J 17, Foll. ● ——Art. 133 — Several matters of controversy in case — High Court varying decision of trial Court with respect to some and affirming it in respect of others—Right of appeal.

The affirmance or variance of a decision of the Court below has to be seen in respect of the subject matter of the proposed appeal. The entire subject-matter of the proposed appeal should be taken up as one whole and as one unit for seeing if there is variance or affirmance and not be cut up into parts affirming and parts varying. Hence the contention that irrespective of the subject-matter of the proposed appeal to the Supreme Court, if the judgment of the High Court as a whole varied even a part of the decision of the Court below an appeal will lie as of right even though the appeal was confined to that part of the decision of the Court below affirmed is untenable. (Per majority of the Full Bench).

The expression "the decision of the Court below in any case" is to be interpreted to mean the whole decision of the suit by that Court. The significance of the words "in any case" cannot be lost sight of and consequently it is the decision in the suit and not of any matter in controversy that has to be taken into consideration. It is not possible to decide whether the decree of the High Court affirms or varies the decision of the Court below without comparing the whole decision of the Court below with the decree of the High Court as a whole. ——Art. 133 (1) — Decree of affirmance — Suit for partition of various items — Variation in favour of appellant in respect of portion of certain item — Effect—(Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110).

Held, on facts that as item 10 in the suit for partition in respect of which there was a variation in favour of the appellant was made the subject-matter of the proposed appeal, the decree was not one of affirmance within the meaning of Art. 133. AIR 1952 Mad 771 (FB), Foll.

(2) That items 1 to 10 being the subject-matter of the suit and that items 1, 4 and 10 being the subject-matter of the appeal, the value of the said subject-matter was more than the prescribed amount. The applicant had, therefore, complied with the conditions laid down in Art. 133 of the Constitution and was, therefore, entitled as of right to appeal to the Supreme Court. ——Art. 133 (1)—Decree of affirmance—Same decision by trial Judge and High Court but based on different reasonings — Decision of Court below is affirmed.

Although the reasonings given by the trial Judge and the Division Bench of the High Court are not on the same lines, it cannot be said that the judgment delivered by the Division Bench is not a judgment of affirmance when the conclusion of both is the same. AIR 1961 S C 795, Rel. on. AIR 1964 Cal 335 (339) (Pt B) (Pr 10) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) — Judgment of affirmance.

If a person has a particular claim or a case in regard to one of the matters involved in a suit and he succeeds only in part in the trial Court or fails there altogether, but in the Appellate Court he succeeds entirely, then such variation of the trial Court's decree in his favour cannot be made a ground for asserting that the judgment is not a judgment of affirmance. But where the variation in the intending appellant's favour falls short of his total claim as regards the particular matter concerned, the judgment which he will submit to the superior Court for review, including, as it must, that part which has varied the trial Court's decree will not be a judgment of affirmance but will be a judgment partly of affirmance and partly of modification.

The intending appellant's case before the trial Court was that there should be no partition at all and necessarily no accounting. The trial Court did not accept his case and made an order for accounts in a somewhat stringent form. The Appellate Court modified the rigour of the order for accounts, but it still maintained the order and the resultant position was that the intending appellant's case that there should not be any accounting at all was not yet fully conceded. He therefore took a ground against even the modified order for accounting.

Held, that whether a judgment like that in the present case is or is not a judgment of affirmance, is a matter at least of doubt and where there is doubt the Court would resolve it by deciding in favour of the appellant and granting him leave. 58 Cal W N 726 : AIR 1954 Cal 618 (619, 620) (Prs 9, 10) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (a) — Judgment of affirmance — "Judgment, decree of final order appealed from" —Meaning of.

The expression "judgment, decree or final order appealed from" used in Art. 133 of the Constitution does refer to the part of the decree or order or judgment which is the subject-matter of the proposed appeal and does not of necessity refer to the decree or order in its entirety passed in the case. Thus, a judgment is one of affirmance where the High Court on appeal agrees with the view of the trial Court that the adoption made by the defendant petitioner was not proved and leave to appeal is sought in respect of this matter, though the plaintiff's suit which was dismissed by the trial Court has been decreed by the High Court. I L R (1956) Hyd 782 : A I R 1957 Hyd 24 (25) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 7) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (a)—Decree of affirmance—Test for determination - (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110).

The test laid down for determining as to whether the decree of the High Court could be regarded as one of variance is as to whether the High Court has differed from the lower Court on a principle. If having found an error in the calculation made by the trial Court or because of the fact that the trial Court omitted a particular item the High Court seeks to substitute a different figure for each item of work or items of work it cannot be regarded as varying the decree of the lower Court. But if the plaintiff's claim is a money claim which is decreed by the trial Court as to a certain part and then on appeal decreed by the appellate Court as to a larger part but still not fully decreed the appellate Court's decision would not be regarded as a decision of affirmance. I L R (1956) Hyd 577 : AIR 1956 Hyd 145 (145) (Prs 3, 4) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (a) — Leave to appeal under—High Court affirming decree of lower Court—(Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110).

If there are two appeals in the High Court from one decree of the lower Court, then the decree of the High Court in each of the appeals will be separately considered and if the proposed appeal to the Supreme Court arising out of one of such decrees relates to a matter on which that decree has affirmed the decision of the Court below, there will be no right of appeal without a substantial question of law. AIR 1952 All 942, Rel. on. Case-law referred. ILR (1955) Hyd 39 : A I R 1955 Hyd 216 (218) (Pr 10) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (c)—Decree of of affirmance—(Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110).

The words "appealed from" qualify and limit the scope of the meaning of the expression "judgment, decree or final order". In conjunction with the words "judgment, decree or final order" they connote, not the judgment, decree or final order of the High Court in its entirety but that part which is intended to be challenged in the appeal to the Supreme Court. On this interpretation of the expression "judgment, decree or final order appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below" the principle that emerges is that where the decision is partly maintained and partly reversed, the decree is deemed to be one of affirmance, when the subject-matter of the appeal to the Supreme Court is confined to that part of the decree which affirms the decision of the lower Court. 1956 Madh B L I 588 : Madh B L R 1956 Civil 86: ILR (1956) Madh B 192: AIR 1956 Madh B 145 (147) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (c) — Decree of affirmance—(Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110).

Where the direction given by the High Court to the trial Court was only in the matter of working out the details in accordance with the preliminary decree for partition and did not make any change in the rights of a person declared by the preliminary decree nor did it set aside or vary any finding of the trial Court on a point whether a particular item of property was liable to partition, the variation in the manner of working out the details in accordance with the preliminary decree cannot be taken as one making the judgment of the High Court a judgment of variance for the purposes of Art. 133 (1). 1956 Madh B L I 588 : Madh B L R 1956 Civil 86 : ILR (1956) Madh B 192 : A I R 1956 Madh B 145 (150) (Pt E) (Pr 10) (DB).

●——Art. 133 (1)—Decree of affirmance—Rejection of appeal by a Special Bench preferred against the decision of a Division Bench—Decision of Court immediately below—Substantial question of law.

Where a Special Bench of the High Court of Madhya Pradesh dismissed an appeal preferred against the decision of a Division Bench of the Court on the ground that no such appeal lay, and the appellant applied for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court against the order of rejection the points for decision were whether the order of dismissal in the case was one of affirmance of the decree of Court below and whether there was a substantial question of law :

Held : The order of the Special Bench dismissing an appeal, against the decision of a Division Bench, on the ground that no appeal lay under S. 25 of the High Court Act cannot be an order which affirmed the decision of the Division Bench. The expression "affirms the decision of the Court immediately below" implies that the High Court has judicially dealt with the decision of the Court below and upheld it. On the rejection of an incompetent appeal as such, the decision of the Court below is not affirmed thereby. AIR 1914 P C 66, Foll ; A I R 1932 All 312; I L R 20 All 367 and A I R 1933 Lah 690, Disting.

A question of law involving difference of opinion is a substantial question of law. The question of law in the case was whether a decree or order passed by a Division Bench of the High Court, final and conclusive under M. B. High Court Ordinance, is appealable under S. 25 of the High Court Act. The real question involved was one of construction of S. 2 (6) of the High Court's Act, the scope and purpose of which is fairly debatable. AIR 1927 P. C. 252, Ref. to.

(Per Kaul, C. J. and Chaturvedi, J.) Further the decision sought to be challenged before the Special Bench was not one of the Court "immediately below". The decision of a Division Bench of the High Court is the decision of the High Court itself and therefore the last portion of Art. 133 (1) will not apply. Gulabchand Gambhirmal v. Kudilal Govindaram. ——Art. 133 (1)—Decree of affirmance — Land Acquisition case — Variation in decree by High Court in favour of applicant—Effect.

Where certain principles have to be applied and the principles given in the Court of first instance are not the principles which are applied by the appellate Court and are not the principles which the applicant claimed, the judgment cannot be called one of affirmance. Valuation of the land compulsorily acquired was made at a particular rate and on certain principles. The applicants asked that some other principles and some other rate should be applied. The High Court did not accept the contention of the applicants and found a rate which was between the rate granted and that asked for.

Held that the variation showed that the old rate was not applicable, and to that extent the judgment could not be treated as one of affirmance. A I R 1925 P C 60, Rel. on. 1958 M P L J 146 : 1958 M P C 101 : 1958 Jab L J 105 : A I R 1958 Madh Pra 235 (236) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Art. 133— 'Decree of affirmance' — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110).

When more subject-matters than one are comprised in a suit the applicant is under S. 110, Civil P. C. or Art. 133, Constitution of India, entitled to appeal against the whole extent of his failure even though the variation is in respect of one of those subject-matters whether that variation is to his advantage or to his detriment. Even accepting this liberal view there is another factor to be taken into consideration which may have the effect of ruling out the applicant's right to a certificate. Where the proposed appeal is directed against defendants 1 and 2 and not against defendant 3 and the variation in the lower Court's decree is in respect of the matter in dispute between the plaintiff-applicant and defendant 3, who however does not figure as a party in the proposed appeal at all, then it is against reason and principle to allow the applicant to point at some one outside the purview of the proposed appeal and seek leave against others when the decision as between the applicant and the latter (i. e., defendants 1 and 2) has been affirmed by the High Court. There is nothing in the language of Art. 133 of the Constitution to warrant the applicant having such a right. ——Art. 133 (1) (b) — Decree of variance — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110).

A decree of variance must be one where there is variation in the substantive relief in respect of the whole or part of a party's claim. AIR 1927 Pat 379 and AIR 1928 Pat 190, Rel. on.

The trial Court in a suit for ejectment passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. No express direction was however, given in the decree about the plaintiff being entitled, if the defendant did not remove the materials within the time fixed by the Court, to have them removed through Court. Further, the decree did not specifically mention that the plaintiff was to obtain possession over the materials if they were not removed by the defendant within the time fixed. In the judgment it was ordered that the defendant was to remove the constructions within six months, but as in the judgment there was no direction as to what would happen if the defendant failed to comply with this direction, the decree passed in pursuance of the judgment was also silent about it.

In the appeal the High Court affirmed in substance the decree but differed from it in two respects. Firstly, the ambiguity in the decree of the court below was removed by inserting in the decree a clause to the effect that if the defendant failed to remove the materials within the time fixed the plaintiff was to have the liberty to have the materials removed through the agency of the Court. Secondly, the time fixed for the removal of the materials by the trial Court was enlarged from six months from the date of the trial Court's decree to one year from the date of High Court's decree.

There was no other variation in the decree as passed by the High Court. The dispute in the case affected property over the value of Rs. 20,000.

Held, such a variation might very well be termed as incidental or consequential. As regards the second variation, namely the mention of the right of the plaintiff to get the materials removed through the agency of the Court if the defendant failed to do the same himself, it could not be said to be a variation at all. This was in reality the clarification of what was implicit in the judgment of the trial Court. Therefore, no variation in substance was made by the High Court and the applicant, could not claim that he was entitled to appeal to the Supreme Court as a matter of right. AIR 1955 All 680 (682, 683) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (c) — Decree of affirmance — Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110.

——Arts. 133 and 226 — Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110 — Decree of affirmance — High Court quashing orders of Tribunal in writ appeal — Reference in appeal that all appeals before Tribunal will get revived — Not a decree at variance.

A reference to Art. 133, Constitution and S. 110, Civil P. C. shows that affirmance or variation must be in relation to the subject-matter in dispute in the proceeding the final order in which is sought to be taken in appeal to the Supreme Court. Any variance with reference to extraneous matters or on matters consequential on the final order therein will not be sufficient to take the case out of the class of orders of affirmance. The directions as to the disposal of the matters by the Appellate Tribunal on the quashing are extraneous to the subject-matter of the writ proceedings and relate to the consequences of the quashing.

Hence where the High Court quashes the orders of the Tribunal in a writ appeal and there is a reference in the judgment that all the appeals before the Tribunal will get revived, such reference will not make the decision in the writ appeal one of variance on the ground that even the appeals from which no writ appeals were filed would get revived. The expression of a different view in the appeal as to the consequences flowing from the particular adjudication on the merits of the dispute between the parties in the writ petitions cannot make the decision in the appeal one of variance with that of the first Court as required under Art. 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution. 77 Mad L W 439 : 1964 Mad W N 342 : ILR (1965) 1 Mad 498 : AIR 1965 Mad 478 (479, 480) (Prs 3, 5) (DB).

16. "Court immediately below."

● —Art. 133 (1) — 'Court immediately below' — and 'Court subordinate to High Court' —Distinction —Single Judge of High Court is a "Court immediately below" a Bench hearing Letters Patent appeal against his decision — Appeal from decree of affirmance—Certificate that decision involves a substantial question of law necessary. A I R 1959 All 10, Overruled.

A single Judge of a High Court is a "Court immediately below" a Bench hearing an appeal against his judgment under the Letters Patent. Where the judgment of such Bench affirms the judgment of the single Judge, an appeal under Art. 133 (1) will not be competent unless the High Court certifies that the decision appealed from involves a substantial question of law. The expression "Court immediately below" as used in Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution does not mean "Court subordinate to High Court". A "Court subordinate to High Court" is subject to the superintendence of the High Court, whereas a Court immediately below is the Court from whose decision the appeal has been filed. Durga Prasad v. The words "Court immediately below" occurring in Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution of India cannot be equated with the words "Court subordinate" used in S. 115 of Civil P. C. A Court subordinate to the High Court is a Court subject to the superintendence of the High Court, whereas a Court immediately below is the Court from whose decision the appeal has been filed.

Clause 10 of the Letters Patent (Lahore) confers an unqualified right of appeal to the High Court from the judgment of a Single Judge. There is nothing in the context to support the plea that the expression "Court immediately below" includes a Judge of the High Court trying a proceeding in exercise of original jurisdiction i. e., sitting as a Court of first instance. S. 110 of Civil P. C. is, in material terms, identical with Art. 133 of the Constitution of India. There is nothing in the phraseology used or the context which justifies the view that the expression "the Court immediately below" is used in S. 110 of Civil P. C. or in Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution in two different senses, according as the Court is trying a proceeding in exercise of its original jurisdiction and in exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. The expression "Court immediately below" in Art. 133 (1) must, therefore, mean the Court from the decision of which an appeal has been filed to the High Court, whether such Court is a Single Judge of the High Court, or a Court subject to the superintendence of High Court. Thus, where the judgment of the High Court delivered in a Letters Patent Appeal filed against the appellate judgment of a Single Judge of the same High Court in a suit brought under the provisions of the Companies Act, involves some claim or question respecting property of the value exceeding twenty thousand rupees and the judgment of the Singh Judge is reversed, an appeal preferred to the Supreme Ceurt with certificate granted by the High Court under Art. 133 (1) (a) and (b) is competent. 23 Ind App 102 (P C), Rel. on ; A I R 1928 Lah 537 and A I R 1932 Lah 121 (2) and A I R 1956 Nag 276, Approved ; Observation in A I R 1916 Cal 973 held obiter ; A I R 1944 Lah 458 (FB) and A I R 1962 Andh Pra 346, Overruled. ——Art. 133 (1)— Scope.

Under Art. 133 (1) a certificate that the appeal involves a substantial question of law is only necessary when "the judgment, decree or final order appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below. The judgment, decree or final order appealed from is necessarily the judgment, decree or final order of the High Court, and the conclusion would appear to be irresistible that the phrase "the Court immediately below" must refer to a Court which is below the High Court. No real distinction can be drawn between a Judge sitting singly in the exercise of original jurisdiction and in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction ; in either case he is exercising a function which is directed to be performed by the High Court. It is logically untenable to hold that the High Court is not one Court and, if that be so then 'the Court immediately below' within the meaning of Cl. (1) of Art. 133, must be a Court other than the High Court. The expression 'Court immediately below' in Art. 133 (1) as well as in S. 110, Civil P. C., refers to a Court which is subordinate to the High Court. The decision of a single Judge of a High Court on the appellate side which is reversed by a Division Bench of the same Court under the Letters Patent is not a decision of the 'Court immediately below' within the meaning of Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution of India. Hence, if the judgment of the Division Bench in Letters Patent Appeal has restored the judgment of the subordinate Judge reversing that of the single Judge the judgment is one of affirmance within the meaning of Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution. 17. Substantial question of law.

——Art. 133 (1) (c) — Substantial question of law— (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110).

Where a petition is under Cl. (1) (c) of Art. 133, it is necessary for the petitioner to show that the appeal involves some substantial question of law. Where the question is of great public importance, but there is no divergence of views among High Courts, it cannot be held that a substantial question of law is involved. A I R 1956 Ajmer 71 (72) (Pt D) (Pr 6).

——Art. 133 (1) (b) — Substantial question of law— (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110).

The mere fact that a question of law is involved is not sufficient to satisfy the requirements of Art. 133 in the case of concurrent judgment. The question of law involved in the appeal must be a substantial one. A question of law will not be substantial merely because much is at stake on the answer to it. A substantial question of law must be a question of law in which the pros and cons are about evenly balanced. The application of well defined principles to a particular set of facts is not a question of law which can fairly be described as substantial. A I R 1957 All 28 (35, 36) (Pt I) (Prs 14, 16) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (c)—Substantial question of law.

The term 'certify' used in Art. 133 is a strong term. The High Court must be convinced of the substantiality of the point or of the fitness of the case before it can certify under Art. 133. It is only when there are some complexities of law involved in the case requiring an authoritative interpretation by Supreme Court that a certificate of fitness should be ordinarily granted. The point of law involved should be one of difficulty or of great importance. A I R 1959 Andh Pra 359 (360) (Pt C) (Pr 2) (DB).

If a question of law is fairly arguable, when there is room for difference of opinion on it, or when the Court thought it necessary to deal with that question at some length and discuss alternative views then the question would be a substantial question of law and that if the question was practically covered by the decision of the highest Court or the general principles to be applied in determining the question are well settled and the only question was of applying these principles to the particular facts of the case, it would not be substantial question of law. AIR 1962 S C 1314 and AIR 1951 Mad 989 (FB), Rel. on.

A proceeding by the landlord against the tenant for eviction by enforcing the provisions of the Cultivating Tenants Protection Act is a civil proceeding. In every proceeding (other than criminal) at some stage or other or all the points in controversy may have to be adjudicated upon with reference to the provisions of one or more statutes and it is impossible to accept the contention that merely because the decision necessitates or involves an interpretation of the provisions of a statute and their application the proceeding, would cease to be a civil proceeding, as though a civil proceeding would comprehend only disputes involving questions of personal law having no connection with any statutory enactment. The meaning of the expression 'civil proceeding' in Art. 133 is not limited to common law rights only but would include any right to property, declaration of status though these may be creatures of statutes. AIR 1965 S C 1818, Ref.

Section 6 (B) of the Madras Cultivating Tenants Protection Act expressly provides that the Revenue Divisional Officer shall be deemed to be a Court subordinate to the High Court for the purpose of S. 115, Civil P. C. and his orders shall be liable to revision by the High Court under the provisions of that section. Therefore, the proceeding before the High Court is a civil proceeding and the same is disposed of by High Court under S. 115, Civil P. C. The statute itself regards and declares the Revenue Divisional Officer as a Court subordinate to High Court and the proceeding in the High Court is a civil proceeding within the meaning of S. 115. ——Art. 133 (1) (c)—Certificate of fitness for appeal — Leave cannot be granted because impugned judgment is erroneous in law—Substantial question of law—Order of compulsory retirement of Government servant quashed under Art. 226, on ground that there was breach of constitutional provision — Leave to appeal on ground that decision was not in accordance with law in view of recent decision of Supreme Court—Officer concerned unable to avail himself of writ to get into office on account of his superannuation — Case held not fit for leave to appeal.

The scope of an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution is limited to question whether a substantial question of law of great private or public importance arises and whether having regard to all the circumstances of the case it is a matter worthy of consideration by the Supreme Court to lay down an authoritative precedent binding on all the Courts. The Court dealing with an application for leave is not a Court of appeal sitting in judgment over the judgment from which leave is asked for. It is now fairly well settled that a case giving rise to a question of law of great public or private importance would normally be considered fit for leave being granted. It is equally well settled that it is not every question of law, however, important it may be, between the parties inter se, that would necessarily attract the discretion of the Court to grant the necessary certificate. What is a substantial question of law can never be exhaustively laid down by any Court. A conflict of judicial opinion on a question of law, amongst the various High Courts, or an interpretation of statute: affecting the rights of a section of the public, or a question of procedural or substantive law which arises frequently, may be considered as good grounds for leave. No formula can be devised to decide what is and what is not a substantial question of law. The language of Art. 133 (1) (c) is indeed very wide and it seems that even if there is a substantial question of law involved in the case the Court might yet refuse leave having regard to other facts and circumstances arising in the case.

The respondent Officer filed a writ petition under Art. 226, to quash the disciplinary proceedings against him. The question raised in the proceedings under Art. 226 was whether a Government servant could be found guilty on mere suspicion, however, strong it might be, and whether a proceeding in which suspicion took the place of legal evidence would not amount to violation of Art. 311 of the Constitution. The High Court took the view that there was a breach of the constitutional provision having regard to the manner in which the proceeding culminated against the officer and issued a writ. On appeal, the issue of writ was confirmed. The State of Madras praved for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court from that judgment. The entire argument was to the effect that the decision was not in accordance with law in view of a recent decision of the Supreme Court. The respondent Officer had by that time already reached the superannuation age and the order of writ could not avail him to get into the office again. Held, that the case was not a fit one for leave to appeal under Cl. (c) of Art. 133 (1). (1966) 2 Lab L J 17 : ILR (1964) 1 Mad 685 : (1964) 2 Mad L J 353 : 1964 Mad L J (Cr) 582 : AIR 1964 Mad 166 (167) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 7) (DB).

● ——Art. 133—Substantial question of law—Meaning and test of, for grant of, leave to appeal to the Supreme Court.

It cannot be said that any question of law a decision on which may affect materially the rights of the parties is a substantial question of law.

It is neither possible nor useful to attempt to exactly define terms like "substantial", "reasonable" and "just and equitable". Ultimately it resolves itself into their meaning that the Court considers to be substantial, reasonable or just and equitable.

When a question of law is fairly arguable, when there is room for difference of opinion on it, then such a question would be a substantial question of law. If the Court thought it necessary to deal with a question of law at some length, and discuss alternative views which can be taken on the point, then such a question would be a substantial question.

When a point of law is practically covered by a doctrine of the highest Court, say like the Privy Council or the Supreme Court, then it would not be a substantial question. If the general principles to be applied in determining a question are well settled a mere application of such principles would not involve a substantial question of law. When a particular set of facts can lead to alternative findings in law, then a substantial question of law would be involved. If the principle to be applied or the point of law arising in the case is not well established then certainly there would be a substantial question of law. If there is conflict of judicial opinion among the High Courts and there is no direct decision of the highest Court on any question of law, then that would be a substantial question of law, though the decisions of the particular High Court of which leave is sought might have been uniform on the question. That fact may be a very good ground for dismissing a second appeal if the lower Courts had followed the rulings of the High Court, but for an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court, the very fact of divergence of opinion among the High Courts is conclusive evidence of the existence of a substantial question of law.

Any question of law affecting the rights of parties would not by itself be a substantial question of law. An important or difficult question would of course be a substantial question; but even if a question is not important or difficult, if there is room for reasonable doubt or difference of opinion on the question then it would be a substantial question of law within the meaning of Art. 133 of the Constitution of India. The proper test for determining whether a question of law raised in the case is substantial would be whether it is of general public importance or whether it directly and substantially affects the rights of the parties. If the question is settled by the highest Court or the general principles to be applied in determining the question are well settled and there is mere question of applying those principles or that the plea raised is palpably absurd the question would not be a substantial question of law. Where the principles of law on a point are well settled, the application of those principles to a particular set of facts cannot be said to be substantial question of law. A I R 1956 Manipur 31 (32) (Pt B) (Pr 8).

——Art. 133—Substantial question of law.

The propriety of the appointment of a Receiver is by no means a substantial question of law as the principles governing the appointment of Receivers are too well established. 21 Cut L T 292 : ILR (1955) Cut 25 : A I R 1955 Orissa 71 (72) (Pt C) (Pr 4) (DB).

17 (b). Question of law involving difference of opinion.

——Art. 133 (1) (a)— 'Involves a substantial question of law'— Constitution of India, Art. 102 — Office of profit—Firm appointed as auditors of Life Insurance Corporation of India, Durgapur Projects Ltd., and Hindustan Steel, Ltd.—Partner of such firm whether holds offices of profit—Held to be substantial question of law.

Held, that although the Supreme Court decisions in AIR 1958 S C 52 and AIR 1958 S C 937, contain exposition or the relevant principles, the legal position of the petitioner with regard to the different companies and corporation bearing on the question as to whether it amounts to an office of profit within the meaning of Art. 102 of the Constitution is one of general public importance, and, as such it would be just and proper to grant the petitioner a certificate to the effect that the case involves a substantial question of law and is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution of India. AIR 1963 Cal 364 (365, 369) (Pt B) (Prs 4, 21) (DB).

——Art. 133—Substantial question of law.

In order that a question of law might be said to be substantial, there should be scope for doubt or difference of opinion in the decision proposed to be appealed from. A I R 1962 Cal 583 (586, 587) (Pt B) (Pr 24) (DB).

——Art. 133—Substantial question of law—Question as to constitutional validity of statute based upon speculative agreement, cannot be regarded as substantial question of law.

Held, that S. 52-A, Sea Customs Act, made no distinction between a citizen and a non-citizen. It was intended to bring within the mischief of the section every one who might contravene its provision. That being the true position, the argument advanced by the petitioner, that S. 52 A was bound to be declared ultra vires if the attack upon it came from a citizen was more or less of a speculative character, and proceeded upon an assumption which could not be made by the Court. The question raised therefore, could not be pronounced to be substantial in any sense of the term.

The contention regarding Art. 14 could not be considered to be substantial or at any rate, such as could be held fit to be agitated before the Supreme Court. AIR 1962 Cal 308 (309, 310) (Pt A) (Prs 13, 14, 15, 16, 17) (DB).

——Art. 133—Substantial question of law—Question of mens rea.

In order that it may be regarded as a substantial question of law, there must be some justification for the contention that the view taken of the section is, at least, such as can be taken on the language in which the provision has been couched.

In a case such as section 52-A, Sea Customs Act where the statute by express words absolute and peremptory in this import, rules out intention or knowledge that is mens rea, the question as to the absence of knowledge or intention on the part of the accused who was punished for its contravention does not involve a substantial question of law. AIR 1962 Cal 308 (310) (Pt B) (Pr 19) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (c) — Substrantial question of law— (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110).

The question whether a person's right to a share in his grandfather's property was in any way affected by the severance in status of his father, is no doubt a question of law but on the clear language of the provisions of Ss. 22, 23, 24 and 26, Special Marriage Act, there can be no room for reasonable doubt for difference of opinion on the question. That being so the question whether with the severance of father's status as a member of the undivided family his son also ceased to be a member of the family is not a substantial question of law even if the point is not covered by any authority. 1956 Madh B L J 588 : Madh B L R 1956 Civil 86 : ILR (1956) Madh B 192 : AIR 1956 Madh B 145 (150) (Pt C) (Pr 9) (DB).

——Art. 133—Substantial question of law — Contention finding support in Supreme Court decision but not accepted by High Court—Held involved substantial question of law.

Held, that the contention that the principle of the right of appeal being a vested right is not applicable to appeal within the High Court itself finds ample support in the decision of the Supreme Court in National Sewing Thread Co. Ltd v. James Chadwick and Brothers. AIR 1953 S C 357. The limits within which the rule of the right of appeal being a vested right accruing to party at the commencement of the action have also been pointed out in G. Veeranna v. G. C. Veykanna. AIR 1953 Mad 878 (FB) and AIR 1954 Cal 289. This contention (which was raised before the High Court but was not accepted) involves a substantial question of law and if other conditions are satisfied leave will be granted. 1956 Madh B L J 523 : Madh B L R 1955 (Civil) 115.

——Art. 133—Substantial question of law—Decision of the Judge in revision — Appeal — Maintainability (M. B. High Court of Judicature Act 8 of 1949), S. 23—(Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 109, 115).

The question whether on the language of S. 23, M. B. High Court of Judicature Act an appeal can lie to a Division Bench against a decision of a Single Judge in revision under S. 115, Civil P. C., is not substantial question of law within the meaning of Art 133 (c). It is not a reasonably debatable question. AIR 1952 Madh B 149, Dist. Civil Misc. Case No. 46 of 1953 Madh B. Foll. Madh B L R 1954 Civil 484 : Madh B L J 1955 H C R 213 : AIR 1955 Madh B 66 (68) (Pt B) (Pr 10) (DB).

● ——Art. 133—Question of law involving difference of opinion.

A question of law involving difference of opinion is a substantial question of law. The question of law in the case was whether a decree or order passed by a division bench of the High Court, final and conclusive under M. B. High Court Ordinance, is appealable under S. 25 of the High Court Act. The real question involved was one of construction of S. 2 (6) of the High Court Act, the scope and purpose of which is fairly debatable, Gulabchand v. Kudilal, Madh BLJ 1955 HCR 1271 : A I R 1952 Madh B 149 (150, 151, 152) (Prs 4, 6, 7, 14) (FB).

——Art. 133—Substantial question of law—Construction of proviso to S. 83 (1) of Representation of the People Act and R. 94-A of Conduct of Election Rules (1961), is a substantial question of law.

As different High Courts have taken a different views on the question where the proviso to S. 83 (1) of the Act and R. 94-A are mandatory so as to preclude an enquiry into the allegations of corrupt practices when the election petition was not accompanied by an affidavit sworn before the prescribed authority as required by S. 83 and R. 94 A, the question of the construction of the proviso to S. 83 (1) and R. 94 A clearly becomes a substantial question of law rendering the case a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court. AIR 1962 S C 1314, Foll. 1964 Jab L J 549 : 1964 M P L J 893 : AIR 1965 Madh Pra 15 (17) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Art. 133 — Substantial question of law — Case governed by Art. 48, Limitation Act—Question of onus as to starting point—Divergent views of different High Courts — No decision of Supreme Court or of Privy Council—Question held was substantial question of law—(Limitation Act (1908), Art. 48) — (Civil P. C. (1908), Pre. S. 110)—(Precedents). AIR 1956 Pat 526 (527, 528) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Art. 133 (1) (c) — Substantial question of law — Dispute as to when right to sue accrued.

Held, on facts that the possession of the land was taken by the Military on the condition express or implied that compensation would be settled and paid later on. Therefore it was possible to urge that the right to sue arose, when the Military Authorities refused to pay, and not on the date of recommendation by the political Minister of the State Government about the compensation which was subject to approval of the Military Authorities and therefore not final. If therefore the running of the period of limitation is to be computed from the date of refusal to pay, then that date cannot be taken to be earlier than the date on which the Military Authorities sanctioned the amount treating it as a refusal to pay anything more, and the same came to the knowledge of the plaintiff the owner of the lands. That date would be sometime in 1949 at the earliest. If this view finds favour then plaintiff's claim was clearly not time barred on the date he instituted this suit. Thus a complicated question of law has arisen between the parties on the decision of which will depend the decision of the claim.

The value of claim in dispute being not less than Rs. 20,000 and a substantial question of law having been involved in the appeal a certificate under Art. 133 could be issued. I L R 34 Cal 470, Disting. AIR 1957 Tripura 52 (54, 55) (Prs 18, 21).

17 (c). Questions of fact.

● ——Art. 133—Question of fact or law—Finding as to change over of sovereignty or completion of act of State—Nature of.

A finding as to change-over of sovereignty or completion of an act of State, is not a finding of fact pure and simple. The question essentially is what inference in law should be drawn from the facts proved or admitted relating to the change over of sovereignty. State of Saurashtra v. Jamadar Mohamad Abdulla, (1962) 3 S C R 970 : (1962) 2 S C J 70 : (1962) 2 S C A 605 : AIR 1962 S C 445 (450) (Pt A) (Pr 12).

● ——Art. 133—Inference from proved facts cannot be a question of law—Concurrent finding on question is conclusive.

The inference from the facts and circumstances proved that there was not or there was consent of the successful candidate to the corrupt practice as required by S. 100 (1) (b) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, cannot be a question of law. Hence the concurrent finding of the High Court and the Election Tribunal to the effect that there was no such consent either express or implied concludes the matter and it cannot be contended in the appeal before the Supreme Court that there was such consent. Sarat Chandra Rabha v. Khagendranath Nath, (1963) 1 S C J 796: I L R (1961) 13 Assam 1: (1961) 2 S C A 326 : (1961) 2 S C R 133 : AIR 1961 S C 334 (337, 338) (Pt B) (Pr 7).

Upon the concurrent findings of fact arrived at by the Courts below no question of law arises. Shamrao v. Dominion of India, (1955) 27 I T R 30 : AIR 1955 S C 249 (251, 252) (Pt C) (Pr 5).

—Art. 133 (1) (c) — Substantial question of law — Whether instalments are or are not heavy — (Debt Laws — Bombay Money Lenders Act (31 of 1947), S. 24).

Whether the instalments as fixed by the Court under S. 24 are or are not heavy in view of the circumstances of the judgment-debtor is obviously a question of fact. What the circumstances of the judgment-debtor are, is also a question of fact to be determined on the evidence in each particular case. The questions, therefore, do not involve substantial questions of law. AIR 1955 Ajmer 16 (17) (Pt D) (Pr 6).

—Art. 133 (2)—Substantial question of law—Particular condition whether amounts to a clog on redemption is a question of fact — [T. P. Act (1882), S. 60]—[Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110]. AIR 1954 Ajmer 53 (1) (53) (Pt B) (Pr 3).

—Art. 133 (1)—Substantial question of law—Question of construction of judgment.

Held, that the question of status of a tenant i. e., whether a particular tenant was a monthly tenant, and if so on what terms and conditions based on a construction of judgment is really a question of fact, and cannot be regarded as a question of law, far less a substantial question of law. —Art. 133 (1) (c) — Substantial question of law — What is—Suit for damages on account of death due to neglect of duty on part of defendant—Finding as to contributory negligence—Question is of fact only.

In a suit for damages, a finding, as to contributory negligence, depends upon the facts and circumstances of a particular case and is a question of fact only. Such a finding does not involve the determination of any substantial question of law. AIR 1933 All 214, Rel. on. AIR 1964 Him Pra 17 (19) (Pt B) (Pr 10).

—Art. 133—Question of fact — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110).

—Art. 133—Question whether reasonable opportunity of being heard under Art. 311 was given—Question of fact.

The question whether the petitioner who was removed from service was or was not given a reasonable opportunity at the two stages is a question of fact depending on the facts, circumstances and nature of the inquiry held against the applicant and on his replies thereto. That being so, the case cannot be certified under Art. 133 (1) (c) as a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court for the purpose of canvassing the question of fact. 1957 Jab L J 728 : AIR 1957 Madh Pra 226 (227) (Pt A) (Pr 2) (DB).

—Art. 133—Applicability of Cl. (c) — Substantial question of law.

A dispute arose between the assessee and the income-tax department as to whether the department could immediately collect the tax assessed treating the assessee as a defaulter or should postpone the collection because he was entitled to the benefit of the bar under the proviso to S. 45, Income-tax Act. The assessee claimed that there was restriction by law in Ceylon under which he was not allowed to remit his foreign income into taxable territory during the relevant period and hence the department had no jurisdiction to treat him as defaulter. But as it was admitted before the High Court that the restriction was not absolute and remittances could be made if a proper case was made out for such remittances the High Court passed an order allowing an opportunity to the assessee to prove to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Income-tax that he made bona fide efforts to remit the foreign income into the taxable territory and that notwithstanding such efforts he was not successful and asked the department to stay its hand for a period of two months for that purpose.

Held, that on the facts no substantial question of law was involved which would justify the Court in certifying that the case was a fit one for appeal to Supreme Court. AIR 1954 Mad 879 (880) (Prs 1, 2) (DB).

—Art. 133 (1) (c)—Question of fact — High Court on appeal from decision of Election Tribunal holding that a person was not agent of the successful candidate and there was no evidence in support of the allegation of agency.

Held, that this being a finding of fact could not furnish a ground for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 133 (1) (c). 63 Pun L R 212 : AIR 1961 Punj 383 (385) (Pt C) (Pr 7) (DB).

—Arts. 133, 134 (1) (c), 136 — Certificate of fitness under Art. 134 (1) (c)— AIR 1951 Hyd 71, Dissented from.

The considerations which apply to the granting of special leave by the Supreme Court under Art. 136, are different from the considerations which apply to the High Court granting leave under Art. 134 (1) (c). In order that the High Court may grant a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c), there must be similar considerations present which apply to civil cases under Art. 133 (1) (c). These considerations are that some clear departure from the requirements of justice has taken place or some disregard of legal principles has occurred or some failure of the principles of natural justice has taken place, or there is some question of law of general public importance arising in the case. If these considerations do not arise the High Court will not grant a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) merely on the ground that the Supreme Court might come to a different decision.

Where the questions involved in the appeal before the High Court were really questions of fact, and the Judges held that the evidence of the eye-witnesses was not reliable, and therefore acquitted the accused persons and it could hardly be said that exceptional and special circumstances existed in the case that substantial and grave injustice had been done and that the case in question presented features of sufficient gravity to warrant a review of the decision.

Held that a certificate could not be granted. 1954 Cri L J 1677 : 1955 Raj L W 331 : I L R (1955) 5 Raj 64 : AIR 1954 Raj 271 (272) (Prs 3, 4) (DB).

—Art. 133 (1) (a) and (b) — Grant of certificate—Suit for partition of joint family house — Value of plaintiff's share less than Rs. 20,000.

Where in a suit for partition, of a joint family house the value of the plaintiff's share is less than Rs. 20 000, the plaintiff is not entitled to a certificate under Art. 133 (1) (a) or (b) of the Constitution, although the value of the house is more than Rs. 20,000. Where the High Court has confirmed the decree of the Court below the plaintiff will not be entitled to a certificate even if the value of his share is not less than Rs. 20,000, unless he can further show that the appeal involves some substantial question of law. The fact that the High Court has gone wrong in appraising the evidence, which was produced, and coming to certain conclusions of facts on that evidence, is no substantial question of law and the plaintiff is not entitled to any certificate under Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution. 17 (d). Procedural matters.

——Art. 133 (1)—Substantial question of law—Splitting up of reference by Industrial Tribunal—Matter is of procedure — Certificate cannot be granted—Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Ss. 10, 15.

Where more than one headings of dispute are included in the reference to the Industrial Tribunal, there is no implied direction that, in no event, the Tribunal should split up the headings, and dispose them of one after another. The manner and the sequence in which the headings of the dispute are to be taken up for consideration is left to the Tribunal itself. It is a matter of procedure pure and simple. Where the High Court in appeal holds that such a step taken by the Tribunal was procedural, fair and reasonable and acquiesced in by the parties themselves the appeal does not involve a substantial question of law. 1962 Jab L J 253 : 1961 M P L J 982.

17 (e). Incorrect application of law.

——Art. 133 (1) (c)—Substantial question of law.

A certificate for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 133 (1) (c), Constitution of India would not be granted unless a substantial question of law of great public or private importance was involved. A case is not made out for grant of a certificate under Art. 133 (c) even if the Court has erred in not relying on the plaintiff's admission. ——Art. 133 (1) (c)—Incorrect application of law.

The compromise decree though compulsorily registrable under S. 17 (1) (b) read with S. 17 (2) (vi) was not registered. ——Art. 133 (1) (c)— Substantial question of law — Question concerning interpretation of S. 97, Representation of the People Act, 1951.

The question whether, in an election petition for declaring election to be void under S. 100 (1) (d) (iii), Representation of the People Act, 1951, the opposite party (the returned condidate) could be allowed to adduce evidence in support of his allegation that some of his votes had also been improperly rejected and some of the petitioner's votes had been improperly accepted, without taking that as a ground in his recriminations under S. 97 of the Act, raises a question of substantial and general importance of a recurring nature and it is a fit case for appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 133 (1) (c). 1960 All L J 328 : 1960 All W R (HC) 192 : AIR 1960 All 548 (549, 550) (Pt B) (Pr 9) (DB).

——Art. 133—Substantial question of law.

The point whether the Court has jurisdiction to go into the question of the validity of the acquisition proceeding in a reference is a matter of substantial importance. Similarly the question whether in view of S. 23 of the Requisitioning and Acquisition of Immoveable Property Act, 1952, an acquisition order will be deemed to be valid, even if it is irregular is of sufficient general importance to warrant the issue of a certificate under Art. 133 (1) (c). ——Art. 133 (1) (c)—Questions of public importance —(Indian Independence Pakistan Courts (Pending Proceedings) Act, 1952).

The questions relating to the validity and the effect of the Indian Independence Pakistan Courts (Pending Proceedings) Act, 1952, have wide public importance. They are questions of law. A I R 1944 All 273 (F B), Foll.

Thus the questions, whether the Indian Independence Pakistan Courts (Pending Proceedings) Act, 1952, was intended to have any retrospective effect and that in any case it may be applied to pending proceedings; and that the Act itself was ultra vires inasmuch as it offended against certain provisions contained in the Constitution, had to be decided in order to dispose of the case. ——Art. 133 (1) (c)—Substantial question of law — Court in execution combining reliefs under S. 51 (b) and S. 51 (d), Civil P. C. — No substantial question of law.

Held, that no case had been made for the Supreme Court to examine the principles applicable to a case where a decree-holder asks for the assistance of the executing Court by the appointment of a receiver to sell the charged assets. The decree-holder might have made out a better case for the relief asked for and if any objection had been taken to that course the Court might have given the parties an opportunity of using further affidavits on that point. This question which was never canvassed before the executing Court was raised before the Division Bench in appeal probably because no other loophole could be found in the order. But in appeal the will was held as forged. While second appeal in Privy Council was pending R and A executed two settlement deeds. By one R relinquished her claim in lieu of monthly maintenance. By another A got absolute title. Question whether properties could be dealt with in that ——Art. 133—Substantial question of law — Suit in name of dissolved firm — Maintainability — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110, O. 30, R. 1).

The firm must still be deemed to be alive for the purpose of the recovery of a sum which was found due at the time when the firm was taken over by the new firm and the previous accounts were gone into and settled. Consequently, the suit could not fail on the ground that a suit in the name of a dissolved firm was not maintainable. Where certain lands, worth more than Rs. 20,000 in value in the possession of cultivating tenants who defaulted in the payment of rents, is sold to a purchaser—the vendor also assigning the arrears of rent due from the tenants to such purchaser—the question whether the purchaser can rely on the arrears accrued due prior to the purchase as a ground for eviction of the tenants under the Madras Cultivating Tenants Protection Act (25 of 1955) and the question whether in such a case the Court in the suit for eviction, can pass a rolled up order determining the arrears and ordering eviction if the amount is not paid within the time allowed by it or whether the Court should first pass an order determining the arrears and give some time for the payment thereof before passing an order for eviction, are substantial questions of law and from a decision of the High Court on those questions, in a revision petition against the order of the Revenue Divisional Officer, leave to appeal under Art. 133 (1) (b) of the Constitution of India should be granted. In any event it will be a fit case for appeal to Supreme Court under Art. 133 (1) (c). Section 6-B of the Madras Cultivating Tenants Protection Act expressly provides that the Revenue Divisional Officer shall be deemed to be a Court subordinate to the High Court for the purpose of S. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. ——Art. 133 — Substantial question of law — Interpretation of statutory rule — (Sales Tax — Madras General Sales Tax (Turnover and Assessment) Rules (1939), R. 18 (2)).

An interpretation of a statutory rule itself involves a substantial question of law.

Rule 18 (2) of the Madras General Sales Tax (Turnover and Assessment) Rules came up for interpretation for the first time before the Madras High Court in T R. C. Nos. 25 and 26 of 1954 and a few days later the principle of that decision was applied in T. R. C. Nos. 51 and 52 of 1953. Under Art. 133 (3) of the Constitution no appeal lies to the Supreme Court from the judgment, decree, or final order of one Judge of a High Court, and it has been the consistent practice of the Supreme Court not to encourage applications for Special Leave against the decisions of the High Courts rendered in second appeals; but in cases where the petitioners for Special Leave against the second appellate judgments delivered by a single Judge of the High Court are able to satisfy the Supreme Court that in allowing a second appeal, the High Court has interfered with questions of fact and has thus contravened the limits prescribed by S. 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is not easy to reject their claim for Special Leave. ● —Arts. 133 and 136 — Concurrent findings of fact – Practice of Supreme Court — Supreme Court would not interfere unless there are exceptional circumstances — Fact that Supreme Court does not agree with reasons given by High Court for such finding is no ground for interference

In an appeal the Supreme Court will not ordinarily interfere with the concurrent findings of the Courts below on questions of pure fact and review the entire evidence unless there are exceptional circumstances justifying a departure from the normal practice. Even if the Supreme Court did not agree with the reasons given by the High Court for arriving at the concurrent finding of fact, viz, that there was a transaction of sale it could not be said that there was an exceptional circumstance justifying interference with the finding. ● ——Art. 133—Powers of Supreme Court—Concurrent findings of fact—Supreme Court will not interfere except in exceptional cases.

Art. 133 does not in any way limit the scope of an appeal provided a proper and valid certificate is issued by the High Court thereunder. The Supreme Court has undoubtedly the power to review the concurrent findings of fact arrived at by the lower Courts in appropriate cases. But it has been a long standing practice of the Privy Council not to interfere with such findings based upon relevant evidence, except under extraordinary and exceptional circumstances.

The same practice has been adopted and followed by the Supreme Court since its inception. AIR 1950 S C 172 and AIR 1951 S C 177 and AIR 1953 S C 235

21 (d). Interference with findings of fact.

● ——Art. 133 — Supreme Court will not examine evidence at large specially when the High Court and the Court below have drawn identical conclusion from it. See Supreme Court—Practice. AIR 1965 S C 1549.

● ——Arts. 133 and 136 — Appeal against order in writ proceedings —Appreciation of affidavit evidence — Interference with finding of fact — Practice of Supreme Court — Decision of High Court that impugned order was invalid on ground of personal bias — Matters to be considered in appreciating evidence.

On a writ petition challenging the order of the Minister passed under S. 68-D (2), Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, the High Court, on the affidavit evidence, came to the conclusion that the Minister was incompetent to deal with the matter on ground of his personal bias, and that, therefore, the order should be set aside. The High Court, however, granted a certificate of fitness for appeal to the Supreme Court.

Held, that the question before the High Court being one of appreciating the affidavit evidence, normally the Supreme Court would be reluctant to interfere with the findings of fact recorded by the High Court on such affidavit evidence but when, as in the present case the result of the finding of fact as to bias affects the status of a person holding a high public office in the discharge of his duties as a quasi-judicial tribunal, the question about his bias needs to be carefully examined before an adverse verdict is pronounced against him. The Court must always enquire on which side the probabilities lie and must scrutinise the affidavits very critically to determine which of them deserves to be believed. Naturally, in dealing with such a question of fact in appeal, the Supreme Court is normally inclined to attach importance to the findings of fact recorded by the High Court itself.

Held, that the High Court was not in error in coming to the conclusion that the Minister for Transport who dealt with the schemes for nationalisation under S. 68-D (2) of the Act was incompetent to deal with them on ground of personal bias and that no case had been made out for its interference. ● ——Art. 133 — Finding as to factum of adoption by lower Courts — Interference in appeal by Supreme Court — See Hindu Law — Adoption. A I R 1964 S C 136.

● ——Art. 133 — Powers of Supreme Court—Power to consider evidence on record.

Though High Court had formulated the two questions, viz., (1) assuming the sale in favour of the plaintiff to be real whether the sale was intended by the transferor to defeat or delay creditors, and (2) assuming the sale was voidable under S. 53 (1) of the Transfer of Property Act whether the plaintiff was a bona fide purchaser in good faith, as distinct and separate questions. In the discussion which followed it did not keep these two points separate. Further there were some statements or assumptions made in the judgment of the High Court which were entirely not warranted by the facts.

Held, that in view of this, the Supreme Court would itself consider the entire evidence on the record and arrive at its own conclusions on such evidence in record to the two issues; and if it became necessary to arrive at any finding as regards the reality of the sale, it would remand the appeal to the High Court for the matter being considered since the High Court had expressly reserved the consideration of that question. ■ —Art. 133—Findings of fact—Interference—ILR (1957) Ker 104 (FB), Reversed on facts.

Ordinarily the Supreme Court would not go behind the findings of fact by the final Court of facts but where the conclusion of the High Court is based partly on a misreading of the evidence and partly on the non-advertence to important material evidence bearing on the question and the probabilities of the case the Supreme Court would interfere with the findings by examining the evidence. The decision of the Industrial Tribunal on a question of fact which it has jurisdiction to determine is not liable to be questioned in proceedings under Art. 226 of the Constitution and the Supreme Court entertaining an appeal from the decision of the High Court, should also not interfere with that finding of fact. Leave to appeal cannot be given to a party under Art. 133 (1) (c) for the purpose of raising a point for the first time after the case disposed of. A I R 1940 Mad 810 and AIR 1953 Assam 101, Ref. 1955 Cr L J 747 : AIR 1955 V P 17 (19) (Pt C) (Pr 10).

22. Limitation.

——Art. 133—Limitation—'Application for leave to appeal' referred to in S. 12, Limitation Act (1963) does not exclude 'application for certificate of fitness' contemplated by Art. 132 of Limitation Act (1963) — Application for leave to appeal under Art. 133 (1) (a) of the Constitution — Benefit of S. 12 (2) and (3) can be availed of. See Limitation Act (1963), S. 12. A I R 1965 Cal 630 (DB).

——Art. 133 — Appeal — Limitation Act (1908), Art. 179—Applicability - (C. P. Code (1908), Ss. 109, 110 and O. 45, R. 2)—(Supreme Court Rules, (1950), O. 10, R. 1).

Where the right of appeal is given by the Constitution, and given by way of defining the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, the procedure for preferring and prosecuting such appeals is laid down in the C. P. Code. In so far as the Code also contains provisions relating to the right of appeal and in so far as Ss. 109 and 110 lay down in what cases an appeal shall lie, there may be a duplication. That, however, does not involve the consequence that appeals contemplated by Art. 133 of the Constitution are not governed by the Code. An appeal to the Supreme Court from a judgment, decree or order passed in a civil proceeding, is an appeal under the C. P. Code as well. Article 179 of the Limitation Act applies by its language directly to appeals to the Supreme Court from judgments, orders or decree passed in Civil Proceedings. 62 Cal W N 155 : AIR 1958 Cal 296 (296, 297) (Prs 2, 4, 5, 6) (DB).

——Art. 133—Leave to appeal—Limitation—Starting point—Date of signing cost sheet.

In computing the period of limitation for the purpose of an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court against a judgment of the High Court passed in its revisional jurisdiction, the date on which the cost sheet was signed by the Assistant Registrar cannot be taken as the starting point of limitation, nor can the period between the date of the judgment and the date on which the cost sheet was signed be deducted. The cost sheet is not a decree within the meaning of R. 8 (4) of Ch. VI of the Rules of the Appellate Side of the Calcutta High Court. ILR (1954) 1 Cal 438 : 56 C W N 562 : A I R 1953 Cal 13 (15) (Prs 10, 11) (DB).

——Arts. 133 and 227 (2) (b) - Application for leave to appeal to Supreme Court — Limitation — [C. P. Code (1908), O. 45, R. 3].

Chapter 8-A, Vol. V of the Rules and Orders of the Punjab High Court contains rules framed by the High Court regarding appeals to His Majesty in Council. Rules in Ch. 9 were framed by the High Court regarding appeals to the Federal Court. There is neither any authority nor any rule showing that any one of these chapters has been made applicable to appeals to the Supreme Court. In view of this, rule which is laid down in A I R 1950 E P 195 at p. 198 becomes inapplicable. Hence, there is no force in the contention that there is no proper application made within the time allowed by the Limitation Act for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. 55 Pun L R 512 : A I R 1954 Punj 65 (65, 66) (Pr 6) (DB).

1. Scope of the Article.

——Arts. 134 (1) and 136 — Appeal on facts.

Per Venkatarama Ayyar, J. — Art. 134 (1) confers a right of appeal to the Supreme Court in certain cases, in terms unqualified on question both of fact and of law, and if the scope of an appeal under Article 136 is to be extended likewise to questions of fact, then Art. 134 (1) would become superfluous. It is obvious that the intention of the Constitution in providing for an appeal on facts under Art. 134 (1) (a) and (b) was to exclude it under Art. 136. Aher Raja Kihma v. State of Saurashtra, 1956 Mad W N 665 : (1956) S C J 243 : 1956 Cr L J 426: (1956) 1 Mad L J (S C) 135 : 1956 S C A 440 : 9 Sau L R 109 : (1955) 2 S C R 1285 : 1957 Andh L T 92 : 1956 All W R (Sup) 60: AIR 1956 S C 217 (225, 226) (Pt F) (Pr 31).

——Art. 134 — Proceedings not covered by Art. 133 or 134—Remedy is under Art. 136 - Proceedings like proceedings before Election Tribunals are not within purview of either Art. 133 or Art. 134. See Ibid, Art. 136. AIR 1956 Ajmer 40 (1).

——Art. 134 — Applicability — Proceedings under Legal Practitioners Act.

Article 134 applies only to criminal proceedings and not to proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act which are more administrative in character and concern merely the maintenance of the discipline among the officers of the Court. 1956 Cr L J 358 (1) : AIR 1956 Ajmer 40 (1) (40) (Pt A) (Pr 1).

——Arts. 134, 132 and 133—Scope of.

Articles 132 and 134 have to be taken together. Art. 132 was intended to confer a right of appeal in every case whether civil or criminal (or other proceeding) if the case involved a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution. Article 133 intended to confer a right of appeal against any judgment, decree or final order of a High Court in a civil proceeding. Similarly Art. 134 was intended to confer a right of appeal against any judgment, final order or sentence of a High Court in a criminal proceeding.

The words of Art. 134 used are not 'criminal proceedings in a High Court' or 'criminal proceeding before a High Court'. There the word 'of' can only refer back to the phrase 'any judgment, final order or sentence' and not to the word 'proceeding'.

Where on an appeal against the order of acquittal, the High Court remanded the case for retrial, and the accused applied for a certificate that it is a fit case for appeal to the Supreme Court; Held, that the order of the High Court was not a 'final order' within the meaning of Art. 134 and the applicant was not entitled to the certificate. 1953 A M L J 130 : 1954 Cr L J 540 : AIR 1954 Ajmer 18 (1) (18) (Prs 4, 5, 7).

——Art. 134— Scope — Order in proceeding that is neither civil nor criminal—Appeal to Supreme Court, when lies. See Ibid Art. 132. AIR 1957 All 505 (DB).

——Art. 134—Appeals to Supreme Court—Procedure for obtaining leave under Art. 132—Scheme under Art. 132 and Arts. 133 and 134 as regards appeals to the Supreme Court is different. See Ibid, Art. 132. AIR 1961 Cal 527 (DB).

——Arts. 134 and 20 (2)—Scope — No conflict exists between Articles — Article 134 recognising right of appeal from acquittal does not give way to Art. 20 (2)— Section 417, Criminal P. C. conferring right of appeal against acquittal is not ultra vires of Art. 20 (2) of Constitution—(Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 417).

There is no conflict between Art. 134 and Art. 20 (2) of the Constitution necessitating preference being given to Art. 20 (2). An accused cannot be said to have been convicted or acquitted, as a result of a judgment passed in the course of 'prosecution and punishment,' if that judgment is still open to appeal to a Court of higher jurisdiction and it has been held under S. 403, Criminal P. C., corresponding to Art. 20 (2). that an appeal is not a second trial but only a continuation of the trial in the Sessions Court. It also follows that the institution of an appeal under S. 417, Criminal P. C. by the Government against an acquittal is not tantamount to the prosecution and punishment of an accused for same offence more than once and hence S. 417, Criminal P. C. which confers the right of appeal is not ultra vires of Art. 20 (2) of the Constitution. AIR 1914 Mad 258, Ref. to. 1952 Cri L J 1720 : AIR 1952 Him Pra 81 (85, 86) (Pt B) (Pr 11).

——Arts. 134 and 372 and Criminal P. C. (5 of 1898), Ss. 195 and 476-B—High Court directing prosecution under S. 193 of the Penal Code—No automatic right of appeal to the Supreme Court.

The expression 'the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie' in section 195 (3) of the Criminal P. C. has reference to a higher Court to which an unrestricted right of appeal against the decisions of an inferior Court is provided. Merely because of the restricted and limited right of appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 134 (1) of the Constitution, it cannot be said that the Supreme Court of India is a Court of criminal appeal against the decisions of the High Court in criminal matters. So, where the High Court orders the prosecution of two Sub-Inspectors for an offence under S. 193 of the Indian Penal Code there is no automatic right of appeal to the Supreme Court under S. 476-B of the Criminal P. C. against the order. The right of appeal in criminal matters to the Supreme Court is exclusively governed by Art. 134 of the Constitution.

[On the facts, it was held that there was no question of public or private importance and not even a question of law involved and leave was refused against the order of the High Court. But it was certified that this order involved a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of Arts. 134 (1) and 372 of the Constitution.] Case-law reviewed. 1951 Mad W N 825 : 1951 Mad W N (Cri) 245 : ILR (1952) Mad 638 : (1951) 2 M L J 503 : 1952 Cr L J 61 : 64 L W 929 : AIR 1951 Mad 1060 (1062, 1063, 1064) (Pts A B) (Prs 4, 5, 6, 8, 9) (DB).

——Arts. 134, 133, 135 and 372 —Article 372 read with Art. 135 does not retain right of appeal where Arts. 133 and 134 apply — Effect of Art. 133 on S. 109 (c), Civil P. C. See Ibid, Art. 135. AIR 1951 Mad 1051 (1054, 1055) (Pt D) (Pr 6).

[Overruled in AIR 1957 S C 540.]

2. Special leave and certificate of fitness — Distinction.

——Art. 134 (1) — Comparison of Art. 136 with Arts. 133 (1) and 134 (1). See Ibid, Art. 136 (1). AIR 1963 S C 874.

——Arts. 134 (1) (c) and 136—Certificate of fitness for appeal and Special Leave—Distinction.

The power of the High Court under Art. 134 (1) (c) is more limited than the power under Art. 136 of the Constitution of the Supreme Court in the matter of granting special leave. The Supreme Court ordinarily does not interfere in matters of fact. But in special circumstances it may interfere if, in its discretion, it finds that it is necessary for the ends of justice to interfere. But so far as High Court is concerned, it has to be satisfied that the case is a fit one for leave to appeal. (1957) All W R (HC) 79 : (1957) All L J 228.

——Arts. 134 (1) (c), 136 — Grant of certificate by High Court — Considerations involved not same as those under Art. 136. 65 Mad L W 892 : (1952) 2 Mad L J 725 : 1953 Cri L J 256 : AIR 1953 Mad 66 (68, 69) (Pt A) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Arts. 134 (1) (c) and 136—Scope.

Though Art. 134 (1) is wide enough to cover a case of appeal to Supreme Court against acquittal the standard applicable in respect of Art. 134 (1) (c) is not the same as indicated in Art. 134 (1) (c) which relates to civil matters. No doubt, principles which regulate granting of special leave to appeal by Supreme Court under Art. 136 equally apply in granting leave under Art. 134 (1) (c).

It would, however, be against the policy of legislature to construe Art. 134 (1) (c) as permitting High Court to grant leave to appeal as against judgment of acquittal confirmed by High Court. The mere fact that case involves important questions of law on which there is difference of opinion between judges but which do not ultimately affect decision of appeal on merits is not a sufficient ground for granting leave under Art. 134 (1) (c). The position with regard to Supreme Court is, however, different and, in exceptional cases, it is within the prerogative of the Supreme Court to grant special leave under Art. 136 even against an order of acquittal where circumstances amounting to grave miscarriage of justice or obvious perversity or deceipt by fraud are made out. AIR 1951 Orissa 261 : AIR 1952 Hyd 40; Cr. A. No. 40 of 1952 (SC), Rel. on. Case law discussed. State of Orissa v. Minaketan Patnik. I L R (1952) Cut 678 : 1953 Cr L J 1084 : AIR 1953 Orissa 160 (163, 165, 166, 168) (Pt C) (Prs 5, 6, 13, 21) (SB).

——Arts. 134 (1) (c) and 136—Scope—Difference between.

Article 136 is not in terms identical with the provisions laid down in Art. 134 (1) (c). Under Art. 136 an absolute discretion has been given to the Supreme Court to grant special leave in any case, but under Art. 134 (1) (c) the High Court has no jurisdiction to grant any certificate unless it is of the opinion that it is a fit case for appeal. Therefore, the discretion given to the High Court is circumscribed by the provisions of Art. 134 (1) (c). 57 Punj L R 332 : ILR (1955) Punj 1345 : AIR 1956 Punj 1 (3) (Pt C) (Pr 5) (DB).

3. "Judgment, final order or sentence."

● —Art. 134 (1)—Final order—Meaning of—Interlocutory order allowing application of accused for production of document and disallowing claim of privilege by Union Government — Order confirmed by High Court in revision—Not a final order.

An order cannot be said to be 'final order' within the meaning of that expression in Art. 134 of the Constitution if it does not of its own force bind or affect the rights of the parties. AIR 1951 S C 14, Rel. on. An order allowing the application of the accused for the production of a document by the Union Government and rejecting the claim of privilege by the Union Government in a pending criminal proceeding even if confirmed by the High Court in revision is only an interlocutory order and not a final order within the meaning of Art. 134 (1). It does not purport to decide the rights of the parties, namely, the State of U. P. and the accused. It enables the accused to have the said document duly proved and exhibited in the case. It relates only to a procedural step for adducing evidence. The indirect effect of that order on a third party to the proceedings, viz., the Union Government who does not seek to question that order, does not deprive the order of its interlocutory character. State of U. P. v. Col. Sujan Singh. 1964 All L J 921 : (1964) S C W R 40 : 1965 (1) Cr L J 94 : (1965) 1 S C A 437 : (1965) 2 S C J 389 : 1965 Mad L J (Cri) 623 : (1964) 7 S C R 734 : AIR 1964 S C 1897 (1900, 1901) (Pt C) (Pr 8).

——Art. 134 (1)—'Final order.'

A complaint was filed against the applicant charging him with several offences including one under section 193, I. P. Code. Against the order filing the complaint the applicant went up in appeal to the Sessions Judge under S. 476-B of Cr. P. Code. The Sessions Judge allowed the appeal and set aside the complaint so far as the offence under S. 193, I. P. Code was concerned. Against that order an application in revision was filed in the High Court and the question whether section 479-A of the Criminal Procedure Code had impliedly repealed section 476 of the Code in respect of all cases of witnesses giving or fabricating false evidence in judicial proceedings was raised. The High Court was of opinion that it should be answered in the negative. As a result of that decision, the order of the Sessions Judge was set aside and the case was sent back to him for being heard on merits. It was against this order sending the case back to the Sessions Judge for being considered on merits that the application under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution had been made :

Held that the order disposing of the application in revision could not be considered to be a final order. It was therefore not open to the High Court to certify the case to be a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court. 1960 All L J 154 : 1960 Cr L J 1534 : A I R 1960 All 728 (729, 730) (Prs 7, 9).

——Art. 134—Judgment or final order — Dismissal of application to quash proceedings under Defence of India Act on the ground that Act had expired—Revision to Sessions Judge dismissed— Further revision to High Court on same ground dismissed—Judgment or final order is that passed by the High Court and hence no appeal lies to Supreme Court. A I R 1955 N U C (All) 4432.

——Art. 134 (1) — Judgment or final order — Test is final determination of proceeding — Order for retrial is not judgment or final order—AIR 1962 Cal 113, Dissented from and held to be contrary to P. C., F. C., and S. C. decisions. A I R 1954 Cal 424 and AIR 1960 Cal 77, Foll.; A I R 1949 F C 1, Rel. on. 1962 (1) Cr L J 321 (Cal) : A I R 1962 Cal 417 (418, 419, 420) (Prs 4, 13) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Final order—Test of finality — Order granting or refusing bail not final—No certificate can be granted.

It is well settled that test of finality is that in order to be final the order should finally terminate the lis or the proceeding. An interlocutory order is neither a judgment nor a final order within the meaning of Art. 134 of the Constitution. AIR 1954 Cal 424 and AIR 1960 Cal 77, Rel. on.

Judged by the above test, an order granting or refusing bail cannot be a final order. High Court is not competent to grant a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution, (1961) 1 Cr L J 370 : A I R 1961 Cal 169 (172) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) — Final Order—Interpretation of—(Words and Phrases—Final Order).

Where the proceedings against the accused were pending in the Magistrate's Court and no final order by way of acquittal or conviction had been passed against him, the order passed by the High Court on the criminal revision petition moved by the accused could not be said to be a final order within the meaning of Art. 134 (1) of the Constitution and a certificate of fitness could not be given. AIR 1949 F C 11, Foll. 1954 Cr L J 864 : AIR 1954 Him Pra 45 (45, 46) (Pr 3).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — 'Final order' — Order on bail application—Leave to appeal.

An order on a bail petition cannot be said to be a final order within the meaning of Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution inasmuch as it does not decide the issue between the parties and as it does not result either in conviction or acquittal of the petitioners. Hence an application for leave to appeal under Art. 134 (1) (c) against the order refusing bail is incompetent. A I R 1955 Mad 512 and AIR 1958 Mad 151, applied. 1959 Mad W N 582 : 72 Mad L W 619 : (1959) 2 Mad L J 541 : 1960 Cr L J 250 : ILR (1960) Mad 81 : 1959 M L J (Cr) 960 : AIR 1960 Mad 76 (77) (Pr 2).

——Arts. 134, 132 Expl.—Provisions of Act impugned—Reference made to High Court before taking any evidence—Order of High Court deciding provisions not void — Order is not covered by explanation to Art. 132—There is neither judgment, final order nor sentence—No leave to appeal to Supreme Court can be granted, under Art. 134 either. See Ibid, Art. 132. AIR 1955 Mad 532 (DB).

● ——Art. 134 (1)—"Final order."

Order sought to be appealed from held no final order within the meaning of Art. 134 (1) and hence not appealable. A I R 1949 F C 1, Foll. State v. Ittaiavirah Apprehen. 1953 Ker L T 796 : 1954 Cr L J 652 : AIR 1954 Trav-Co 250 (250) (Pr 1) (FB).

4. Clause (1) (a).

● ——Art. 134 (1) (a) — 'Acquittal' — Meaning of — Includes acquittal of offence charged and conviction for lesser offence.

The word 'acquittal' does not mean that the trial must have ended in a complete acquittal but would also include the case where an accused has been acquitted of the charge of murder and has been convicted of a lesser offence. In that view of the matter

any judgment, decree or final order of a High Court in a civil proceeding. Similarly Art. 134 was intended to confer a right of appeal against any judgment, final order or sentence of a High Court in a criminal proceeding.

The words of Art. 134 used are not 'criminal proceedings in a High Court' or 'criminal proceeding before a High Court'. There the word 'of' can only refer back to the phrase 'any judgment, final order or sentence' and not to the word 'proceeding'.

Where on an appeal against the order of acquittal, the High Court remanded the case for retrial, and the accused applied for a certificate that it is a fit case for appeal to the Supreme Court; Held, that the order of the High Court was not a 'final order' within the meaning of Art. 134 and the applicant was not entitled to the certificate. 1953 A M L J 130 : 1954 Cr L J 540 : AIR 1954 Ajmer 18 (1) (18) (Prs 4, 5, 7).

——Arts. 134 and 20 (2)—Scope — No conflict exists between Articles — Article 134 recognising right of appeal from acquittal does not give way to Art. 20 (2)— Section 417, Criminal P. C. conferring right of appeal against acquittal is not ultra vires of Art. 20 (2) of Constitution—(Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 417).

There is no conflict between Art. 134 and Art. 20 (2) of the Constitution necessitating preference being given to Art. 20 (2). An accused cannot be said to have been convicted or acquitted, as a result of a judgment passed in the course of 'prosecution and punishment,' if that judgment is still open to appeal to a Court of higher jurisdiction and it has been held under S. 403, Criminal P. C., corresponding to Art. 20 (2). that an appeal is not a second trial but only a continuation of the trial in the Sessions Court. It also follows that the institution of an appeal under S. 417, Criminal P. C. by the Government against an acquittal is not tantamount to the prosecution and punishment of an accused for same offence more than once and hence S. 417, Criminal P. C. which confers the right of appeal is not ultra vires of Art. 20 (2) of the Constitution. AIR 1914 Mad 258, Ref. to. 1952 Cri L J 1720 : AIR 1952 Him Pra 81 (85, 86) (Pt B) (Pr 11).

——Arts. 134 and 372 and Criminal P. C. (5 of 1898), Ss. 195 and 476-B—High Court directing prosecution under S. 193 of the Penal Code—No automatic right of appeal to the Supreme Court.

The expression 'the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie' in section 195 (3) of the Criminal P. C. has reference to a higher Court to which an unrestricted right of appeal against the decisions of an inferior Court is provided. Merely because of the restricted and limited right of appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 134 (1) of the Constitution, it cannot be said that the Supreme Court of India is a Court of criminal appeal against the decisions of the High Court in criminal matters. So, where the High Court orders the prosecution of two Sub-Inspectors for an offence under S. 193 of the Indian Penal Code there is no automatic right of appeal to the Supreme Court under S. 476-B of the Criminal P. C. against the order. The right of appeal in criminal matters to the Supreme Court is exclusively governed by Art. 134 of the Constitution.

[On the facts, it was held that there was no question of public or private importance and not even a question of law involved and leave was refused against the order of the High Court. But it was certified that this order involved a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of Arts. 134 (1) and 372 of the Constitution.] Case-law reviewed. 1951 Mad W N 825 : 1951 Mad W N (Cri) 245 : ILR (1952) Mad 638 : (1951) 2 M L J 503 : 1952 Cr L J 61 : 64 L W 929 : AIR 1951 Mad 1060 (1062, 1063, 1064) (Pts A, B) (Prs 4, 5, 6, 8, 9) (DB).

2. Special leave and certificate of fitness — Distinction.

——Art. 134 (1) — Comparison of Art. 136 with Arts. 133 (1) and 134 (1). See Ibid, Art. 136 (1). AIR 1963 S C 874.

——Arts. 134 (1) (c) and 136—Certificate of fitness for appeal and Special Leave—Distinction.

The power of the High Court under Art. 134 (1) (c) is more limited than the power under Art. 136 of the Constitution of the Supreme Court in the matter of granting special leave. The Supreme Court ordinarily does not interfere in matters of fact. But in special circumstances it may interfere if, in its discretion, it finds that it is necessary for the ends of justice to interfere. But so far as High Court is concerned, it has to be satisfied that the case is a fit one for leave to appeal. (1957) All W R (HC) 79 : (1957) All L J 228.

——Arts. 134 (1) (c), 136 — Grant of certificate by High Court — Considerations involved not same as those under Art. 136. 65 Mad L W 892 : (1952) 2 Mad L J 725 : 1953 Cri L J 256 : AIR 1953 Mad 66 (68, 69) (Pt A) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Arts. 134 (1) (c) and 136—Scope.

Though Art. 134 (1) is wide enough to cover a case of appeal to Supreme Court against acquittal the standard applicable in respect of Art. 134 (1) (c) is not the same as indicated in Art. 134 (1) (c) which relates to civil matters. No doubt, principles which regulate granting of special leave to appeal by Supreme Court under Art. 136 equally apply in granting leave under Art. 134 (1) (c).

It would, however, be against the policy of legislature to construe Art. 134 (1) (c) as permitting High Court to grant leave to appeal as against judgment of acquittal confirmed by High Court. The mere fact that case involves important questions of law on which there is difference of opinion between judges but which do not ultimately affect decision of appeal on merits is not a sufficient ground for granting leave under Art. 134 (1) (c). The position with regard to Supreme Court is, however, different and, in exceptional cases, it is within the prerogative of the Supreme Court to grant special leave under Art. 136 even against an order of acquittal where circumstances amounting to grave miscarriage of justice or obvious perversity or deceipt by fraud are made out. ——Arts. 134 (1) (c) and 136—Scope—Difference between.

Article 136 is not in terms identical with the provisions laid down in Art. 134 (1) (c). Under Art. 136 an absolute discretion has been given to the Supreme Court to grant special leave in any case, but under Art. 134 (1) (c) the High Court has no jurisdiction to grant any certificate unless it is of the opinion that it is a fit case for appeal. Therefore, the discretion given to the High Court is circumscribed by the provisions of Art. 134 (1) (c). 57 Punj L R 332 : ILR (1955) Punj 1345 : AIR 1956 Punj 1 (3) (Pt C) (Pr 5) (DB).

3. "Judgment, final order or sentence."

● —Art. 134 (1)—Final order—Meaning of—Interlocutory order allowing application of accused for production of document and disallowing claim of privilege by Union Government — Order confirmed by High Court in revision—Not a final order.

An order cannot be said to be 'final order' within the meaning of that expression in Art. 134 of the Constitution if it does not of its own force bind or affect the rights of the parties. AIR 1951 S C 14, Rel. on. An order allowing the application of the accused for the production of a document by the Union Government and rejecting the claim of privilege by the Union Government in a pending criminal proceeding even if confirmed by the High Court in revision is only an interlocutory order and not a final order within the meaning of Art. 134 (1). It does not purport to decide the rights of the parties, namely, the State of U. P. and the accused. It enables the accused to have the said document duly proved and exhibited in the case. It relates only to a procedural step for adducing evidence. The indirect effect of that order on a third party to the proceedings, viz., the Union Government who does not seek to question that order, does not deprive the order of its interlocutory character. State of U. P. v. Col. Sujan Singh. 1964 All L J 921 : (1964) S C W R 40 : 1965 (1) Cr L J 94 : (1965) 1 S C A 437 : (1965) 2 S C J 389 : 1965 Mad L J (Cri) 623 : (1964) 7 S C R 734 : AIR 1964 S C 1897 (1900, 1901) (Pt C) (Pr 8).

——Art. 134 (1)—'Final order.'

A complaint was filed against the applicant charging him with several offences including one under section 193, I. P. Code. Against the order filing the complaint the applicant went up in appeal to the Sessions Judge under S. 476-B of Cr. P. Code. The Sessions Judge allowed the appeal and set aside the complaint so far as the offence under S. 193, I. P. Code was concerned. Against that order an application in revision was filed in the High Court and the question whether section 479-A of the Criminal Procedure Code had impliedly repealed section 476 of the Code in respect of all cases of witnesses giving or fabricating false evidence in judicial proceedings was raised. The High Court was of opinion that it should be answered in the negative. As a result of that decision, the order of the Sessions Judge was set aside and the case was sent back to him for being heard on merits. It was against this order sending the case back to the Sessions Judge for being considered on merits that the application under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution had been made :

Held that the order disposing of the application in revision could not be considered to be a final order. It was therefore not open to the High Court to certify the case to be a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court. 1960 All L J 154 : 1960 Cr L J 1534 : A I R 1960 All 728 (729, 730) (Prs 7, 9).

——Art. 134—Judgment or final order — Dismissal of application to quash proceedings under Defence of India Act on the ground that Act had expired—Revision to Sessions Judge dismissed— Further revision to High Court on same ground dismissed—Judgment or final order is that passed by the High Court and hence no appeal lies to Supreme Court. A I R 1955 N U C (All) 4432.

——Art. 134 (1) — Judgment or final order — Test is final determination of proceeding — Order for retrial is not judgment or final order—AIR 1962 Cal 113, Dissented from and held to be contrary to P. C., F. C., and S. C. decisions. A I R 1954 Cal 424 and AIR 1960 Cal 77, Foll.; A I R 1949 F C 1, Rel. on. 1962 (1) Cr L J 321 (Cal) : A I R 1962 Cal 417 (418, 419, 420) (Prs 4, 13) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Final order—Test of finality — Order granting or refusing bail not final—No certificate can be granted.

It is well settled that test of finality is that in order to be final the order should finally terminate the lis or the proceeding. An interlocutory order is neither a judgment nor a final order within the meaning of Art. 134 of the Constitution. AIR 1954 Cal 424 and AIR 1960 Cal 77, Rel. on.

Judged by the above test, an order granting or refusing bail cannot be a final order. High Court is not competent to grant a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution. (1961) 1 Cr L J 370 : A I R 1961 Cal 169 (172) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) — Final Order—Interpretation of—(Words and Phrases—Final Order).

Where the proceedings against the accused were pending in the Magistrate's Court and no final order by way of acquittal or conviction had been passed against him, the order passed by the High Court on the criminal revision petition moved by the accused could not be said to be a final order within the meaning of Art. 134 (1) of the Constitution and a certificate of fitness could not be given. AIR 1949 F C 11, Foll. 1954 Cr L J 864 : AIR 1954 Him Pra 45 (45, 46) (Pr 3).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — 'Final order' — Order on bail application—Leave to appeal.

An order on a bail petition cannot be said to be a final order within the meaning of Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution inasmuch as it does not decide the issue between the parties and as it does not result either in conviction or acquittal of the petitioners. Hence an application for leave to appeal under Art. 134 (1) (c) against the order refusing bail is incompetent. ——Arts. 134, 132 Expl.—Provisions of Act impugned—Reference made to High Court before taking any evidence—Order of High Court deciding provisions not void — Order is not covered by explanation to Art. 132—There is neither judgment, final order nor sentence—No leave to appeal to Supreme Court can be granted, under Art. 134 either. See Ibid, Art. 132. AIR 1955 Mad 532 (DB).

4. Clause (1) (a).

● ——Art. 134 (1) (a) — 'Acquittal' — Meaning of — Includes acquittal of offence charged and conviction for lesser offence.

The word 'acquittal' does not mean that the trial must have ended in a complete acquittal but would also include the case where an accused has been acquitted of the charge of murder and has been convicted of a lesser offence. In that view of the matter where the High Court, on appeal, reverses the decision of the trial Court and convicts the accused of murder, it amounts to reversing of an order of acquittal and the accused is entitled to a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (a) as of right. ● —Art. 134 (1) (a) — Acquittal in trial court — Order reversed on appeal and accused sentenced to death — Accused entitled to challenge propriety of findings of facts — Scope of enquiry under Art. 134 (1) (a).

Where an order of acquittal passed against the accused by the trial judge has been reversed on appeal and he has been sentenced to death, he is entitled to challenge the correctness or the propriety of the findings of fact, and the scope of enquiry in his appeal under Art. 134 (1) (a) of the Constitution is naturally wider. (d) Powers of High Court.
(e) Who can apply.
(f) Appeal against acquittal.

5. Certificate of fitness for appeal— Clause (1) (c).

—Art. 134 (1) (c) — Scope of inquiry — Power of High Court — Certificate on pure question of fact— Grant of—If justified.

The legal position under Art. 134 (1) (c) is that it is not a case of "granting leave" but of 'certifying that the case is a fit one for appeal to Supreme Court'. "Certifying" is a strong word and a High Court is in error in granting a certificate on a mere question of fact, and is not justified in passing on an appeal for determination by the Supreme Court when there are no complexities of law involved in the case, requiring an authoritative interpretation by that Court. Sidheswar Ganguly v. State of West Bengal. 1958 S C J 349: 1958 S C A 147 : 1958 All W R (H C) 391 : 1958 Pat L R (S C) 1: 1958 All Cr R 277: 1958 Mad L J (Cr) 311: 1958 Cr L J 273 : 1958 S C R 749: AIR 1958 S C 143 (145) (Pt C) (Pr 3).

● —Art. 134 (1) (c)—Certificate of fitness—There must be indication, that High Court has applied its mind—Merely saying "Leave to appeal is granted" towards end of judgment, is not compliance.

Article 134 (1) (a) and (b) lay down two conditions which cover a right of appeal to the Supreme Court. If the High Court 'certifies' that the case is a fit one for appeal, Art. 133 (1) (c) applies as an extraordinary case.

Where the High Court had merely said in the last sentence of the judgment "Leave to appeal to the Supreme Court is granted', and no reasons had been given.

Held, that this omission could only be regarded as indicative of the fact that the High Court did not realise the responsibility that was cast upon it by Art. 134 (1) (c) and did not realise that its discretion had to be judicially and not mechanically exercised, [Following AIR 1954 S C 457 the Supreme Court were unable to regard the appeal as properly certified and so it declined to accept the appeal as one under Art. 134 (1) (c)] Baladin and Others v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 1956 Cr L J 345 : AIR 1956 S C 181 (188, 189) (Pt B) (Prs 14, 15).

● —Art. 134 (1) (c) — Certificate of fitness for appeal — Exercise of discretion. See Ibid, Art. 133 (1) (c). 1954 Cr. L J 1167 : AIR 1954 S C 457.

● —Art. 134 (1) (c) — 'Case'—Meaning.

'Case' as used in Art. 134 (1) (c) means the case of each individual accused. That would be so even if the trial had been by the High Court itself but it is even more so on appeal because, though several persons may join in presenting a common memorandum of appeal (if the Rules of the Court so permit), the appeal of each forms a separate 'case' for those purposes. That is obvious from the fact that every person who is convicted need not appeal nor need several convicts appeal at the same time under a joint memorandum; and if it were necessary to send up the 'case' as a whole it would be necessary to join even those who were acquitted so that the 'case' could be reviewed in its entirety. That is not the meaning of the word in the context of Art. 134 (1). Nar Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (1955) S C R 238 : (1954) 2 M L J 122 : 1954 S C J 570 : 1954 All W R 457 : 1954 All L J 438 : 1954 S C A 642 : 1954 Cr. L J 1167 : AIR 1954 S C 457 (458) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

● —Art. 134 (1) (c)—Reasons for certificate of fitness — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 376.

If in any particular State there is only one Judicial Commissioner as the ultimate appellate authority, and if the confirmation of sentence of death has to be made by him, the procedure laid down must be followed. The fact that there is not a Bench of two judges as in the High Courts to deal with death sentences is not an adequate ground for converting the Supreme Court into an ordinary Court of appeal and confirmation in such matters; Kalawati v. State of H. P., 1953 S C J 144 : 1953 Cr L J 668 : 1953 All W R (Supp) 52 : 1953 S C R 546 : 1953 S C A 660 : AIR 1953 S C 131 (132) (Pt A) (Pr 6).

The provisions of Art. 134 (1) (c) do not contemplate an appeal against an order of acquittal or an appeal by the complainant against the quashing of the proceedings.

The State or a complainant cannot come forward and ask for leave to appeal under Art. 134 (1) (c). Even if the case involves questions of law it would not be a fit case in which High Court should grant leave to appeal against the order of quashing of the proceedings. AIR 1954 S C 20; AIR 1953 Orissa 160, Foll. (1957) All W R (H C) 79 : (1957) All L J 228.

——Arts. 134 (1) (c), 132 (1) and 136 (1) — Interpretation—Right of appeal in criminal matters — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109).

From the provisions of Arts. 132 (1), 134 and 136 (1), it is clear that the intention of the Constitution is to retain the finality of decisions of High Courts in criminal matters until Parliament makes a law under Art. 134 (2), and to provide for no appeals in criminal matters as of right, except in cases where an accused has been sentenced to death and has had no chance to appeal against his conviction by the High Court. It cannot be said that there is anything in the history or the setting of sub-clause (c) of Art. 134 (1) which calls for, a liberal construction.

The words of sub-cl. (c) of Art. 134 (1) are similar to those of the former clause (c) of S. 109, C. P. Code Disputes in criminal proceedings are generally of great private importance as they involve the liberty of the person accused. Nevertheless the Constitution has restricted the normal right of appeal. Therefore, the construction of Cl. (c) of S. 109, Civil P. C., cannot be bodily imported into the construction of sub-cl. (c) of Art. 134 (1) of the Constitution. ILR (1956) Andh Pra 441: 1956 Andh W R 826: 1957 Cri L Jour 1213 : A I R 1957 Andh Pra 871 (872, 873) (Pt A) (Prs 3, 5, 6) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Certificate of fitness for appeal — Question whether there was proper sanction — (Prevention of Corruption Act (1947), S. 6).

Whether or not there was a proper sanction in the case is a question serious enough to justify giving the petitioner leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. 1955 Cri L J 1169: AIR 1955 Cal 430 (432) (Pt C) (Pr 8) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Portion of case only referred to High Court under S. 307, Criminal P. C. — Grave irregularity in hearing reference by High Court — Leave to appeal granted — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 307).

Where in a case tried with the aid of Jury, an Additional Sessions Judge disagreeing with the verdict of the Jury decided to refer the case to the High Court, but in complete disregard of sub-s. (2) of S. 307 acquitted the accused of certain offences and referred their case to the High Court with respect to other charges only:

Held, that a grave irregularity had occurred, that the reference was not properly dealt with by the High Court and that that fact was sufficient to justify a certificate of fitness for appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 134 (1) (c). 1955 Cri L J 100: A I R 1955 Cal 27 (28) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Arts. 134 (1) (c) and 136 — Certificate of fitness —When to be granted.

In construing Art. 134 (1) (c) it will not be correct to assume that the principles governing the grant of a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) and the granting of special leave by the Supreme Court under Art. 136 are the same.

Article 134 (1) (c) must therefore, be construed independently of Art. 136.

Where the High Court on a consideration of the evidence in the case directs a prosecution under S. 193, Penal Code, of the petitioner for swearing a false affidavit and it is impossible to find any question of public or private importance or even a question of law, the case is not one such as to justify the granting of a certificate of fitness under Art. 134 (1) (c). ——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Leave to appeal to Supreme Court under — When and under what conditions should be given.

The conditions necessary to be present for the High Court to grant leave to appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution are practically the same as the conditions which ought to exist for the Supreme Court to grant special leave to appeal. Such leave can be granted only where special circumstances are shown to exist and unless it is shown that exceptional circumstances exist and that severe and grave injustice has been done and that the case in question presents features of sufficient gravity to warrant a review of the decision appealed against, leave to appeal cannot be granted.

A decision by High Court that in proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., the preliminary order should be passed immediately on the receipt of the application and that if there is any delay on the part of the Magistrate in passing such an order, such delay on the part of the Court should not affect the rights of parties, is not a point of such a general and public importance as to warrant the granting of leave to appeal to the Supreme Court against it. 1951 Mad W N 198 : 1951 Mad W N (Cri) 50:ILR (1951) Mad 387: 64 L W 289 (2) : (1951) 1 M L J 296:1952 Cri L J 95 : AIR 1951 Mad 721 (721, 722) (Prs 3, 4, 6, 7) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Discretion—Granting of leave is discretionary.

Under Art. 134 (1) (c) the granting of leave to appeal is discretionary and appeal does not lie as a matter of right as under sub-cls. (a) and (b) of Cl. (1) of that Article, 1956 Cri L J 1411 : AIR 1956 Manipur 44 (48) (Pt D) (Pr 13).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Certifies that 'the case is a fit one for appeal' — Meaning.

The phrase "the case is a fit one for appeal" gives wide discretion to the High Court to grant or refuse to grant the certificate even if on the merits a substantial question of law is involved and the Court when granting the certificate should exercise its discretion so as to advance justice and prevent injustice. In any case the phrase means something more than a question of a law or a substantial question of law and that the point involved must be of general importance. Where the question is whether investigation into the affairs of a defunct company is limited to S. 237, Companies Act, and whether the conduct of the alleged delinquent officers of such a company can be investigated by the police or the investigation is limited to S. 237, Companies Act, only, it cannot be said that such officers are so numerous in this country that the matter should be considered of public importance. 57 Punj L R 332 : ILR (1955) Punj 1345 : AIR 1956 Punj 1 (4) (Pt E) (Pr 7) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Certificate of fitness for appeal — Grant of — Considerations.

The grant of a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) is not a matter of course, but the power has to be exercised after considering what difficult question of law or principle was involved in the case which should require the further consideration of the Supreme Court.

When proceedings are quashed on a finding that it would be an absue of the process of High Court to continue the criminal proceedings which do not appear to be bona fide, no question of law arises after this finding, and it cannot be held that there exist any exceptional or special circumstances in which leave should be granted.

Where there is no ambiguity about the law, there can be no ground for granting leave merely because a question of law was involved. 1957 All W R (HC) 79 : 1957 All L J 228.

——Arts. 134 and 136 — Leave to appeal to Supreme Court in criminal matters — Powers of High Court — Question of reliability of the witnesses for the prosecution — If justifies grant of certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c).

The High Court in granting leave to appeal to Supreme Court in criminal matter has to be guided by the provisions of Art. 134 of the Constitution. If it falls under Art. 134 (1) (a) or (b) then leave has to be granted; otherwise it can be granted only if it is a fit case for appeal to the Supreme Court and the question whether it is or is not a fit case must be decided in accordance with the principles laid down by the Privy Council and which have been reaffirmed by the Supreme Court.

The powers of the Supreme Court under Art. 136 are wider and is not limited by any provision of the Constitution.

But the High Court in granting leave must be governed by Art. 134 and the interpretation put upon it and it cannot be held that the question whether the evidence, believed in by the Sessions Judge and the High Court, is or is not reliable, justifies the grant of certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c). 1952 All L J 566 : 1952 A W R (HC) 502 : 1952 Cr L J 1755 : AIR 1952 All 991 (992) (Pts A, B) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Certificate that a criminal care is a fit one for appeal to Supreme Court — Principles governing the grant of.

A certificate that a criminal case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court should be granted only when the case fulfils the requirements laid down by the Privy Council in granting special leave to His Majesty in Council in criminal cases. It can be granted only in exceptional cases where injustice of a serious nature or character has occurred not because a different view could be taken of the evidence than has been taken by the High Court, nor because there has been an error in procedure in the proper admission of evidence without which the same conclusion might properly have been arrived at, but because an error in procedure has been committed which is of so grave a character as deprives the accused of a constitutional or statutory right to be tried in a particular way or the error has been carried to such an extent as to cause the outcome of the proceedings to be contrary to fundamental principles which justice requires to be observed, or there has been some disregard of legal principles of natural justice or the law upon a materiel point is in doubt or has been differently interpreted by the various High Courts in India. 1951 A L J 473 : 1952 R D (HC) 70 : ILR (1953) 2 All 471: AIR 1952 All 630 (632, 633) (Prs 13, 14, 21, 22a, 23) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Conditions for issuing certificate — Criminal P. C., S. 537.

Under S. 537, Criminal P. C., the powers of interference of a Court of appeal are limited to cases where in fact there has been a failure of justice. It follows that the question canvassed in an application under Art. 134 (1) (c) must be one, the decision of which in a way different from that by the High Court would affect the conviction or acquittal in the case. The likelihood would amount to a certainty in cases where some error in the judgment of the High Court is brought to its notice, which would warrant a review of the judgment. These would be the exceptional cases in which the High Court ought to issue the certificate. Other cases would be those in which a question of law of unusual difficulty is raised such as question in which there is conflict between different High Courts or questions in which the High Court itself feels a doubt as to the correctness of its decision, or there may be questions of law of great public importance though not involving the interpretation of the Constitution.

Where the sum and substance of the contention was that there was an omission to refer to S. 34, Penal Code, in the charge under S. 302, Penal Code.

Held, that it raised only the question whether any prejudice had been caused. It was a question of fact which the High Court had discussed at length in their judgment and found that there was no prejudice. There was thus no error in the judgment which would justify a review thereof. ILR (1956) Andh-Pra 441 : 1956 Andh W R 826 : 1957 Cr L J 1213 : AIR 1957 Andh Pra 871 (873, 874) (Pr B) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

——Art. 134 (c) — Certificate of fitness for appeal to Supreme Court — Grant of — Requirements.

The test or the standard which would guide the High Courts in determining whether a certificate under Art. 134 (c) of the Constitution should be granted or not ought to be the same which the Supreme Court may apply in exercising its discretion when asked to grant special leave under Art. 136 of Constitution. The standard in the two Courts cannot be different as the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court which is to be exercised after a certificate from a High Court or after special leave under Art. 136, is the same. It would not be proper, therefore for a High Court to refuse to certify a case in which the Supreme Court may consider it proper to allow special leave. Conversely, a High Court may not certify a case as a fit one for appeal to the Suppreme Court where special leave to appeal would be refused by the Supreme Court. The test under both the Articles must be the same.

The Supreme Court is not a Court of appeal in matters not covered by Cls. (a) and (b) of Art. 134 or possibly Art. 132; Cl. (c) of Art. 134, therefore, would cover cases in which the aggrieved party is not entitled to appeal as of right and in which the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and afterwards the Federal Court of India exercised criminal appellate jurisdiction.

The High Court will not ordinarily certify that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court unless it thinks the final order passed by it is unfit to remain or has doubts as to its fitness to remain, whether on facts or in law, without a certificate as prescribed by Art. 134 (c). 1952 Cri L J 381 : 55 C W N 117 : ILR (1951) 3 Assam 117: AIR 1951 Assam 38 (39, 40, 41) (Pts A, B) (Prs 6, 7, 11, 17) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Leave to appeal to Supreme Court — Certificate of fitness when to be granted — Principles — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 236.

The jurisdiction to certify a case as a fit one for further appeal under Art. 134 of the Constitution is to a certain extent discretionary like the jurisdiction of the judges of the divisional Court in England to give or refuse leave to appeal from their decision and is very delicate one.

Though the Privy Council was not a Court of criminal appeal, the principles laid down by that Court as essential for granting leave have been held to be applicable even in cases of leave to appeal to the Supreme Court which has been constituted a Court of criminal appeal under Art. 134 of the Constitution. (According to these principles leave to appeal to Supreme Court will not ordinarily be granted unless it is shown that exceptional and special circumstances exist, that substantial and grave injustice has been done, and that the case in question presents features of sufficient gravity to warrant a review of the decision appealed against). AIR 1951 Hyd 71; AIR 1951 Assam 38 and AIR 1951 Mad 329, Rel. on.

The accused was charged and convicted at one trial with offences under Ss. 134, 217, 263 330/71 and 389/71 Hyderabnd Penal Code. The High Court acquitted the accused of all the charges on the ground that there was a misjoinder of charges vitiating the trial and that the accused could not be convicted for abetment in absence of any charge to that effect. The Government filed an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 134 of the Constitution.

Held, that the application could not be granted especially when it raised no substantive question of law of paramount importance such as might be allowed to override the liberty earned by the accused.

There is a great divergence of opinion on the question whether an accused charged with substantive offence can be convicted for its abetment without a separate charge for it. Hence if the High Court decides the question one way and holds that the accused cannot be charged for abetment and acquits the accused, it would not be a ground for granting leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. ILR (1951) Hyd 866 : 1952 Cri L J 352 : AIR 1952 Hyd 40 (41, 42) (Pt A) (Prs 5, 7, 8, 10, 11) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Leave to appeal to Supreme Court — Grant of — Grounds — Principles to be observed.

Though Art. 134 of the Constitution constitutes the Supreme Court as a Court of criminal appeal, the right of appeal is restricted to a limited class of casee only; it does not mean that an appeal would lie to the Supreme Court as a matter of course or as of right but in cases specified therein.

Leave to appeal to the Supreme Court under S. 134 (1) (c) in criminal cases will not be granted unless it is shown that exceptional and special circumstances exist, that substantial and grave injustice has been done and that the case in question presents features of sufficient gravity to warrant a review of the decision appealed against, e. g., a neglect of fundamental rules of practice and the safe administration of criminal justice or a breach of natural justice. It would be opposed to all principles and precedents if the Supreme Court were to be a third Court of fact and, after re-weighing the evidence, come to a conclusion different from that arrived at by the trial judge and the High Court.

Where the questions involved in the case all relate only to the appreciation of evidence and the trial Court and the High Court have come to concurrent findings on the questions of fact and there is no substantial question of law and no sufficient gravity to warrant a review of the judgment of the High Court, leave will not be granted under Art. 134 (1) (c), though the accused has been convicted and sentenced to death, when the accused has had a fair trial. 40 I A 193; AIR 1936 P C 242; AIR 1945 P C 46; AIR ——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Certificate—Grant of — Principles—Substantial question of law — Construction of a document, if one such.

The Supreme Court will not entertain a criminal appeal unless exceptional circumstances exist or unless there has been a denial of fair trial or while maintaining outward semblance of a fair trial the accused had been denied it or if there are other circumstances of gravity. (AIR 1950 F C 80; AIR 1950 S C 169; AIR 1941 P C 132, Ref.).

The High Court is not entitled to ignore these principles on which the Supreme Court will admit or entertain appeals to itself, in granting leave to appeal under this Article. It is as much bound by them as any petitioner who approaches the Supreme Court for leave. (AIR 1950 Bom 380, Ref.).

The question of construction of a document is a question of law but not a substantial question of law as to entitle the applicant to grant of leave under the Art. 134(1)(c). ——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Leave to appeal to Supreme Court—Certificate of fitness—Principles — Question of interpretation of temporary Act—Quashing of proceedings against accused in view of interpretation—Case held not fit for appeal to Supreme Court.

Per Mehta J. : — To justify a grant of leave to appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 134 (1) (c), there must at least be a substantial question of law or a disregard of the forms of legal process or some violation of the principles of natural justice, or otherwise substantial or grave injustice must have been done, or it should be a matter of great public importance. The mere fact that the petitioner raised a point which may be a point of law does not justify his claim for a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c). AIR 1941 P C 132; AIR 1951 Mad 212 and AIR 1950 Orissa 235, Ref.

Where the question of law is not well settled or where there is some doubt as to the principles of law involved or there is a conflict of judicial decisions, it may be that a substantial question of law can be said to arise which may require the final adjudication by the highest Court.

The construction of a legislative provision which is no longer in force and under which no further questions on the same point can arise, cannot be said to be of great public importance so as to justify the grant of such leave.

Per Kaul C. J. : — It would not be proper for any Judge to attempt to define in what cases or classes of cases a certificate of fitness should be granted and thus to restrict the wide generality of the language advisably used by the framers of the Constitution. A Judge might indicate in a negative form a class of cases in which the certificate contemplated by Art. 134 (c) should not be granted.

Substantial and grave injustice to the party asking for leave to appeal has almost invariably been held to be the test which must be fulfilled before such leave would be granted in a criminal case.

It should not be granted if the question for consideration is only the interpretation of any section of a temporary Act which is not likely to affect a large number of cases and in respect of which it cannot be said that if the view taken by the High Court is erroneous it would result in grave and substantial injustice.

Where all that the High Court had done was to interpret the words "shall continue to remain in force until repealed or amended," as used in S. 3 of Madhya Bharat Ordinance No. 1 of 1948 and held that the use of these words could not have the effect of making a temporary Law or Order which was to remain in force for a special period, perpetual and in support of this view relied upen AIR 1941 F C 16 and in this view quashed the proceeding initiated against the accused for breach of notification under Indore Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Order, 1946 and the State filed an application for leave to appeal under Art. 134 (1) (c) against the judgment of the High Court.

Held, that the case was not fit for appeal under Art. 134 (1) (c) as there was no substantial question of law or a question of public importance involved in the case. The mere fact that the view of law taken by the High Court resulted in the acquittal of a person who had committed a breach of a rule made under a a temporary Order or in a proceeding initiated against him being quashed does not necessarily constitute grave and substantial injustice, justifying the grant of a certificate. ILR (1952) M P 97 : 1953 Cr L J 437 : AIR 1953 Madh B 35 (36, 37, 38) (Prs 10, 12, 14, 20, 22, 24) (DB).

●——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Certificate of fitness — Guiding principle.

Under Art. 134 (1) (c) a case cannot be certified as a fit one for appeal if no injustice of serious and substantial character has occurred to the petitioner and if the case does not involve such a substantial question of law as by reason of the question being unsettled or by reason of there being conflict of existing authorities as to the principle of law involved, requires an authoritative decision from the highest Court in the land. ——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Certificate of fitness — Requirements.

The conditions necessary to be satisfied for a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) are not specified but the need of a certificate implies that there should be something more than what is required for an ordinary appeal under the Code of Criminal Procedure. There should not only be, in the case substantial points of law but also exceptional and special circumstances in the case and it must also be shown that substantial and grave injustice has been done to enable the High Court to issue a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c). ——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Principles to be followed in granting certificate.

The well established principles to be followed by the High Court in granting a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) are :

(1) It should not be granted against an affirming judgment unless special or exceptional circumstances are shown to exist in consequence of which substantial and grave injustice has been done.

(2) Where, by a disregard of the forms of legal process or by a violation of the principles of natural justice or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done.

(3) Where question of outstanding difficulty or importance arise which the High Court consider should be resolved by the Supreme Court.

(4) It must be shown that there was failure of justice by reason of misapplication or omission to consider any established rule of law or natural justice.

(5) The questions of law or principle should be of outstanding importance or difficulty so as to require to be decided by the Supreme Court. ILR (1956) Cut 573 : 22 Cut L T 419 : 1957 Cri L J 78 : AIR 1957 Orissa 10 (12) (Pt A) (Pr 6) (DB).

When there is no authoritative pronouncement of the Supreme Court on the points which are substantial points of law and are likely to arise again and again and the matter was also of considerable public importance as public servants have no protection or security against undeserved remarks passed by subordinate Courts, except by invoking the inherent jurisdiction of the High Court and where the High Court improperly refuses to exercise it or erroneously exercises it, it is necessary that the party aggrieved should be permitted to seek redress in the Supreme Court as no other remedy is available. 1954 Cri LR 1785 : 20 Cut L T 523 : ILR (1954) Cut 537 : AI R 1954 Orissa 248 (251) (Pt D) (Prs 8, 9) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Scope—Criminal case—Order by High Court in revision — Leave to appeal to Supreme Court — Grant of—Conditions of — Error of law or fact or of procedure — Sufficiency — Conditions of fitness for appeal.

The Supreme Court does not act in the exercise of its power to review the course of justice in criminal cases in the free fashion of a fully constituted Court of Criminal appeal. A mere mistake on the part of the Court below will not be a sufficient ground unless it has led to injustice of a grave character. Where a certificate is sought for an appeal against an order of the High Court passed in the exercise of discretionary revisional powers, the High Court will not certify the case as a fit one for appeal unless the case involves questions of wide public importance or injustice has been caused to the petitioner of a grave character by reason of a mistake in procedure or unless there has been something so irregular or so outrageous as to shock the very basis of justice. Where there has been no want of jurisdiction, a mere error of law or fact or procedure will not be a sufficient ground to grant leave to appeal : AIR 1950 F C 80, Foll. ; 28 I A 11 ; AIR 1921 P C 25 ; AIR 1927 P C 242 Applied ; AIR 1932 P C 234 ; AIR 1928 All 220 ; AIR 1921 Pat 33; AIR 1928 Rang 187 ; AIR 1941 P C 211, Ref. ILR 29 Pat 681 : 52 Cri L J 701 : AIR 1951 Pat 437 (438) (Prs 4, 6, 7) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Leave to appeal to Supreme Court when to be granted.

The test to be applied by the High Court in granting a certificate of fitness under Art. 134 (1) (c), is not different from the one laid down by the Supreme Court in AIR 1950 S C 169 when granting special leave under Art. 136 of the Constitution. The High Court will not therefore grant leave to appeal in criminal cases, unless it is shown that exceptional and special circumstances exist, that substantial and grave injustice has been done and that the case in question presents features of sufficient gravity to warrant a review of the decision appealed against. 1953 Cri L J 1723 : AIR 1953 Sau 198 (199) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Test for granting leave.

In granting leave it must be remembered that the High Courts are, in criminal matters other than those falling under Art. 134 (1) (a) and (b), final Courts of Appeal. Test to be adopted is that there should be a substantial question of law or the infringement of some essential principles of justice. Same tests laid down by Supreme Court in Pritham Singh's case (AIR 1950 S C 169), in connection with grant of special leave are to be applied by the High Court also in granting leave : AIR 1953 Mad 66 and AIR 1952 Mys 88, Dissent.

Weight to be attached to evidence of witness on record or that conclusions were reached on an erroneous appreciation of evidence are not sufficient grounds for granting leave. 1953 Cri L J 1531 : 6 Sau L R 210 : AIR 1953 Sau 170 (171, 172, 173) (Pt A) (Prs 3, 7, 9, 10) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Certificate of fitness for appeal.

Leave to appeal is not to be granted except where some clear departure from the requirements of justice exists, nor unless by a disregard of the form of legal process or by some violation of the principle of natural justice or otherwise, substantial or grave injustice has been done. Certificate of fitness to appeal is to be granted only when special and exceptional circumstances are shown to exist : AIR 1951 Trav-Co 45, Foll. ; AIR 1931 P C 111 and AIR 1950 F C 80, Ref.; AIR 1954 S C 616, Applied. 1954 K L T 911 : 1955 Cri L J 851 : I L R (1955) T-C 168 : AIR 1955 Trav-Co 91 (92) (Pr 3) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Certificate of fitness — Grant of —Circumstances for, stated — High Court agreeing with trial Court — No exceptional circumstances for granting certificate. AIR 1955 N U C (Trav.Co) 1458 (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Principle governing grant of certificate under—Appreciation of evidence—Omission to draw adverse inference from non-production of witnesses — Consideration of the plea of "not guilty" not tendered under S. 287, Cr. P. Code — —Not sufficient grounds.

The principles which apply in granting leave in any case to appeal to the Supreme Court have also to be considered by the High Court in granting a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c).

The Supreme Court will not grant leave to appeal in criminal cases unless it is shown that exceptional and special circumstances exist, that substantial and grave injustice has been done and that the case in question presents special features, of sufficient gravity to warrant a review of decision appealed against.

The Supreme Court would not constitute itself into a third Court of facts and after reweighing the evidence come to a conclusion different from that arrived at by the trial Judge and the High Court.

There must have been a disregard to forms of legal process or some violation of principle of natural justice whereby substantial and grave injustice has resulted. 1953 Cr L J 68 : AIR 1952 Tripura 25 (25) (Pts A, B, C) (Prs 5, 6, 7).

5 (a) (i). Substantial question of law.

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Scope—Certificate of fitness —Discretion of High Court when to be exercised — High Court must be satisfied that case involves a substantial question of law or principle.

Article 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution does not state the conditions necessary for the grant of certificate. No rules under Art. 145 regulating generally the practice and procedure of the Supreme Court for the grant of certificate by the High Court have been framed. The power which is granted is no doubt discretionary but in view of the word 'certifies' it is clear that such power must be exercised with great circumspection and only in a case which is really fit for appeal. It is impossible by a formula to indicate the precise limits of such discretion. Under Art. 134 (1) (c), the Supreme Court has not been made an ordinary Court of Criminal Appeal and the High Courts should not by the certificates attempt to create a jurisdiction which was not intended. The certificate should not be granted to afford another hearing on facts unless there is some error of a fundamental character.

Article 134 (1) (c) does not confer an unlimited jurisdiction on the High Courts. The power gives a discretion but discretion must always be exercised on some judicial principles. A similar clause in Art. 133, which allows appeals in civil cases, has been consistently interpreted as including only those cases which involve a question of general public importance. That test need not necessarily be applied to a criminal case but it is clear that mere questions of fact should not be referred for decision. The Constitution does not contemplate a criminal jurisdiction for the Supreme Court except in those two cases covered by cls. (a) and (b) which provide for appeals as of right. The High Court before it certifies the case must be satisfied that it involves some substantial question of law or principle. In a criminal appeal the High Court can consider the case on law and fact and if the High Court entertains doubt about the guilt of the accused or the sufficiency of the evidence it can always give the benefit to the accused there and then. It is obvious that only a case involving something more than mere appreciation of evidence is contemplated by the Constitution for the grant of a certificate. What that may be will depend on the circumstances of the case. Babu v. State of U. P., I L R (1965) 1 All 951 : 1965 S C D 1075 : (1965) 1 S C W R 936 : 1965 (2) Cr L J 539 : (1965) 2 S C A 296 : AIR 1965 S C 1467 (1470, 1471, 1472) (Pt B) (Prs 9, 11, 14).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Certificate of fitness—Substantial question of law—Penal Code (1860), S. 21, Cl. 9 —Railways Act (1890), S. 137 (4).

The following questions were held to be substantial questions of law involved in the petition and therefore, the petitioner was held entitled to a certificate of fitness under Art. 134 (1) (c).

(1) The question as to who is to be deemed to be an 'officer' within the meaning of Cl. 9 of S. 21, Penal Code and whether it is necessary for the prosecution to prove that the duties of the charged person are or are not auxiliary to an officer wielding authority?

(2) The question whether the provisions of S. 137 (4), Railways Act, exclude all railway servants from the definition of public servants except for purposes of Chapter IX of the Penal Code?

(3) Whether Ex. P-5 could, in the circumstances of the case, be used to corroborate the oral evidence on the record? 1955 Cri L J 608 : AIR 1955 Ajmer 18 (1) (18) (Pt A) (Prs 2, 3).

——Art. 134 — Supreme Court — Leave to appeal in criminal case — Certificate of fitness — Grounds for issue of — Whether High Court has power to review or alter, judgment after it is recorded and a writ issued in terms of order — If justifies certificate being granted.

The question whether the High Court has power to review or alter its judgment in a criminal appeal, after the judgment has once been recorded and a writ in terms of that order has been issued, is an important point of law and a fit one for a certificate to be issued for appeal to the Supreme Court. 52 Cr L J 441 : 53 Bom L R 117 : AIR 1951 Bom 49 (51, 53, 55) (Prs 6, 12, 17) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Certificate of fitness — Considerations which should weigh in granting certificate —Merely raising question of law, if sufficient.

Except in cases falling under sub-cls. (a) and (b) of Art. 134 (1) in all other criminal matters the Constitution of India intends that the High Courts in the respective States in the territory of India should normally and ordinarily be the final Courts of appeal. This fact must therefore be borne in mind in deciding the question as to whether a certificate of fitness should be given in a case. There must at least be a substantial question of law; or considerations like those mentioned by Viscount Simon L. C. in A I R 1941 P C 132 should be shown to be present; or it should be a matter of great public importance. The mere fact that the petitioner raises a point which may be a point of law does not justify his claim for a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c). 52 Bom L R 534 : 1952 Cri L J 620 : AIR 1950 Bom 380 (382) (Pr 5) (DB).

—— Art. 134 (1) (c) — Certificate of fitness — Held form in which relief was granted did not raise any substantial question of law justifying grant of leave. AIR 1955 N U C (Cal) 4509.

——Art. 134 (1) (c) and 132—No substantial question of law as to interpretation of the Constitution involved—No special ground made out under Arts. 132 and 134 (1) (c) — Leave to appeal to Supreme Court refused. See Ibid, Art. 132. AIR 1953 Hyd 218.

——Art. 134 (1) (c) —Certificate of fitness — Failure to supply copies under S. 162, Proviso, Criminal P. C. —Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 162, Proviso.

Where the case in respect of which complaint was made was not investigated by the Police the accused is not entitled under the proviso to S. 162, Cr. P. C., to copies of Police statements recorded in the course of investigation of case started on the report of the accused. It is one thing to ask for statements under the proviso to section 162 and another thing to request the Court for production of some documents or statements for contradiction of a witness. This is not a question of law, and no certificate of fitness under Art. 134 (1) (c) can be granted. 1952 Cri L J 1037 : AIR 1952 Kutch 54 (55) (Pt D) (Pr 8).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Question of misjoinder of charges under Ss. 409 and 477-A, Penal Code— Substantial question of law — Omission to point out specific points under S. 342, Criminal P. C.

A substantial question of law is an important and difficult question of law on which there may be divergence of judicial opinion not set at rest by the pronouncement of the highest Court. But mere existence of a substantial question of law is not sufficient under Art. 134 (1) (c). It must also be shown that by the adverse decision on the question of law, serious injustice of a substantial nature has resulted. (Case-law, reviewed.) AIR 1928 Bom 110; AIR 1944 Oudh 122, AIR 1915 All 462; AIR 1950 F C 80; AIR 1950 S C 169; AIR 1950 Orissa 235; AIR 1951 Mad 721; AIR 1951 Pat 439 (2); AIR 1951 Kutch 30; AIR 1947 P C 67, Ref.

Section 342, Criminal P. C., requires salient points appearing in evidence against an accused must be pointed out to him and he should be asked to render explanation if he so desired. (AIR 1933 P C 124.) But it does not follow that failure to do so would necessarily vitiate the trial. (AIR 1946 Bom 465, Foll.) 1952 Cr L J 1025 : AIR 1952 Kutch 51 (53) (Pts A, B) (Prs 6, 8).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Case involving question of law.

It is not necessary that in every case where a point of law is raised the matter should be certified as fit for appeal. A I R 1950 Bom 380, A I R 1950 S C 169, Relied on.

Held, that though the case involved a question of law (relating to the legality of conviction under S. 149, I P C where the culprits that could be identified were less than five), it was not a fit case for appeal to the Supreme Court. 3 Pepsu L R 132 : 52 Cri L J 1409 : AIR 1951 Pepsu 152 (153, 154) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 7) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Substantial question of law — Question as to admissibility of notification issued under Statute.

Contentions which essentially relate to questions of fact cannot form a good ground for a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c). But the High Court has to exercise its power after considering as to what difficult questions of law or principle are involved which require further consideration by the Supreme Court. Unless, therefore, there is a substantial question of law or of principle, the High Court will not be justified in granting a certificate under this article. Further, a notification properly issued under the powers conferred on the municipal committee, in law, becomes almost, as if, it is a part of the statute itself. It is always competent for a Court to take judicial notice of the provisions contained in such notifications. Where therefore the only question raised for the consideration of the Supreme Court is regarding the admissibility of certain notification issued under a municipal Act, no certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) can be granted. 1960 Cr L J 1375 (1): AIR 1960 Punj 547 (548) (Pr 1).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Substantial question of law.

Merely because a novel or a new point is raised, it does not become a substantial question of law or of general importance and, therefore, fit one for appeal. 57 Punj LR 332 : ILR (1955) Punj 1345 : AIR 1956 Punj 1 (4) (Pt F) (Pr 8) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Substantial question of law.

A finding that there was no undue delay in submitting the charge-sheet is a finding of fact and a certificate cannot be granted on the ground that it is erroneous.

Where there has been no failure of justice by the delay in submitting the charge-sheet, the question, whether the delay in submitting the charge-sheet should affect the conviction of the accused becomes at best a question of law but is not a substantial question of law, which might justify the grant of a certificate. 1953 Cr L J 1723 : AIR 1953 Sau 198 (199) (Pt B) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Arts. 134 (1) (c) and 133 — Substantial question of law.

If there is a well-established principle of law and that principle of law is applied to the facts of the case that would not be a substantial question of law. Where the question of law was not well settled, or where there was some doubt as to the principles of law, involved, it might be regarded as a substantial question of law. This test or standard is equally true of criminal matters. 1953 Cr L J 1531 : 6 Sau L R 210 : AIR 1953 Sau 170 (171) (Pt B) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)— Important questions of law — Whether permission to cross-examine prosecution witness at stage of re-examination was rightly granted to prosecution under S. 154, Evidence Act — Certificate granted.

The question whether permission to cross examine a prosecution witness was rightly given to the prosecution in the exercise of discretion under S. 154, Evidence Act at the stage of his re-examination is a very important question of law which requires an authoritative pronouncement of the Supreme Court. So also the question whether the Magistrate was right in rejecting his answers in the cross-examination by the adverse party as interested evidence and in accepting his answers in the examination-in-chief as corroborative evidence is an important question. Held, that the question involved was an important question of law and fact which required consideration by the Supreme Court and therefore a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) should be granted. 1960 Cr L J 1666 : AIR 1960 Tripura 44 (46, 47, 48) (Pt A) (Prs 12 to 17, 20).

5 (a) (ii). Questions of great public or private importance.

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Certificate of fitness.

The petitioner is not entitled to a certificate merely because the case is of great public or private importance. AIR 1956 Ajmer 40 (1) (Pt C) (Pr 3).

——Art. 134 (1)— Matter of public importance — (Penal Code (1860), S. 228).

There can be no doubt that the question of maintenance of the integrity of the jurisdiction is a matter of great public importance. But the reputation of the judiciary is so well established that it will not suffer even if one contempt of Court goes unpunished. The publication of an article in a newspaper against a Magistrate is not of great importance and the purpose would not be advanced by the grant of a certificate of leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. 1953 Cr L J 1206 : AIR 1953 Ajmer 11 (12) (Pt B) (Pr 4).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)— Application under — Non-compliance with S. 342, Criminal P. C. — If ground for granting certificate.

In a Sessions trial the Sessions Judge merely read over the examination of the accused in the Court of the committing Magistrate and asked him whether he had made that statement and it was correct. No question was put to him regarding the evidence produced and circumstances appearing against him in the sessions Court. Even as regards the evidence which was recorded exclusively in the Sessions Court, only a general question was put to the applicant as to whether he had to say anything in regard to that evidence. The accused filed an application under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court on the ground that non-compliance with S. 342, Criminal P. C. vitiated the trial.

Held, that the omissions complained of were sufficient to justify the Court in certifying that the case was a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court : A I R 1951 S C 441, Ref. 1952 Cri L J 114 : AIR 1952 Him Pra 5 (6) (Pt C) (Pr 8).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Certificate of fitness — Police officer making complaint to Magistrate in respect of non-cognizable offence —Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 4 (1) (h) & 190 & Ss. 529 & 530.

Where a police officer who was investigating a complaint made by a person in respect of a cognizable offence made a complaint to the Magistrate in respect a non-cognizable offence, the complaint is valid in view of the definition in S. 4 (1) (h). It was open to the Magistrate to have asked the police officer to investigate the complaint. The proceeding of the Magistrate is not liable to be quashed because the police officer instead of resorting to Section 155 filed a complaint. S. 529 (e) and not S. 530 applies in such a case. The question is not of such public or private importance that a certificate of fitness can be issued. 1952 Cri L J 1037 : AIR 1952 Kutch 54 (55) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 5, 9).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Certificate of fitness — Terror of criminal complaint — Penal Code (1860), S. 385.

Terror of a criminal complaint, whether true or false amounts to fear of injury and the guilt or innocence of the party threatened is immaterial. Where in the complaint it was stated that a person put another in fear that as his passport was false he would be prosecuted, the complaint disclosed commission of an offence. The point is not of such a public or private importance that a certificate of fitness can be issued. 1952 Cri L J 1037 : AIR 1952 Kutch 54 (55) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 9).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Certificate of fitness — Sufficiency of evidence.

A question of sufficiency or credibility of evidence in proof of a particular fact is not a case of private importance specially when there are concurrent findings of fact, and no certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) can be granted. 1952 Cri L J 1037 : AIR 1952 Kutch 54 (55) (Pt C) (Pr 7).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Act amounting to insult—Act if can be dealt with under summary jurisdiction of High Court— Question is of great public importance —(Penal Code (1860), S. 228)—(Contempt of Courts Act (1952), S. 3).

The question whether a single act of the accused which amounts to an insult offered to the Magistrate while he is sitting as a Court can be dealt with under the summary jurisdiction of the High Court in so far as it is an attack on the impartiality and integrity of the Magistrate is not of great public importance particularly where the contemner can adequately be punished under S. 228, Penal Code. Madh B L J 1955 H C R 1741 : Madh B L R 1955 Cr 357 : 1956 Cr L J 243 : AIR 1956 Madh B 96 (96) (Prs 5, 8)(DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Standard of fitness — Conviction on basis of portion of retracted confession — Non-compliance with S. 342, Criminal P. C. — Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 342 and 404 — Evidence Act (1872), S. 24.

The scope of an appeal to the Supreme Court against a final order or sentence in a criminal proceeding has not at all been widened. That Court will have to interfere with convictions by local tribunals within the same bounds of limitations and restraints laid down by the Privy Council and the fitness has to be judged by the standard that that tribunal laid before it in granting special leave to appeal. The only change that the Constitution has introduced is to endow the State High Courts with powers to certify, or in other words, to grant leave to appeal.

Where a major portion of the retracted confession by the accused implicating a co-accused for offences under Ss. 457, 380 and 461, Penal Code, has been found to be false and the co-accused has been acquitted, the accused cannot be convicted for the same offences on the basis of the remaining portion of the confession which amounts to entangling the accused as one who came into possession of some property recently stolen, unless the accused is given an opportunity under S. 342, Criminal P. C, to explain as to how it came into his possession. The general sort of examination under S. 342 as to why and under what circumstances the accused made the confession would not be sufficient under the circumstances. In such a case there is a disregard of the form of legal process so vital to a criminal trial in the failure of compliance with the statutory rule of accused's examination under S. 342, Criminal P. C., and the case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution. 16 Cut L T 115 : ILR (1950) Cut 305 ; 1952 Cri L J 120 : AIR 1950 Orissa 235 (239, 240, 241) (Pt A) (Prs 15, 18, 19, 20) (DB).

5 (a) (iii). Questions of fact.

■ ——Arts. 134 (1) (c) and 136 — Question of fact — High Court's jurisdiction to give certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) — Principle on which Supreme Court will grant leave under Art. 136 and intervene.

The High Court has no jurisdiction to grant a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) in a case where admittedly in its opinion the question involved is one of fact. No High Court has the jurisdiction to pass on mere questions of fact for further consideration of the Supreme Court under the relevant articles of the Constitution. In such a case the High Court should refuse to give a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) and leave the parties, in case it finds itself helpless to redress the grievance to approach the Supreme Court by invoking its special jurisdiction under Art. 136 (1).

No High Court can arrogate the function of the Supreme Court under Art. 136 (1) to itself and pass on a matter to it involving purely questions of fact. And if the High Court does so, then it can be taken to have exercised its discretion wrongly and the certificate purporting to have been granted under Art. 134 (1) (c) will be considered as no certificate and of no avail to the accused. Harpada Dey v. State of West Bengal, 1957 M P C 1 : 1957 Andh L T 202 : 1956 S C A 1078 : (1956) 2 M L J (SC) 65 : 1956 S C J 701 : 1956 All W R (Sup) 141 : 1957 B L J R 23 : 1957 All L J 70 : 1956 S C R 639 : AIR 1956 S C 757 (759) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

■ ——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Certificate — When granted — Affirming judgment not involving substantial question of law.

If a case does not involve any question of law, then however difficulf the question of fact may be, that would not justify the grant of a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution, because if the High Court has any doubt about the facts of a criminal case, the benefit of that doubt must go to the accused. If, on the other hand, the High Court confirms the order of conviction passed by the trial Court ordinarily there could be no ground for entertaining an application for a certificate that the case was a fit one for a further appeal to the Supreme Court. Where the High Court has reversed an order of acquittal and sentenced the accused or has itself convicted an accused person and sentenced him to death, those cases would be covered by the provisions respectively of Art. 134 (1) (a) and 134 (1) (b) of the Constitution. Therefore, ordinarily in a case which does not involve a substantial question of law or principle in an affirming judgment, the High Court would not be justified in granting a certificate under sub-Art. (c) of Art. 134 (1) of the Constitution. AIR 1954 S C 457, Foll.

Where the conviction by the Courts below was based entirely on circumstantial evidence and the High Court dismisses the appeal, the grant of a certificate for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court does not fulfil the requirements of Art. 134 (1) (c) Sunder Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 1956 Cri L J 801 : AIR 1956 S C 411 (412, 413) (Pt A) (Prs 1, 2).

■ ——Art. 134 (1) (c) — High Court in doubt about facts — No certificate.

A certificate cannot be granted under sub-Art. (c) of Art. 134(1) if the High Court is in doubt about the facts. If there is doubt in the minds of the Judges about the facts, their duty is to acquit. They cannot convict and then issue a certificate because they cannot make up their minds about the facts. Baladin v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 1956 Cri L J 345 : AIR 1956 S C 181 (189) (Pt C) (Pr 16).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) —Certificate of fitness — Contentions based on questions of fact—Certificate cannot be granted. AIR 1955 N U C (Ajmer) 4702.

——Art. 134 (1) — Fitness — [Penal Code (1860), S. 300].

The question as to what is 'undue advantage' in each particular case is a question of fact and no question of law is involved. The case involving the interpretation of those words does not therefore fall under clauses (a) and (b) of Art. 134 (1)—Not a fit case for appeal to Supreme Court—Petition for permission to appeal to Supreme Court rejected. 1954 Cri L J 223 : AIR 1954 Ajmer 7 (1) (7) (Pr 2).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Question of fact—Case depending only upon determination of facts in the light of evidence produced — No question of law involved—Not fit case for grant of certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c). 1960 All L J 361 : 1960 All W R (HC) 223 : 1960 All Cr R 157 : 1960 Cri L J 1276 : A I R 1960 All 585 (588) (Pt C) (Pr 15).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Certificate of fitness—Appeal from conviction — High Court coming to different conclusion from that arrived at by Courts below on medical evidence—No ground for certificate.

A certificate of fitness can only be granted, when there is either some question of law of some importance arising between the parties to the case or some question of general importance, or there is some question of difficulty which needed further careful investigation by a higher Court. When no such question is raised, the mere fact that the High Court has come to a different conclusion from that arrived at by the Court below on the medical testimony is no ground either for the State or for the accused for a certificate of fitness under Art. 134 (1) (c). 1956 All W R (HC) 295 : 1956 All L J 399 : 1956 Cri L J 1385 : A I R 1956 All 731 (734, 735) (Pt B) (Pr 18) (DB).

——Arts. 134(1)(c), 404—Question as to appreciation of evidence on record.

A question as to the weight to be attached to the evidence of witnesses on the record in a criminal case cannot be deemed to be sufficient ground for allowing leave under Art. 134 1 (c). 1952 R D (HC) 116.

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Certificate.

——Art. 134 (c) — Criminal case — Certificate — Circumstances for — Will be granted only in exceptional and special cases — Concurrent finding that accused accepted illegal gratification — Case held not fit for certificate. A I R 1955 N U C (Him Pra) 3679.

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Scope—Concurrent findings as to guilt of accused—Certificate of fitness.

Where there are concurrent findings of fact as to the guilt of the accused, a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) cannot be granted unless there is a substantial question of law, or unless there are exceptional and special circumstances. 1959 Cri L J 1452 : A I R 1959 Manipur 46 (46, 47) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Question of weighing evidence —If ground for certificate.

The question whether a witness is reliable or not and to what extent, is a question for the Judge to decide. It cannot therefore form a good ground for a certificate in a case in which the simple question involved was whether the petitioners were responsible for causing the injuries, and both Courts came to the conclusion that it was so. The question of weighing the evidence cannot therefore furnish a good ground for the grant of certificate. 1959 Cri L J 1452; AIR 1959 Manipur 46 (47) (Pt F) (Pr 10).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Certificate of fitness—When can be granted.

In order that a certificate of fitness for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court may be granted in a criminal case under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution of India there should be a substantial question of law and the case one of sufficient importance. Where the accused has been found guilty by all the Courts below for breach of a control order and the decision merely turns on the appreciation of evidence no certificate can be granted merely because the accused wants to challenge the validity of the order for the first time. ('52) 30 Mys L J 88 : ILR (1951) Mys 114.

——Art. 134—Finding on evidence.

Held, that whether to accept certain evidence or not was entirely for the Court of fact to decide. That Court having accepted the evidence which was received without objection from the accused the finding as to the speed limit could no longer be questioned in an application under Art. 134. 1954 Cri L J 1367 : 1954 Nag L J 534 : 1954 All W R (Suppl.) 80 : ILR (1954) Nag 661 : A I R 1954 Nag 265 (267) (Pt E) (Pr 12) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Sufficient ground for granting leave.

A question as to the weight to be attached to the evidence of witnesses on the record in a criminal case cannot be deemed to be a sufficient ground for allowing leave under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution of India. ——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Questions of fact — Certificate should not be granted.

The unusual delay in lodging the F I R the disbelief of a portion of the story of complainant as an exaggeration, and other adverse comments made against the prosecution case by the trial Court and the Court of appeal are questions of fact to be considered by a regular Court of appeal and once they have been considered and due weight given to them a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) cannot be granted for re-agitating the same before the Supreme Court. ILR (1956) Cut 573 : 22 Cut L T 419 : 1957 Cri L J 78 : A I R 1957 Orissa 10 (14) (Pt E) (Pr 18) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Ground for—Question of fact.

The point that certain evidence should not have been accepted by the Magistrate proceeding under S. 145, Criminal P. C., is a question of fact and cannot be a ground on which a certificate can be granted. ILR 29 Pat 904 : 1952 Cri L J 540 : A I R 1951 Pat 305 (307) (Pt D) (Pr 14) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Sufficient ground for granting leave.

There is sufficient ground for granting leave where the application for it is based on the contention that the facts found to be proved by the evidence led on behalf of the prosecution are not sufficient to sustain a conviction. Case law relied on. 54 C W N (S C R) 228, Disting. 1954 Cri L J 60: 55 Punj L R 397: AIR 1954 Punj 7 (7, 8) (Pr 3) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Concurrent finding of fact.

The Supreme Court will not enter into questions of fact decided on appreciation of evidence by the Courts below. When, therefore, the trial Court and the High Court, in appeal, concurrently hold, after appreciating the evidence on record, that the circumstances alleged by the prosecution are proved, a certificate cannot be granted on the ground that the appreciation of evidence was erroneous. 1953 Cri L J 1723 : A I R 1953 Sau 198 (200) (Pt D) (Pr 7) (DB).

5 (a) (iv). Delay—Whether a ground.

——Arts. 134 (1) (c) and 136—Certificate of fitness —Mere delay in pronouncing judgment resulting in omission to consider arguments on questions of facts —No certificate should be given on this ground under Art. 134 (1) (c)—Appellant if aggrieved may apply to Supreme Court under Art. 136.

The High Court should not grant, under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution, a certificate on the mere ground of unusual delay in pronouncing a judgment in appeal by the High Court and the equally slender ground that some of the questions which were raised were forgotten at the time of the judgment. If the appellant has any such real grievance it is open to him to apply to the Supreme Court under Art. 136 but the mere ground of delay is not a ground on which the High Court can certify a case to be fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court. A mere ground of delay in giving a judgment does not fall within the words 'fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court' even if it is felt by the High Court that the delay might have led to omission to consider arguments on questions of fact and law. It is not open to a High Court to give certificates of fitness under this clause merely because in its opinion the judgment of the Court delivered by another Bench suffers from an error in regard to certain facts. AIR 1956 S C 757 and AIR 1958 S C 143 and 28 Ind App 11 (PC) and AIR 1921 P C 25, Rel. on. Achyut Adhicary v. State of W. ——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Criminal appeal — Appeal against acquittal in Sessions case of rioting and murder charge, preferred beyond limitation period—No attempt to obtain copy of judgment—Appeal dismissed by High Court on ground that delay in filing appeal, was not satisfactorily explained—Application for leave to appeal under Art. 134 (1) (c), on ground that delay in Court of Session in sending copies of judgment as required under R. 171, Criminal Rules of Practice (A P.), should be excused under S. 12 (2), Limitation Act—Case held not fit for grant of certificate—Limitation Act (1908), S. 12 (2), Art. 157—Criminal Rules of Practice (A. P.) R. 177 (1).

Where in Sessions case in which the accused were acquitted of the charges of rioting and murder, the prosecuting agency had never applied for a copy of the judgment, and the applications under S. 561A, Criminal P. C., for excusing the delay in preferring appeals against the order of acquittal beyond the period of limitation prescribed under Art. 157 of the Limitation Act, were dismissed on the ground that the delay had not been satisfactorily explained and the appeals were dismissed and the State applied for grant of a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution, relying on R. 177 (1) of the Criminal Rules of Practice (Andhra Pradesh), and it was urged that the delay in filing the appeals was due to the delay in supplying copies of the judgments by the Sessions Court and that, period should be excluded in calculating the period of limitation as provided by S. 12 (2) of the Limitation Act :

Held, that there was no valid ground for granting a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution.

The Criminal Rules of Practice (Andhra Pradesh), which were in the nature of administrative directions and instructions, could not have the effect of adding to or subtracting from the provisions of the Limitation Act.

As the prosecuting agency never applied for a copy of the judgment it could not be said that the delay was occasioned by the time taken for obtaining a copy of the judgment. Therefore, the delay in the Court of Session sending copies of the judgment to the District Superintendent of Police and the Local Public Prosecutor could not save Limitation in the instant cases. ILR (1962) Andh Pra 1133.

5 (b). Certificate of fitness — When not granted.

● ——Art. 134—Certificate of fitness—On a difference of opinion the case was referred under S. 429 Cr. P. C. to a third Judge who agreed with Mathur, J., in dismissing the appeal. One of the points of difference was with regard to the authenticity of F. I. R. and the third Judge did not consider it necessary to discuss it and had merely stated at the end of his order that if it was necessary for him to decide the point he was in agreement with all that Mathur, J. had said.

Held, that the decision given by the third Judge was a proper decision and, therefore, the certificate granted under Art. 134 could not be based upon the omission of the third Judge to discuss the authenticity of the F. I. R. 1965 (2) Cr L J 539 : AIR 1965 S C 1467 (1470) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

● ——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Criminal P C. (1898), S. 421—Appeal to High Court Its power to dismiss appeal summarily — Leave to appeal to Supreme Court — Leave should not be granted on ground that appeal should not have been dismissed summarily.

In dealing with criminal appeals brought before them the High Courts should not summarily reject them if they raise arguable and substantial point. The position under S. 421 is clear and unambiguous. When a criminal appeal is brought before the High Court, the High Court has to be satisfied that it raises an arguable or substantial question; if it is so satisfied, the appeal should be admitted; if, on the other hand, the High Court is satisfied that there is no substance in the appeal and that the view taken by the trial Court is substantially correct it can summarily dismiss the appeal. Therefore the High Court is not right in granting certificate to the appellant under Art 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution of India on the ground that his appeal should not have been summarily dismissed by another Division Bench of the said High Court. If the High Court in dealing with criminal appeals takes the view that there is no substance in the appeal, it is not necessary that it should record reasons for its conclusion in summarily dismissing it. See Press (Objectionable Matter) Act 1951, S. 18 (2). 1954 Cr L J 1022 : AIR 1954 Ajmer 41.

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Certificate of fitness.

The High Court had not differed from the earlier decision of the High Court and had only held that each case depended upon its own circumstances.

Held, that this was not a fit case for the grant of leave. 1954 Cr L J 1762 : 1954 All W R (HC) 553 : AIR 1954 All 795 (801) (Pt I) (Pr 47) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Certificate of fitness.

Under Art. 134 (1) (c), the High Court should certify a case as a fit one where exceptional and special circumstances exist. Where the High Court in its judgment discussed how the offence of murder was made out on the testimony of eye-witnesses and on the facts came to the conclusion that the offences of murder and attempt to commit suicide formed part of the same transaction the case is not one for grant of a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c). Case-law discussed. 1955 Andhra W R 469 : 1957 Cri L J 1223 : AIR 1957 Andh Pra 931 (932, 933) (Prs 1, 4) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Grant of certificate — Principles—Matter resting upon assessment of evidence.

It is only where there is a substantial question of law or there has been an infringement of the essential principles of justice or there is a matter of great public importance that the High Court would consider it proper to grant a certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court. It would also consider it proper to grant a certificate where exceptional and special circumstances exist which make it just for the Supreme Court to intervene. Where the matter entirely rests upon the assessment of the evidence direct and circumstantial, bearing on the question with regard to the guilt of the accused, it is not a fit case for the grant of the certificate. Madh B L J 1955 H C R 1736 : Madh B L R 1955 Cr 344 : 1956 Cr L J 233 (1) : AIR 1956 Madh B 82 (83) (Prs 9 to 11) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)— No material difference between facts disclosed in sanction for prosecution under S. 161, Penal Code and those disclosed in charge—Variation considered by High Court not material—It is not sufficient ground for granting certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c). AIR 1955 N U C (Madh B) 3075.

——Art. 134 — Irregularity in choosing assessors — Grant of certificate—(Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 284).

Where no prejudice is caused to the accused any irregularity in choosing the assessors cannot be a ground which would justify the High Court in granting a certificate of fitness under Art. 134. 1952 Cri L J 1261: AIR 1952 Madh B 133 (135) (Pt A) (Pr 18) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Leave to appeal — When not granted—Trial Court and High Court concurrent on question of fact — No substantial question of law — Leave will not be granted. AIR 1955 NUC (Nag) 2465 (DB).

5 (c). New point—Whether can be raised at the stage of application under this sub-clause.

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—New point.

Points urged in High Court for leave to appeal to Supreme Court not taken in trial Court or in appeal before High Court — Nothing shown to justify conclusion that any injustice of serious and substantial character has occurred—Case held not fit one for appeal, to Supreme Court. AIR 1952 Madh B 170 (FB), Ref. 1954 Cr L J 35 : AIR 1954 Ajmer 16 (16) (Prs 6, 8).

——Art. 134—New point.

In an application for leave to appeal to Supreme Court a new point the decision of which would depend upon questions of fact which were not placed before the High Court whose order is sought to be appealed, cannot be allowed to be raised for the first time. 55 Bom L R 937 : ILR (1954) Bom 252 : 1954 Cr L J 576 : AIR 1954 Bom 206 (208) (Pt B) (Pr 9) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Secondary evidence admitted — Objection not taken — No point raised in appeal to High Court — It cannot be made a ground of appeal to Supreme Court under Art. 134 (1) (c). AIR 1955 N U C (Madh B) 3075.

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Leave to appeal to Supreme Court — New ground.

Per Sharma, J.— Held on facts that leave to appeal to the Supreme Court could not be granted on a point which is not pressed at the hearing of the case. It was true that the decision of Allahabad High Court (AIR 1960 All 1) on which reliance was placed in support of the contention in the petition was not reported till the arguments in the case were concluded, but that alone could be no ground for not pressing the point itself at the time of hearing of the appeal. 1961 M P L J (Notes) 21.

——Art. 134 (1) (c)—New point — Question whether depositions were read over to witnesses is one of fact —Question cannot be allowed to be raised for first time in leave application — Nor can it be ground for granting certificate. 1959 Cri L J 1452 : AIR 1959 Manipur 46 (47) (Pt E) (Pr 9).

——Art. 134—New point.

Point not raised in proceedings before High Court, against which leave to appeal is sought, cannot be raised as a ground for leave to appeal to Supreme Court specially when it is raised not with reference to pure question of law but is one which depends upon certain further facts. (1889) 39 Ch D 322, Rel. on. ILR (1952) Cut 467 : 1953 Cr L J 1578 : AIR 1953 Orissa 266 (269) (Pt C) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Art. 134—New plea.

The point that the Magistrate decided under S. 145, Criminal P. C., the question of possession with reference to title which was not raised before the High Court in revision cannot be allowed to be raised at the stage of application under Art. 134 (1)(c). 5 (d). Powers of High Court.

● ——Art. 134 (1) (c) — High Court's power to grant certificate — Trial of offence under S. 409, Penal Code, along with S. 5, Prevention of Corruption Act (1947).

Three cases were started against the respondent under Ss. 409 and 465, Penal Code and S. 5 (2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act. The three cases were sent to the Magistrate before whom it was objected that charges under S. 409 could not be tried by the Magistrate. The objection was allowed. The State preferred three appeals in the High Court. The appeals were dismissed by the High Court but it held that the appellant was entitled to a grant of a certificate to appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 134 (1) (c). A preliminary objection having been taken on behalf of the respondent that the certificate could not be granted :

Held, that the High Court had the power to grant the certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution.

Held, further, the Courts below were wrong in coming to the conclusion that the respondent would not be tried for an offence under S. 409. State of Punjab v. Shadi Lal, 1960 Cri L J 539 : AIR 1960 S C 397 (399) (Prs 6, 7).

● ——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Power of High Court—Division Bench — Jurisdiction to sit in judgment on decision of another Division Bench.

Where an appeal filed by the accused having been summarily dismissed by a Division Bench of the High Court, the accused applied for grant of a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) and another Division Bench which dealt with the application examined the grounds taken in the appeal;

Held, that the Division Bench acted contrary to the legal position that one Bench of the High Court has no jurisdiction to sit in judgment on the decision of another Division Bench. ● ——Art. 134—Application for leave—Delay in disposal condemned.

It is of the essence that an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court against the sentence of death awarded to the appellant by the High Court should be dealt with great despatch and the accused should know his fate and not be left with the feeling of apprehension for longer time than necessary. Whatever the state of arrears in a particular High Court, there is absolutely no justification for an inordinate delay of one year and ten months in the disposal of such an application.

An inordinate delay in disposal of an application for leave to appeal to Supreme Court by the High Court is however not a consideration for interference by the Supreme Court with the sentence awarded by the High Court. Bissu v. State of U. P., 1954 Cr L J 1796 : AIR 1954 S C 714 (715) (Pt B) (Pr 3).

——Art. 134 (1) (c)— Power and duty of High Court —It cannot reassess evidence.

In a leave application, the High Court is concerned solely with the question as to whether, on the judgment of the High Court, any important question of law or principle arises. It cannot reassess the evidence, come to its own conclusion different from that of the first Court, and then grant leave to appeal on the ground that the findings were not justified by the evidence on record. Where in an appeal from a death sentence in a murder case, the convict does not engage a lawyer but the High Court, in view of R. 10 of Ch. XVIII of the Rules of the Court, appoints certain lawyer to represent the accused, such an appointment is for a specific purpose and comes to an end when the appeal is heard and decided. 5 (f). Appeal against acquittal.

■ ——Art. 134—Scope—No provision in Constitution corresponding to S. 417, Criminal P. C. — Observation of Bench of three Judges over which no opinion was expressed by a Constitution Bench.

Dictum.—"The decision in A. I. R. 1954 S. C. 20 was a decision of a Bench of three Judges and not that of a Constitution Bench. There, the appeal was by special leave granted by this Court. The observation that there was no provision in the Constitution corresponding to S. 417 of the Criminal Procedure Code was obviously made to emphasise that this Court should not, in an appeal by special leave, interfere with an order of acquittal passed by the High Court merely for correcting errors of facts or law. Without hearing further arguments on the scope of Art. 134 (1) (c), we would prefer not to express any opinion as a Constitution Bench as to the validity of the certificates given by the High Court in this case." State of Madras v. Gurviah Naidu & Co., 1956 Mad W N 65 : (1955) 6 S T C 717 : 1956 Cri L J 331 : 1956 S C C 98 : A I R 1956 S C 158 (161) (Pt B) (Pr 10).

■ ——Arts. 134 and 136—Acquittal by High Court—There is no appeal from such acquittal—Overriding power of Supreme Court under Art. 136—[Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 417].

Article 134 does not provide for an appeal from a judgment, final order or sentence in a criminal proceeding of a High Court, if the High Court has on appeal reversed an order of conviction of an accused person and has ordered his acquittal. In other words, there is no provision in the Constitution corresponding to S. 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and such an order is final, subject however to the overriding powers vested in the Supreme Court by Art. 136 of the Constitution. State Government, M. P. v. Ramakrishna Ganpatrao Limsey, 1954 Cri L J 244 : AIR 1954 S C 20 (22) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

■ ——Art. 134 (1), Cls. (a), (b) and (c)—Scope of — Clause (c) not confined to appeal from order of conviction — Judgment of acquittal — High Court can grant certificate under Cl. (c). A I R 1960 All 458, Overruled.

Clauses (a) and (b) of Art. 134 (1) are fundamentally different from Cl. (c). The former give an absolute right of appeal to the accused and deal with a case in which he is tried and sentenced to death by the High Court itself, and Cl. (c), an independent right to appeal. There is no scope at all for the application of the principle of ejusdem generis, as the relationship of genus and species does not exist between Cl. (c) on one side and Cls. (a) and (b) on the other.

There is, therefore, no doubt that a High Court has jurisdiction to certify that the case decided by it resulting in acquittal of the accused or maintenance of his acquittal by a subordinate Court is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court. ——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Appeal against acquittal — Jurisdiction to grant certificate of fitness — Cr. P. Code (1898), S. 417—Scope of.

Even after the judgment of acquittal has been passed in appeal by the High Court, the High Court may grant a certificate to the State under Art. 134 (1) (c), where a substantial question of law has been decided by it and where the question is such that an authoritative decision by the Supreme Court over it becomes necessary either because of conflict of existing decisions by different Courts or because of any other factor which the High Court may deem as substantial or of great general importance.

Section 417, Cr. P. Code, does not at all apply to the case of an appeal to the Supreme Court from an original or an appellate order of acquittal passed by the High Court. AIR 1954 S C 20, held did not lay down contrary law. 1960 All L J 361 : 1960 All W R (H C) 223 : 1960 All Cr R 157 : 1960 Cri L J 1276 : AIR 1960 All 585 (587) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 9) (DB).

——Arts. 134 (1) (c) and 136—Scope—Appeal against acquittal—Dismissal—Application for special leave.

Where the trial Court has acquitted the accused, the presumption of innocence becomes stronger and it becomes still stronger when the appeal against acquittal is dismissed by the High Court. The powers of the High Court under Art. 134 (1) (c) are not as wide as those of the Supreme Court under Art. 136. Further, cls. (a) and (b) of Art. 134 (1) both provide for appeal against conviction and on the principle of ejusdem generis Cl. (c) should also be interpreted so as to mean that an appeal would lie only from a conviction and not from acquittal. Where in an appeal against an acquittal, there was a difference of opinion between two Judges of the High Court and on the opinion of the third Judge the appeal was dismissed, and an application for special leave to appeal to the Supreme Court was made :

Held that even if there were some important questions of law involved in the appeal, it would not be a fit case in which the High Court should grant special leave. ——Art. 134 (1) (c) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 417—Conviction reversed and accused acquitted by the High Court—No leave to appeal to Supreme Court.

Article 134 (1) (c) does not provide for an appeal from a judgment, final order or sentence in a criminal proceeding of a High Court if the High Court has on appeal reversed an order of conviction of an accused person and has ordered his acquittal. When there is no provision in the constitution corresponding to S. 417, Criminal P. C. such an order is final, subject, however, to the overriding powers vested in the Supreme Court by Art. 136 of the Constitution. Hence, leave to appeal to the Supreme Court against such orders of acquittal passed by the High Court in an appeal will not be granted. AIR 1954 S C 20, Foll. 59 Cal W N 1042 : 1956 Cri L J 746 : AIR 1956 Cal 316 (317) (Prs 3, 4) (DB).

——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Scope of inquiry—Leave to appeal in criminal case—Order of acquittal—Principles to be considered in granting leave.

Leave to appeal to the Supreme Court in a criminal case under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution will not ordinarily be granted unless it is shown that exceptional and special circumstances exist, that substantial and grave injustice has been done and that the case in question presents features of sufficient gravity to warrant a review of the decision appealed against. The fact that on a question on which there is difference of opinion the High Court has decided one way does not furnish a ground for granting leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. When no question of law of paramount importance is raised such as might be allowed to override the liberty earned by an accused by an order of acquittal in his favour, leave ought not to be granted to the prosecution to prefer an appeal against the acquittal. ——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Acquittal confirmed by High Court—Certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c)—Grant of.

In a case where the High Court has confirmed an order of acquittal, it will not be proper to grant a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) unless the case involves questions of law of such complexity that require elucidation and an authoritative pronouncement by the Supreme Court. In a criminal case where the High Court has confirmed an order of acquittal, the granting of a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) is not justified unless the case involves questions of law of such complexity as require elucidation by the Supreme Court. ——Art. 134 (1) (c)— Order of acquittal — Leave to appeal—Order of acquittal passed in revision—Effect.

In view of the Supreme Court decision in AIR 1954 S C 20, it is no longer permissible to a High Court to certify under Art. 134 (1) (c) a case of acquittal in a criminal case to be fit for appeal to the Supreme Court, even if the High Court feels that a substantial question of law of general importance is involved. ——Arts. 134 (1) (c) and 215 — Criminal proceeding —Proceedings for contempt of Court — Civil and criminal contempt.

In order that an order of a High Court, sought to be appealed from, may come under Art 134, it is necessary that it should be an order made in a criminal proceeding.

Where, the contempt consists in offering an affront to the Court or in interfering or tending to interfere with the administration of justice, the contempt committed in such forms is said to be criminal contempt. The Code does not apply to proceedings taken by a superior Court for the punishment of such contempt.

The jurisdiction to punish for its own contempt under Art. 215 which a High Court exercises as a Court of Record is not derived from any statute, but arises out of the very fact that it is a Court of Record. Proceedings taken by a Court of Record for the punishment of criminal contempt are proceedings taken in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction. This principle would apply to proceedings taken by all the High Courts contemplated by Art. 134 (1) (c). AIR 1948 Cal 214, Foll. 1959 Cr L J 172 : AIR 1959 Cal 106 (107, 108, 109, 110) (Pt A) (Prs 2, 4, 5, 9, 12) (DB).

——Arts. 134 (1) (c) and 215 - Certificate of fitness — Contempt of Court Leave to appeal.

Where the decision of the High Court, holding that certain persons had committed contempt of Court, amounted to holding that not only is mens rea immaterial in a case of contempt of Court but knowledge of the pendency of a case with respect to which interference is supposed to have been caused, is also immaterial.

Held, that whether or not this was the correct position in law was a matter which ought to be finally and authoritatively decided and, accordingly, a certificate of fitness under Art. 134 (1) (c) should be granted. 1959 Cr L J 172 : AIR 1959 Cal 106 (113, 114) (Pt E) (Pr 26) (DB).

——Arts. 134 (1) (c) and 215 — Contempt of High Court—Nature of proceeding — Principles governing granting of certificate in criminal cases—Certificate refused.

Article 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution confers a wide discretion upon the High Courts. Under it an appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court from any judgment, final order or sentence in a criminal proceeding of a High Court if the High Court certifies that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court. There is, however, nothing in the Constitution to indicate in what cases or classes of cases a certificate of fitness to appeal may be granted by the High Court.

In the absence of anything in the Constitution to guide the Courts in this matter, the question should be determined on general principles and such inferences as may be drawn as to the nature and scope of the discretion conferred upon the High Courts from the existing criminal law of the country. There is another Article in the Constitution, Art. 136, under which the Supreme Court may in its discretion grant a special leave to appeal from any judgment, decree, determination, sentence or order in any cause or matter, passed or made by any Court or tribunal in India. How the discretion conferred upon the Supreme Court will be exercised in criminal cases was indicated in the recent decision of that Court in — 'Pritam Singh's case', AIR 1950 S C 169. (Principles laid down in AIR 1950 S C 169 indicated).

Observations in AIR 1950 S C 169 may well furnish some guidance to the High Courts in granting of certificate applied for under Art. 134 (1) (c). In granting a certificate for leave to appeal the High Court must be satisfied that there is reasonable ground for thinking that grave and substantial injustice may have been done by reason of some departure from the principles of natural justice.

The High Court when considering an application for grant of a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) does not sit in judgment upon its own decision. It has however been authorised to grant a certificate of fitness to appeal to the Supreme Court in any case that it might consider appropriate. It would not be proper for any Judge to attempt to define in a few clear cut categories in what cases or classes of cases a certificate of fitness should be granted and that to restrict the wide generality of the language advisedly used by the framers of the Constitution. Every case should be considered on its own facts and circumstances, but a certificate should not be granted unless there is something exceptional or special in the case calling for a review of the decision of the High Court by the Supreme Court.

The jurisdiction exercised by the High Courts under Art. 215 of the Constitution is criminal jurisdiction. It is true that the High Court exercises a special and summary jurisdiction in cases of contempt of itself. But from the earliest times it was never intended that the exercise of this jurisdiction should be made subject to a review by an appeal and there is a serious doubt whether a certificate of fitness can at all be granted in such a case except possibly under some extraordinary circumstances. High Court would not be justified in applying to petitions for grant of a certificate under Art. 134 (1) (c) in cases of conviction for a contempt of itself, a standard of scrutiny different from that by which it judges applications for certificates of fitness in other cases.

Liability of an editor and printer when they are not connected with the work of the press at the relevant time when the contempt was published is not a question of general importance, since the law on the subject is well-settled. Similarly when the ground upon which the certificate is sought challenges a finding of fact, it is not a ground for granting certificate. I L R (1952) M B 308 : 1953 Cri L J 1323 : AIR 1953 Madh B 206 (207, 208) (Prs 6, 7, 9, 12, 13, 16, 20, 21) (DB).

——Arts. 134 (1) (c) and 215 — Order imposing punishment for contempt of High Court — Leave to appeal to Supreme Court — (Contempt of Courts Act (1952), S. 5).

Where the High Court inflicts a penalty for contempt of Court as a Court of record in the exercise of its discretion in summary proceedings, leave to appeal to Supreme Court can be granted in exceptional cases under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution of India provided the requisite conditions are fulfilled.

Held, that as there has been no departure from the principles of natural justice and as no question of law is likely to be raised nor has it been raised in this Court at this stage and as there is nothing exceptional or special in this case calling for review of decision of this Court, no grounds have been made out for allowing the petitioner leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. 1956 Cri L J 1411 : A I R 1956 Manipur 44 (46, 47, 48) (Pt A) (Prs 7, 14).

——Art, 134 (1) (c) — Leave to appeal to Supreme Court against conviction for contempt — Considerations — Case held not fit one for granting leave.

Granting for the nonce that a proceeding resulting in conviction for contempt is a criminal proceeding within the meaning of Art. 134 (1), half the efficiency of the jurisdiction exercised by the Court in the matter of contempt would be impaired if the contemner were to be permitted to appeal as a matter of course under Cl. (c) in every case of conviction.

A right of appeal is no doubt a creation of statute. Where an appeal as of right is given by a statute, it cannot be limited by any considerations foreign to the statute. But the right of appeal given in clause (c) is not as of right but at the discretion of the Court. The discretion has to be exercised not arbitrarily but on sound judicial consideration. But in considering a case under the residuary Cl. (1) (c) of Art. 134, it may not be improper to bear in mind the nature of the jurisdiction exercised by a superior Court of record in a matter of contempt. It is well established that every superior court of record is the sole and exclusive judge of what constitutes contempt of itself.

The facts that while punishing the petitioner for contempt the Court has not exercised either a new-fangled jurisdiction or held anything to be a contempt which was not already covered by precedent, and the questions raised in the decision cannot be regarded as either res integra or such as have given rise to any divergence of view, the entire range of the discussion in the decision against which appeal is sought being covered by one Full Bench and two Division Bench decisions, are considerations normally sufficient, to reject an application for leave under Art. 134 (1) (c) to appeal to the Supreme Court. Case law Ref. ILR (1952) Nag 130 : 1952 Cri L J 749 : AIR 1952 Nag 130 (132) (Pt C) (Prs 10, 14, 17) (DB).

——Art. 134 — Leave to appeal to Supreme Court from conviction for contempt — Prejudice—Inadmissible evidence admitted (Contempt of Courts Act (1926), S. 2).

Proceedings in contempt though criminal in one sense are not strictly governed by the Criminal P. C. or the Evidence Act.

A procedural illegality can be waived by the contemner. Hence absence of objection to any particular procedure is a material consideration in judging whether justice has suffered in order to grant leave to appeal.

Where inadmissible evidence was admitted in contempt proceedings and no objection was taken, it was held that there had not been such gross violation of the principles of natural jusitce which was likely to have caused prejudice. Whether deliberate and intended interference with Civil Court process by a Magistrate without authority and, exercising his official position without due care, require to be checked by the High Court by proceedings in contempt, is a question of sufficient importance with reference to which leave to appeal to the Supreme Court may be granted if the High Court has the power to grant such leave. ■——Arts. 134 and 136 - Criminal appeal—Sentence —Interference — Practice of Supreme Court—Case presenting unusual features—Sentence reduced to that already undergone.

It is the settled rule of the Supreme Court that it would not interfere with the sentence passed by the Courts below unless there is an illegality in it or the same involves any question of principle.

Where the facts of the case before the Supreme Court presented some unusual features viz., that the accused had undergone a major part of the sentence of one year's imprisonment imposed on him by the trial Court till he was acquitted by the High Court in appeal and he also remained in imprisonment for some months till the decision of the Supreme Court in appeal by special leave by the State on account of his failure to furnish the bail.

Held, that in the circumstances the Supreme Court while allowing the appeal would technically interfere with the sentence by reducing it to the period already undergone. State of Maharashtra v. Mayer Hans George, 1965 (1) Cr L J 641 : (1965) 1 S C W R 430 : (1965) 1 S C A 750 : (1965) 35 Comp Cas 557 : 67 Bom L R 583 : 1965 S C D 725 : AIR 1965 S C 722 (744, 745) (Pt D) (Pr 50).

■——Art. 134 —High Court ordering complaint to be filed against appellants under Ss. 193, 199, 211, Penal Code—Appeal to Supreme Court—Duty of Supreme Court.

Where the High Court has ordered the Registrar of the High Court to make complaint in writing against the appellants for their prosecution under Ss. 193, 199 and 211, Penal Code; the Supreme Court in appeal will not ordinarily do more than examine whether the High Court has fairly considered a case to reach the conclusion that prima facie there is good reason to launch the prosecution, that there is reasonable prospect of conviction and that it is expedient in the interest of justice to order a prosecution. Hari Das v. State of West Bengal, 1964 Cri L J 787 : 1964 Mad W N 574 : (1965) 1 S C W R 42 : 1965 SCD 219 : (1965) 2 S C J 329 : 1965 Mad L J (Cri) 588: (1964) 7 S C R 237 : A I R 1964 S C 1773 (1776) (Pt B) (Pr 12).

■——Art. 134 (1) (c)—Appeal on certificate in habeas corpus matter—Order of detention which is the basis for appeal revoked and detenu arrested under fresh order on same date—Supreme Court can decide points of law raised in appeal if it would be in the interests of justice.

Generally speaking, no useful purpose would be served by the appeal Court deciding the appeal in a habeas corpus matter where the detenu has been released before the appeal comes up for final hearing But in case where an order of detention which is the basis for such an appeal has been revoked on ground of technical defect and a fresh order has been passed on the same date and the detenu has been immediately re arrested after his release, even though technically the order out of which the appeal has arisen has been revoked there is nothing to preclude the Supreme Court from deciding the appeal, though ordinarily it would not do so, if it appears that it would be in the interests of justice to decide the points raised in the appeal. ■——Arts. 134 and 136—Certificate of fitness—Duty of Supreme Court.

If the certificate of fitness granted by the High Court does not satisfy the requirements of Art. 134 (1) (c) the appeal on such a certificate has to be dismissed in limine; but the Supreme Court has to satisfy itself whether there are such grounds as would justify that Court in granting special leave to appeal to that Court, if the appellant had approached the Court in that behalf. ■——Arts. 134 (1) (c) and 136 (1)—Certificate by High Court found not justified—Duty of Court.

Where on a certificate granted by the High Court under Art. 134 (1) (c) an appeal is filed before the Supreme Court and the Supreme Court comes to the conclusion that the certificate does not fulfil the requirements of Art. 134 (1) (c), the conclusion does not necesssarily mean the end of the appeal. The Supreme Court has to consider whether in the circumstances of the case it could have thought fit to grant special leave in term of Article 136 (1) of the Constitution. Sunder Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh. 1956 Cri L J 801 : A I R 1952 S C 411 (413) (Pt B) (Pr 3).

■——Arts. 134 (1) (c) and 136 (1)—Leave under Art. 134 (1) (c) granted—Supreme Court holding appeal not maintainable under Art. 134 (1) (c)—Supreme Court can examine whether it is case for exercising special powers under Art. 136 (1). ● —Art. 134 – Powers of Supreme Court on appeal —Interference with exercise of discretion – (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 423).

It is a well-settled principle that when the legislature entrusts to an authority the power to pass an order in its discretion, an order passed by that authority in exercise of that discretion is, in general, not liable to be interfered with by an appellate Court unless it can be shown to have been based on some mistake of fact or misapprehension of the principles applicable thereto. Corporation of Calcutta v. Mulchand Agarwala, 1956 S C J 128 : 1956 Cri L J 285: 1956 S C A 96 : (1955) 2 S C R 995 : AIR 1956 S C 110 (115) (Pt E) (Pr 11).

● —Art. 134 – Jury trial set aside on ground of misdirection and non-direction to jury — Normal course is to order retrial Their Lordships instead of ordering retrial, discharged the accused. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 423. AIR 1955 S C 287.

● —Arts. 134 and 136—Interference by Supreme Court.

Where the High Court reverses the decision of the trial Court without noticing or giving due weight and consideration to important matters relied upon by that Court and its decision has to a large extent been influenced by suspicious circumstances disclosed at the trial which are undoubtedly prejudicial to the accused, but in regard to which no opportunity of explanation was given to him when he was examined under the provision of S. 342, Criminal P. C., these would be considered adequate grounds justifying interference by Supreme Court. Illiravi Nambudiri v. State of T. C. 1953 Ker L T 173 : ILR (1953) Trav. Co 181 : 1954 Cri L J 102 (S C) : A I R 1953 S C 478 (484) (Pt B) (Pr 20).

● —Art. 134—Supreme Court practice—Criminal appeal—Interference in.

In the case of the concurrent findings of fact by both the lower Courts, the Supreme Court cannot substitute its own appreciation of evidence for those of the Courts below. The Supreme Court has in the absence of any compelling reasons, always declined to act as a third Court of facts. Held that in this case there was no reason for departing from that well recognised rule of practice adopted by the Court. K. Damodaran v. State of Travancore-Cochin, 1953 Ker L T 295: 1953 Cri L J 1928 : AIR 19 53 S C 462 (465, 466) (Pt B) (Pr 10).

● —Arts. 134, 136—Criminal appeal when to be entertained -Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 404.

The Supreme Court will not entertain a Criminal Appeal except in special and exceptional cases where it is manifest that by a disregard of the forms of legal process or by a violation of the principles of natural justice or otherwise substantial and grave injustice has been done. Where the appellant has been convicted notwithstanding the fact that the evidence is wanting on a most material part of the prosecution case, the Supreme Court will entertain the appeal. Mohinder Singh v. State. 1950 S C R 821 : 1953 Cri L J 1761 : AIR 1953 S C 415 (418) (Pt A) (Pr 10).

● —Arts. 134, 142—Supreme Court, powers of.

Where the Courts below in coming to their decision regarding the guilt of the accused relied to a considerable extent on the so-called admission of the accused which had no existence in fact.

Held, that the proper order to make would be to direct a rehearing of the appeal on the evidence as it actually stood after excluding from consideration the alleged admission, Darhan Singh v. ● —Art. 134 — Supreme Court — Practice—Interference in matter of punishments.

It is not the practice of the Supreme Court to interfere by special leave in the matter of punishment imposed for crimes committed, except in exceptional cases where the sentences are unduly harsh and do not really advance the ends of justice. ● —Art. 134—Powers of Supreme Court—Finding of fact — Accused acquitted by Special Judge but convicted by High Court on appeal holding that the grounds given by Special Judge for distrusting prosecution evidence were perverse—Appeal to Supreme Court on a certificate — As findings on questions of fact are not concurrent, Supreme Court in appeal can form its own conclusions, irrespective of the grounds given by the High Court for holding that judgment of Special Judge was perverse. Muhammad Dastagir v. State of Madras, (1960) 1 Ker L R 592 : 1960 S C J 726 : 1960 Cr L J 1159 : (1960) 2 Mad L J (SC) 39 : (1960) 2 Andh W R (S C) 39 : 1960 M L J (Cr) 466 : 1960 All Cr R 240 : 1960 All W R (H C) 357 : (1960) 3 S C R 116 : A I R 1960 S C 758 (761, 762) (Pt C) (Pr 10).

● —Arts. 134 and 136 — Supreme Court is not Court of criminal appeal.

The Supreme Court is not a Court of criminal appeal and it would not, therefore, examine the reasons of the High Court for coming to certain conclusions of facts. C. S. D Swami v. State, 1960 Mad W N 149 : 1960 Cr L J 131 : (1960) S C J 160 : (1960) M L J (Cr) 91 : (1960) 1 S C R 461 : 1960 Pat L R (SC) 21 : ILR (1959) Punj 1955 : AIR 1960 S C 7 (9, 10) (Pt B) (Pr 4).

● —Art. 134—Finding of fact—Interference.

Where the High Court disagreed with the finding of fact of the trial Magistrate and gave very good grounds for the same, in an appeal before the Supreme Court on a certificate by the High Court, the Supreme Court after reviewing the evidence held that the High Court did not err in disagreeing with the trial Court's finding and declined to interfere with the High Court's finding. Narayandas Bhagwandas Madhavdas v. State of W. B., 1960 Mad W N 161 : (1959) 2 S C A 268 : 1959 Cr L J 1368 : (1960) 1 S C R 93 : AIR 1959 S C 1118 (1120, 1121) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

● —Art. 134—Concurrent findings of fact—Interference.

● —Art. 134—Concurrent findings of fact.

Following the usual practice the Supreme Court will decline to interfere with concurrent findings of fact where there is ample evidence which, if believed, can be used in support of the findings. K. C. Mathew v. State of Travancore-Cochin, 1956 Mad W N 217 : (1956) S C J 213 : 1956 Cr L J 444 : 1956 S C A 175 : 1966 All W R (Sup) 34 : (1956) 1 M L J (SC) 130 : 1956 Ker L T 355 : 1956 Andh L T 506 : (1955) 2 S C R 1057 : AIR 1956 S C 241 (246) (Pt F) (Pr 24).

● —Art. 134—Concurrent findings of fact—Interference.

It is a well-established practice of the Supreme Court not to interfere with concurrent findings of fact. Hence where both the trial Court and the High Court have found that the signatures on certain document were forged, the findings being concurrent findings of fact, the Supreme Court in appeal will not interfere with them. Ram Narain v. State of Punjab, 1955 Cr L J 871 : A I R 1955 S C 322 (323) (Pt B) (Pr 4).

● —Art. 134—Supreme Court will not interfere on question of fact—Point touching credibility of witnesses—No interference. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 404. 1954 Cr L J 1708 : AIR 1954 S C 657.

● —Art. 134 — Practice — Concurrent findings—[Evidence Act (1872), S. 11]—[Cr. P. Code (1898), S. 411-A].

The plea of alibi involves a question of fact and when both the Courts below concurrently found that fact against the accused the Supreme Court cannot on an appeal by special leave, go behind that concurrent finding of fact. Thakur Prasad v. State of Madhya Pradesh. 1954 Cr L J 261 : A I R 1954 S C 30 (31) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

● —Art. 134 — Appreciation of evidence — Interference.

Some eye-witnesses implicating both accused—Eye-witnesses believed — One of accused admitting his guilt and convicted—Supreme Court refusing to interfere in his case — In such case ordinarily Supreme Court would not interfere with the case of the other accused also, unless there are special reasons for not accepting the statements of these witnesses at their face value against the other accused. (Special circumstances, held existed.) Hate Singh S/o Bhagat Singh v. State of M. B., 1953 Cri L J 1933 : M B L R 1952 Cr 1 (SC) : A I R 1953 S C 468 (469) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

● —Art. 134 — Appreciation of evidence—Interference.

Usually the Supreme Court in a criminal appeal before it, will not depart from its practice of declining to re-assess the evidence but where there has been a departure from the rule that when an accused person puts forward a reasonable defence which is likely to be true, and in addition is supported by two prosecution witnesses, then the burden on the other side becomes all the heavier because a reasonable and probable story likely to be true when pitted against a weak and vacillating case is bound to raise reasonable doubts of which the accused must get the benefit, the Supreme Court would examine the evidence at length. (After reviewing the evidence the Supreme Court set aside the conviction and the sentence.) Hate Singh S/o Bhagat Singh v. State of M. B., 1953 Cri L J 1933 : M B L R 1952 Cri 1 : AIR 1953 S C 468 (471) (Pt F) (Pr 26).

● —Art. 134—Practice—Criminal appeal — Interference in.

In the case of the concurrent findings of fact by both the lower Courts the Supreme Court cannot substitute its own appreciation of the evidence for those of the Courts below. The Supreme Court has in the absence of any compelling reason, always declined to act as a third Court of facts.

Held that in this case there was no reason for departing from that well-recognised rule of practice adopted by the Court. K. Damodaran v. State of Travancore-Cochin, 1953 Ker L T 295 : 1953 Cri L J 1928 : AIR 1953 S C 462 (465, 466) (Pt B) (Pr 10).

● —Arts. 134, 136—Power to look into evidence—Criminal P. C., 1898, S. 404.

The Supreme Court will not look beyond the finding of fact arrived at by the Courts below, but where decision on the plea of alibi has been arrived at in disregard of the principle that the standard of proof which is required in regard to that plea must be the same as the standard which is applied to the prosecution evidence and in both cases it should be a reasonable standard the Supreme Court will look into the evidence. Mohinder Singh v. State, 1950 S C R 821 : 1953 Cri L J 1761 : A I R 1953 S C 415 (418) (Pt C) (Pr 11).

● —Art. 134 — No interference.

Supreme Court would not be justified in disturbing the decision of the Courts below merely on the ground that perhaps different inference could also have been drawn from the facts found in the case. Vijendrajit Ayodhya Prasad Goel v. State of Bombay, 1953 Mad W N 552 : 1953 S C A 395 : 1953 S C J 328 : 1953 Cr L J 1097 : 1953 All W R (Supp) 70 : AIR 1953 SC 247 (248) (Pt D) (Pr 4).

● —Art. 134 (1)—Argument on point of fact.

It is not the function of the Supreme Court to reassess evidence and an argument on a point of fact which did not prevail with the Courts below cannot avail the appellants in the Supreme Court. Lachhman Singh v. State, 1952 All L J 437 : I L R (1952) Punj 278 : (1952) S C A 491 : 1952 S C R 839 : 65 Mad L W 429 : 1952 Cri L J 863 : 1952 S C J 230 : 1952 Mad W N 389 : 1952 Mad W N Cr 93 : 1952-2 Mad L J 100 : AIR 1952 S C 167 (169) (Pt B) (Pr 9).

● —Art. 134—Supreme Court—Criminal appeal—Interference with concurrent finding of fact — Practice.

The Supreme Court does not ordinarily interfere with a concurrent finding of fact but when the finding omits to notice very important points in the accused's favour which swing the balance the otherway, it will not let the finding stand. Kashmira Singh v. State of ● ——Art. 134—New plea.

A plea that there was no proof of fact that sanction for prosecution was given after considering the relevant facts and by following procedure prescribed by law is not a pure question of law but requires for its decision investigation of facts and will not be allowed to be raised for the first time before the Supreme Court. Where the plea as to invalidity of sanction under S. 197, Criminal P. C. on ground that the sanction did not show that the Governor-General had exercised his individual judgment in the matter, was not raised at any stage before the lower Court when the sanction was proved, the plea cannot be allowed to be raised for the first time before the Supreme Court. ——Art. 134 (1) (c) — Delay in making application for leave to appeal.

There is no provision in any of the statutes or the rules made by the High Court prescribing a period of time for making an application for the grant of leave to appeal. However a belated application for leave to appeal in a criminal case should not be allowed to be presented and a citizen of the State harassed after the lapse of a long period of time (in this case 197 days after the order against which the appeal was sought to be filed, was made). As the law stood prior to the commencement of the Constitution, the Federal Court had jurisdiction to entertain and hear appeals from a decree of a High Court which reversed the lower Court's decree as regards properties of the value of more than Rs. 10,000. It was matter over which jurisdiction was "exercisable" by the Federal Court As soon as the decree of the High Court came into existence the jurisdiction of the Federal Court to hear an appeal from the decree became exercisable provided certain conditions as to security and deposit were complied with. ——Arts. 135, 133—Scope—Word "matter and exercisable" meaning of—(C. P. Code (1908), Ss. 109, 110).

Art. 135 confers on the Supreme Court jurisdiction in respect, inter alia, of any civil matter to which the provisions of Art. 133 do not apply, provided that jurisdiction and powers in relation to that matter were exercisable by the Federal Court on 25th January, 1950. The 'matter' to which Art. 133 applies is the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in appeals from High Courts in regard to Civil matters.

Where the 'matter' was the judgment and decree of a High Court, dated 16th December, 1953, in which the value of the subject matter in dispute was below Rs. 20,000 :

Held, that there could not be any jurisdiction or powers capable of being exercised by the Federal Court as the Federal Court had ceased to exist and hence Art. 135 could not apply. It was the right of appeal which at any time was capable of being exercised being dependent upon the stage the litigation had reached. Therefore, when the Federal Court was itself abolished by the Constitution a litigant's right of appeal was therefore to be found, if at all, in the Constitution itself, that is, in the case of judgments of a High Court in Arts. 133 and 135. ——Art. 135—Decision of High Court in income-tax reference — Jurisdiction of Supreme Court to hear appeal—(Income-tax Act (1922), S. 66A (2).)

The result of the Federal Court (Enlargement of Jurisdiction) Act, 1948 and the Abolition of the Privy Council Jurisdiction Act, 1949, is that before the Constitution came into force the Federal Court had the same jurisdiction that the Privy Council had under S. 66A (2) to hear appeals in income-tax matters, and if the Federal Court had the jurisdiction, the Supreme Court has also jurisdiction under Art. 135. ——Art. 135 — Applicability and scope.

In order to make out a right of appeal under Art. 135 one has to establish that such an appeal lay to the Federal Court immediately before the commencement of the Constitution. Secondly, Art. 135 does not seem to contemplate any certificate of fitness to be granted by the High Court at all. The provisions for certificate are incorporated only in Arts. 132, 133 and 134. Article 135 is expressed in general terms and nothing is said in it as regards a certificate to be granted by the High Court. 95 Cal L J 160 : AIR 1955 Cal 257 (258) (Pt C) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Art. 135 — Appeal to Supreme Court in income-tax cases is maintainable — Income-tax Act (1922), S. 66-A (2) — (Federal Court (Enlargement of Jurisdiction) Act 1947 (1 of 1948), Ss. 2, 3 — Abolition of Privy Council Jurisdiction Act (C. A. Act V of 1949), S. 5).

An appeal lies to the Supreme Court, in income-tax cases, under Art. 135 of the Constitution read with S. 66-A (2) of the Income-tax Act.

There are enough indications in Federel Court (Enlargement of Jurisdiction) Act, 1947, which establish beyond reasonable doubt that the expression "Civil case" was not used in the Act in the strict sense of cases governed by the Civil Procedure Code, but was used in a sense, large enough to comprise proceedings in income tax matters.

Although by the definition of the expression "judgment to which this Act applies" in S. 2 the limitation that the judgment must be a judgment in a civil case is imported into S. 3 as well, what the meaning of "civil case" is, is indicated by the provision that such cases are those in which an appeal could have been preferred to the Privy Council without special leave under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure or of any other law. It is quite obvious that the Act is contemplating not merely appeals provided for and permitted by the Code of Civil Procedure, but also appeals permitted by other laws.

Since the common requirement of all cases in which an appeal shall lie to the Federal Court is that the judgment appealed from must be a judgment in a civil case and since S. 3 provides that the cases contemplated are those in which an appeal could have been preferred to the Privy Council without special leave under the Code of Civil Procedure and other laws, it is perfectly plain that cases in which an appeal could have been preferred under such laws as the Income-tax Act or the Land Acquisition Act are also contemplated.

(Effect of S. 6 of Act 1 of 1948 also considered).

The expression "civil cases" is not thus, in the contemplation of the Act, limited to cases governed by the Code of Civil Procedure in respect of appeals to the Privy Council, but extends to cases in which appeals to that tribunal were provided for by other laws.

The conclusions therefore follow that the jurisdiction to hear such appeals (in Income-tax cases) came to the Federal Court under Act 1 of 1948 and has now been conferred on the Supreme Court by Art. 135 of the Constitution.

Under the Constituent Assembly Act (5 of 1949), the jurisdiction to hear income-tax appeals which the Privy Council undoubtedly had before the 10th October, 1949 the appointed day within the meaning of S. 5 of the Constitutent Assembly Act (5 of 1949) came to the Federal Court on and from that date as an exclusive jurisdiction, whether such appeals were appeals in civil cases or not; and since that jurisdiction was never taken away from the Federal Court before it was replaced by the Supreme Court, it had jurisdiction in regard to income-tax appeals immediately before the commencement of the Constitution as required by Art. 135.

Obiter.—Article 133 cannot possibly have any application to an appeal in an income-tax matter. 58 Cal W N 354 : (1954) 25 I T R 418 : AIR 1954 Cal 477 (479, 480) (Pt A) (Prs 8, 9, 10, 12) (DB).

● ——Art. 135 — "Matters in relation to which jurisdiction and power were exercisable by Federal Court" — Meaning.

Unless an appeal to the Federal Court had been admitted the proceedings must be deemed to be pending before the High Court in respect of which the Federal Court could not exercise jurisdiction. It cannot, therefore, be said that a case in which the decree was passed after the commencement of the Constitution is a matter in relation to which jurisdiction and powers were exercisable by the Federal Court immediately before the commencement of the Constitution. It is at least necessary that the judgment should have been delivered or the decree or final order passed before the Constitution to say that the Federal Court had any exercisable jurisdiction and powers in relation to a case. AIR 1941 F C 5, Rel. on. ——Art. 135 — "Matter" in Art. 135 excludes civil and criminal proceedings.

The matter referred to in Art. 135 should be understood as meaning a matter which is neither civil nor criminal and by the application of the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius—the express mention of one thing implies the exclusion of another —The word 'matter' in Art. 135 should be deemed to exclude both civil and criminal proceedings. [Overruled on another point in AIR 1957 S C 540].

——Arts. 135, 133, 134, 372 — Art. 372 read with Art. 135 does not retain right of appeal where Arts. 133 and 134 apply—Effect of Art. 133 on Civil P. C. (1908), S. 109 (c).

By the Federal Court (Enlargement of Jurisdiction) Act, 1948, in all cases where an appeal lay to the Privy Council it was provided that an appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court; therefore even where the order is not a final one special leave can be granted in exceptional cases under S. 109, Cl. (c). However, Art. 372 read with Art. 135 does not retain that right where the provisions of Arts. 133 and 134 can be invoked. Prior to the Constitution there was no enactment in force except the Civil Procedure Code and the Letters Patent of the High Courts conferring and regulating the rights of appeals from the High Courts. But now as a result of Chap. IV of Part V of the Constitution the right of appeal to the Supreme Court is crystallised in clear cut terms. If Art. 133 prohibits an appeal to the Supreme Court where the decision is not a final order, it cannot be said that any earlier statutory provisions repugnant to that Article can hold the field any further despite Art. 372. AIR 1951 Mad 251, Dissent.

Thus, a right of appeal which existed to the Federal Court under the Federal Court (Enlargement of Jurisdiction) Act, is now rendered non-existent. But to compensate for that there is always the right to the party to apply to the Supreme Court for special leave as contemplated by Art. 136 of the Constitution. 1. Scope.

——Arts. 136, 134 — Appeal by special leave against sentence of imprisonment—Death of accused appellant — Appeal abates — Principles of S 431, Criminal P. C. (1898), can be applied to appeals under Constitution against sentence of fine and not against sentence of imprisonment—Maxims—Actio personalis moritur cum persona.

Section 431, Criminal P. C. (1898), does not apply proprio vigore to a case of appeal filed with the special leave of the Supreme Court granted under Art. 136, when the appellant-accused dies pending the appeal. But where the appeal is against sentence of fine, the appeal may be permitted to be continued by the legal representatives of the deceased appellant accused. There is no provision making such appeals abate. The principle on which the hearing of a proceeding may be continued after the death of an accused would appear to be the effect of the sentence on his property in the hands of his legal representatives. If the sentence affects that property, the legal representatives can be said to be interested in the proceeding and allowed to continue it But where the sentence is not one of fine but of imprisonment, which on the death of the accused becomes infructuous, the sentence does not affect the property of the deceased accused in the hands of his legal representatives, and therefore, the appeal, in such a case, would abate, upon the death of the accused.

The fact that the accused was a Government servant and was under suspension during the trial and the fact that if the conviction and sentence were set aside, his estate would be entitled to receive full pay for the period of suspension, cannot be said to affect his estate, because the setting aside of the sentence would not automatically entitle the legal representatives to the salary. See Ibid, Art. 134 (1) (c). AIR 1963 S C 1039.

● ——Art. 136—Scope — Comparison with Arts. 133 (1) and 134 (1)—Article 136 (1) confers very wide powers—Limitations under Arts. 133 (1) and 134 (1) are not imposed by Art. 136 (1). AIR 1963 S C 874 (877) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

● ——Art. 136—Scope of.

Article 136 of the Constitution confers a wide discretionary power on the Supreme Court to entertain appeals in suitable cases not otherwise provided for by the Coustitution. Though Art. 136 is couched in widest terms, the practice of the Supreme Court is not to interfere on questions of fact except in exceptional cases when the finding is such that it shocks the conscience of the Court.

Where the High Court had not contravened any of the principles laid down in Sheo Swarup's case AIR 1934 P C 227 (2) : 67 M L J 664 and had also given reasons which led it to hold that the acquittal was not justified, it was held that no case had been made out for the Supreme Court's not accepting the said findings. ● ——Art. 136 — Power of the Supreme Court — Appeal under special leave—Question of jurisdiction raised — Supreme Court rejecting appeal on ground of no failure of justice—Question of jurisdiction left open—No ground for review.

When in an appeal by special leave under Art. 136, the judgment of the Supreme the Court leaves the question of the jurisdiction of the lower tribunal open on the ground that there was no failure of justice and, in consequence, the Court refuses to exercise its jurisdiction under Art. 136, it cannot be said that something was done which was unknown to law. Though the powers of the Supreme Court under Art. 136 are wide, their exercise is discretionary. In an appeal under Art. 136 the Supreme Court is not bound to decide the question of jurisdiction when, on the facts and circumstances of the case it has come to the conclusion that, there was no failure of justice and the judgment is not open to review on that ground. ■——Art. 136 — Special leave granted — Objection by respondent that it should not have been granted — When open and sustainable — Civil Procedure Code (5 of 1908), S. 100 — Second appeal — Judgment of single Judge — Grant of special leave to appeal against where no leave to appeal under Letters Patent had been applied for — When can be revoked —Judgment in Second Appeals — Essentials of — Judgment not giving reasons for conclusion — Infirmity.

It cannot be said that leave granted to the appellants under Art. 136, can never be revoked. The true position is that in a given case, if the respondent brings to the notice of the Court facts which would justify the Court in revoking the leave already granted, the Court would, in the interests of justice, not hesitate to adopt that course. Normally, an application for special leave to appeal against a second appellate decision would not be granted unless the remedy of a Letters Patent Appeal has been availed of. Even so it would not be possible to lay down an unqualified rule that leave should not be granted if the party has not moved for leave under the Letters Patent and it cannot be so granted, nor is it possible to lay down an inflexible rule that if in such a case, leave has been granted, it must always and necessarily be revoked. The question as to whether the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Art. 136 should be exercised or not, and if yes, on what terms and conditions, is a matter which the Court has to decide on the facts of each case. If at the stage when special leave is granted the respondent caveator appears and resists the grant of Special Leave on the ground that the appellant has not moved for Letters Patent Appeal and it appears that the said ground was argued and rejected on the merits and consequently Special Leave is granted, then it would not be open to the respondent to raise the same point over again at the time of the final hearing of the appeal. If, however, the caveator does not appear, or having appeared, does not raise this point, or even if he raises the point the Court does not decide it before granting special leave, the same point can be raised at the time of final hearing. In such case, there would be no technical bar of res judicata and the decision on the point will depend upon a proper consideration of all the relevant facts. P. Balakrishna Iyer v. Ariya M. Ramaswami Iyer, (1965) 1 S C J 235: (1965) 1 Mad L J (SC) 10: (1965) 1 Andh W R (S C) 10: (1964) 7 S C R 49 : (1964) 1 S C W R 535 : A I R 1965 S C 195 (197, 198) (Prs 7, 8, 9).

■ ——Art. 136 —Certificate of fitness under Art. 132— Appellant cannot raise grounds other than those on which certificate is granted except with leave of Court — Leave has to be obtained from the Supreme Court on an application under Art. 136 to file appeal against those grounds. See Ibid, Art. 132. AIR 1964 S C 1419.

■ ——Art. 136 (1) — Special leave—Grant of, at ex parte hearing on appellant's petition—Final hearing —Procedure — Preliminary objection that the decision, judgment or order appealed against has not been pronounced by a 'Tribunal' or a 'Court' can be raised by the respondent at the time of final hearing.

Even in cases where special leave has been granted at the ex parte hearing of the matter on the petition of the appellant for special leave, the respondent can, at the final hearing, raise a preliminary contention that special leave should not have been granted since the decision, judgment or order appealed against, has not been pronounced either by a Court or a Tribunal within the meaning of Art. 136 (1) of the Constitution. ■ ——Art. 136—Special leave to appeal granted without hearing respondents and without full materials on record — Supreme Court can consider at time of hearing of appeal whether leave was properly granted and whether appellant is entitled to be heard on merits. ■ ——Art. 136 —Scope of the exercise of the power— Special leave—Grant of —Propriety —If can be questioned at hearing of appeal.

There is no distinction in the scope of the exercise of the power under Art. 136 at the stage of application for special leave and at the stage when the appeal is finally disposed of. It is open to the Court to question the propriety of the leave granted at the time of the hearing of the appeal. No respondent will be aggrieved by such procedure; the appellant also cannot complain as he adopted the procedure with open eyes and therefore must take such consequences as follows from invoking the special jurisdiction of this Court under Art. 136. There is no question of one division bench sitting in judgment over another; the same Court hears the same matter at different stages. Unless the Supreme Court at the hearing of the appeal is satisfied that the appeal raises a question that justifies the exercise of its discretionary jurisdiction under Art. 136, the appeal is liable to be dismissed without further investigation into the merits of the case. 2 (a). Principles relating to the grant of special leave.

● —Art. 136 — Power of Supreme Court—When may not be exercised.

Though in a proper case the Supreme Court may refuse to exercise its jurisdiction under Art. 136 where the interests of justice patently indicate the desirability of adopting such a course, such a plea cannot be entertained where it is clearly shown that the impugned orders passed by the High Court are without jurisdiction. ● —Art. 136 — Applicability — Point raised by appellant municipal corporation relating to its rights under incorporating statute—Point is of importance and case fit for decision in appeal under Art. 136 although occasion giving rise to question is over.

Where the point raised by the appellant municipal corporation is as to its powers under the incorporating statute and how far courts can review the exercise of its power by the appellant Corporation the point is of great importance and must be decided in the appeal under Art. 136, although the occasion which has given rise to the question, has already passed and from that point of view, the question raised may be said to have become academic. ● —Art. 136—Appeal admitted by special leave—Findings of fact—Interference.

It is the settled practice of the Supreme Court to grant leave to appeal under Art. 136 only if exceptional and special circumstances exist, or if substantial and grave injustice has been done and the case presents features of sufficient gravity to warrant a review of the decision appealed against. Merely because the appeal has been admitted by special leave, the appellant is not free to contest the findings of fact of the subordinate tribunals. Only those points on which special leave may initially be granted, can be urged at the final hearing; and normally special leave will not be granted by the Supreme Court under Art. 136 (1) of the Constitution on a plea of error committed by the Courts below in the appreciation of evidence. ● —Art. 136—Offence committed more than four years ago—High Court wrongly discharging accused —Application for special leave to Supreme Court not disclosing reason on which similar application was rejected by High Court - Held, in the circumstances Supreme Court would be justified in not exercising its discretionary jurisdiction under Art. 136 as public interest did not require that stale matter should be resuscitated. ● —Art. 136—Jurisdiction of Supreme Court vis-a-vis awards of tribunals.

Article 136 of the Constitution does not confer a right of appeal to any party from the decision of any tribunal but it confers a discretionary power on the Supreme Court to grant special leave to appeal from the order of any tribunal in the territory of India. Though Art. 136 is couched in widest terms, it is necessary for the Supreme Court to exercise its discretionary jurisdiction only in cases where awards under the Industrial Disputes Act are made in violation of the principles of natural justice, causing substantial and grave injustice to parties or the case raises an important principle of industrial law requiring elucidation and final decision by the Supreme Court or discloses such other exceptional or special circumstances which merit the consideration of the Supreme Court. Their Employees, 1959 S C J 647 : 1959 Mad L J (Cr) 370 : (1959-60) 16 F J R 35 : 1959 S C A 438 : (1959) 1 Lab L J 413 : (1959) Supp 2 S C R 136 : AIR 1959 S C 633 (635) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 5).

● —Art. 136 — Error of law.

Where the Judge accepted as correct all the essential facts constituting the offence with which the accused was charged, but he passed an order of acquittal on a misconception as to the effect of a decision of the Supreme Court it is a fit case for the exercise of jurisdiction under Art. 136 of the Constitution. ● —Art. 136—Order of High Court regarding disciplinary action against legal practitioner — Interference by Supreme Court — (Legal Practitioners Act (1879), Ss. 13 and 10) — (Bar Councils Act (1926), S. 10).

In a proceeding under Ss. 13 and 14, Legal Practitioners Act against a legal practitioner the recommendation of the Munsif was that the legal practitioner should be suspended for one year. The legal practitioner had filed a written apology and expressed regret to the Munsif. The High Court suspended him from practice for a period of five years.

Held that on a matter of this nature the Supreme Court would be reluctant to interfere with the order of the High Court as respects the disciplinary action to be taken against a member of the Bar. However in view of the two mitigating circumstances in the case, the period of suspension should be reduced to two years only. Lalit Mohan Das v. ● —Art. 136 — Special leave — Powers of Supreme Court Income-tax Act (1922), S. 66 — Question of law not raised in reference — Point covered by authority—(Income-tax Act (1922), S 66 (1)).

● —Art. 136 — Powers of Supreme Court under — Intent and purpose of the power — Finality of decisions of Tribunals — Effect of.

It is not possible to define with any precision the limitations on the exercise of the discretionary jurisdiction vested in the Supreme Court by the constitutional provision made in Art. 136. The limitations, whatever they be, are implicit in the nature and character of the power itself. It being an exceptional and overriding power, naturally it has to be exercised sparingly and with caution and only in special and extraordinary situations. Beyond that it is not possible to fetter the exercise of this power by any set formula or rule.

The power will only be used to advance the cause of justice, and its exercise will be governed by well established principles which govern the exercise of overriding constitutional powers. It is, however, plain that when the Court reaches the conclusion that a person has been dealt with arbitrarily or that a Court or tribunal within the territory of India has not given a fair deal to a litigant, then no technical hurdles of any kind like the finality of finding of facts or otherwise can stand in the way of the exercise of this power. Dhakeswari Cotton Mills, Ltd. v. Commr. of Income tax, West Bengal, (1954) 26 I T R 775: 1955 S C J 122: (1955) 1 M L J (S C) 60 : 1955 An W R (S C) 60 : 1955 S C A 96 : 1955 S C R 941 : AIR 1955 S C 65 (69) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

● —Art. 136 — Powers under, when exercised — Pleas available to appellant.

Unless it is shown that exceptional and special circumstances exist that substantial and grave injustice has been done and the case in question presents features of sufficient gravity to warrant a review of the decision appealed against, the Supreme Court does not exercise its overriding powers under Art. 136 (1) of the Constitution.

The circumstance that because an appeal has been admitted by special leave does not entitle the appellant to open out the whole case and contest all the findings of fact and raise every point which could be raised in the High Court. Even at the final hearing only those points can be urged which are fit to be urged at the preliminary stage when the leave to appeal is asked for. Hem Raj Devilal v State of Ajmer. 1954 Mad W N 468 : (1954) 1 M L J 694 : 1954 S C J 449 : 1954 All W R (Supp) 49 : 1954 Cr L J 1313 : 1955 S. C A 50 : AIR 1954 S C 462 (462) (Pt A) (Pr 2).

● —Art. 136—Substantial question of law—Whether can be a ground for granting special leave. See Ibid, Art. 133. AIR 1954 S C 355.

● —Art. 136 (1)—Special leave to appeal in criminal cases—When granted.

The Supreme Court will not grant special leave to appeal under Art. 136 (1) of the Constitution unless it is shown that exceptional and special circumstances exist, that substantial and grave injustice has been done and the case in question presents features of sufficient gravity to warrant a review of the decision appealed against and that only those points can be urged at the final hearing of the appeal which are fit to be urged at the preliminary stage when leave is asked for. It is well established that this Court does not by special leave convert itself into a Court to review evidence for a third time.

Where, however, the Court below fails in apprehending the true effect of a material change in the versions given by a witness immediately after the occurrence and the narrative at the trial with respect to the nature and character of the offence, it would not be right for the Supreme Court to affirm such a decision when it occasions a failure of Justice. AIR 1950 S C 169, Rel. on.

Thus where in the statements made by the witnesses in the trial, the whole version as to the nature and character of the act of the accused has been completely changed and an act which on the facts stated in the first information report and on the the statements made to the police may well be regarded either accidental or rash and negligent, has been deliberately made to look like an act of deliberate murder. Such difference goes to the root of the case and if the High Court holds, on the basis of the evidence in the trial, that accused is guilty of the offence of murder under S. 302, I. P. Code, it is in error and the Supreme Court can set aside the decision of the High Court under Art. 133 (1). Sadhu Singh v. State of Pepsu, ILR (1954) Patiala 66 : 1954 Cr L J 727 : AIR 1954 S C 271 (276) (Pt A) (Prs 11, 12)

● —Art. 136—Circumstances under which Supreme Court will not interfere.

If there has been mere mistakes on the part of the Court below of a technical character which has not occasioned any failure of justice or if the question was purely one of the Supreme Court taking a different view of the evidence given in the case, there is no interference under the provisions of Art. 136. Such questions are as a general rule treated as being for the final decision of the Courts below. Habeeb Mohammad v. State of Hyderabad, 1954 Mad W N 233 : 1953 S C J 678 : 1954 Cr L J 338 : 1954 S C A 514 : 1954 S C R 475 : AIR 1954 S C 51 (61) (Pt F) (Pr 15).

● ——Art. 136—Leave to appeal against decision of Industrial Tribunal — Jurisdiction of Supreme Court to entertain application for.

The wording of Art. 136 of the Constitution is wide enough to give jurisdiction to the Court to entertain an application for leave to appeal against the decision of an Industrial Tribunal although it is obvious that having regard to the nature of the functions of the Tribunal the S C will be very reluctant to entertain such an application. Bharat Bank v. Employees of Bharat Bank, (1950-51) 2 F J R 1 : 1950 S C R 459 : 86 C L J 230 : AIR 1950 S C 188 (189, 190, 211) (Pt B) (Prs 3, 5, 68).

● ——Art. 136—Special leave to appeal—Decisions of Privy Council—Binding effect—Precedents.

Though the Supreme Court is not bound to follow the decisions of the Privy Council too rigidly, yet some of those principles are useful as furnishing in many cases a sound basis for invoking the discretion of the Court in granting special leave. Pritam Singh v. The State, 1950 Mad W N (Cri) 236 : 1950 Raj L W 378 : 86 Cal L J 120 : 53 Pun L R 1 : 1950 Mad W N Cr 236 : 1950 S C R 453 : 63 Mad L W 875 : 51 Cri L J 1270 : 1950 Mad W N 605 : AIR 1950 SC 169 (171, 172) (Pt D) (Pr 9).

● ——Art. 136 — Criminal appeal—Special leave to appeal — When granted.

Generally speaking Supreme Court will not grant special leave to appeal in criminal cases, unless it is shown that exceptional and special circumstances exist, that substantial and grave injustice has been done and that the case in question presents features of sufficient gravity to warrant a review of the decision appealed against. The Supreme Court will not constitute itself into a third Court of fact. Pritam Singh v. The State, 1950 Mad W N (Cri) 236 : 1950 Raj L W 378 : 86 Cal L J 120 : 63 Mad L W 875 : 53 Pun L R 1 : 1950 S C R 453 : 51 Cri L J 1270 : 1950 Mad W N 605 : A I R 1950 S C 169 (170, 171, 172) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 9).

● ——Art. 136 — Special leave to appeal — Scope of the discretionary power — Principles governings its exercise.

On a careful examination of Art. 136 along with Art. 135, it seems clear that the wide discretionary powers with which the Supreme Court is invested under it is to be exercised sparingly and in exceptional cases only and as far as possible a more or less uniform standard should be adopted in granting special leave in the wide range of matters which can come up before it under this Article. The Supreme Court can under this Article grant special leave in civil cases, in criminal cases, in income-tax cases, in cases which come up before different kinds of tribunals and in a variety of other cases. The Supreme Court should grant special leave to appeal only in those cases where special circumstances are shown to exist. Generally speaking the Supreme Court will not grant special leave unless it is shown that exceptional and special circumstances exist, that substantial and grave injustice has been done and that the case in question presents features of sufficient gravity to warrant a review of the decision appealed against. In this particular case it was held that the conditions for granting special leave did not exist. Pritam Singh v. State, 86 C L J 120 : 1950 Mad W N 605 : 1950 Mad W N (Cri) 236 : 63 L W 875 : 51 Cr L J 1270 : 4 A I Cr D 610 : 1950 B L W 378 : 1950 S C R 453 : 53 P L R 1 : AIR 1950 S C 169 (171) (Pt C) (Pr 9).

——Art. 136 — Special leave to appeal in criminal matters — Powers of Supreme Court.

In granting special leave to appeal in criminal matters, the Supreme Court is not governed by Art. 134 but by Art. 136, the powers under which are much wider and it can, in its discretion, grant special leave in any case.

Similarly the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in matters coming up before it is not limited by any provision in the Constitution and that Court is not precluded from going into questions of fact if it considers it necessary. See Ibid, Art. 134. 1952 Cri L J 1755 : AIR 1952 All 991 (DB).

2 (b). Revocation of special leave.

● ——Art. 136 — Special leave obtained ex parte — Non-compliance with O. 13, R. 2, Supreme Court Rules — Leave revoked. See Supreme Court Rules 1950, O. 13, R. 2. AIR 1965 S C 1142.

● ——Art. 136—Leave under Art. 136, can be revoked, in interest of justice—Party not applying for leave to file Letters Patent Appeal but applying for leave under Art. 136—Propriety of—Leave under Art. 136, may be granted, if facts justify it — Single Judge not exercising jurisdiction in second appeal in accordance with law — Special leave under Art. 136, not revoked, even though no leave to appeal under Letters Patent was applied for. Balkrishna Iyer v Ramaswami Iyer, AIR 1965 S C 195 (197, 198) (Prs 7 to 9).

● ——Art. 136 — Grant of special leave after notice to respondent and giving him hearing — Revocation of — New ground of objection as to leave cannot be permitted except in exceptional circumstances — Supreme Court Rules, O. 19, R. 4.

Where special leave to appeal under Art. 136 of the Constitution has been granted by the Supreme Court after notice to the respondent and giving him a hearing, the Supreme Court will not permit the respondent to urge any argument regarding the correctness of the order of the Court granting leave except possibly in some extraordinary cases where the ground urged happens to arise subsequent to the grant of the special leave or where it could not be ascertained by the respondent at that date notwithstanding the exercise of due care. The very object of issuing notice to the respondent before the grant of leave is to ensure that the latter is afforded an opportunity to bring to the notice of the Court any grounds upon which leave should be refused and the purpose of the rule would be frustrated if the respondent were permitted to urge at a later stage—at the stage of the hearing of the appeal and long after the appellant has incurred all the costs—that the leave granted after notice to him should be revoked on a ground which was available to him when the application for special leave was heard. Thungabhadra Industries, Ltd. v. Government of Andhra Pradesh, (1964) 5 S C R 174 : 1964 S C D 179 : (1964) 1 S C W R 310 : A I R 1964 S C 1372 (1375, 1376) (Pt A) (Pr 6).

● ——Art. 136—Special leave obtained by withholding true information from Supreme Court — Leave revoked—Duty of applicant towards Supreme Court not discharged by summarising judgment of Court below when findings of Court below were also recorded on his misrepresentation.

There is a restricted right of appeal to the Supreme Court conferred by the Constitution upon litigants in civil cases. Exercise of the jurisdiction of the Court under Art. 136 of the Constitution is discretionary; it is exercised sparingly and in exceptional cases, when a substantial question of law falls to be determined or where it appears that interference by the Supreme Court is necessary to remedy serious injustice. A party who approaches the Supreme Court invoking the exercise of this overriding discretion of the Court must come with clean hands. If there appears on his part any attempt to over-reach or mislead the Court by false or untrue statements or by withholding true information which would have a bearing on the question of exercise of the discretion, the Court would be justified in refusing to exercise the discretion or if the discretion has been exercised, in revoking the leave to appeal granted even at the time of hearing of the appeal. It is not correct to say that the duty of an applicant for special leave to the Supreme Court is discharged when he merely summarises the judgment of the Courts below and claims relief on the footing that the findings are correct, when to his knowledge the findings cannot be sustained and the findings have been so recorded because the Courts below have been misled on account of representations for the making of which he was either directly or indirectly responsible. If the defendant has by misleading the Supreme Court obtained an order granting special leave and has under the protection of that order remained in possession of the property in dispute for a period of three years, it would be putting a premium upon the unfair conduct of the defendant to permit him to argue the appeal on the footing other than that on which the case was argued in the High Court, and to argue which presumably no special leave would have been granted. (Special leave granted was revoked.) AIR 1963 S C 1558 and C. A. No 155 of 1963, dated 5 4-1963 (S C), Rel. on. Rajabhai Abdul Rehman Munshi v. ■ ——Art. 136—Revocation of special leave—Special leave to appeal granted — At subsequent hearing respondent praying for revocation of special leave — Serious mis-statements found in application for special leave. Necessity of giving accurate statements in such application — Application revoked. Hari Narain v. Badri Das, (1963) 1 S C W R 569 : (1964) 1 S C J 51 : (1964) 1 Mad L J (S C) 25 : (1964) 1 Andh W R (SC) 25 : (1964) 2 S C R 203 : 1963 S C D 611 : A I R 1963 S C 1558 (1559, 1560) (Prs 7, 9).

■ ——Art. 136—Granting of special leave ex parte after condoning delay—Revocation of—Recommendation for amendment of the Rules of the Supreme Court.

Except in very rare cases, if not invariably, it should be proper that the Supreme Court should adopt as a settled rule that the delay in making an application for special leave should not be condoned ex parte but that before granting leave in such cases notice should be served on the respondent and the latter afforded an opportunity to resist the grant of the leave. Such a course, besides being just, would be preferable to having to decide applications for revoking leave at the time of hearing appeal on the ground that the delay in making the same was improperly condoned, years after the grant of the leave when the Court naturally feels embarrassed by the injustice that would be caused to the appellant if leave were then revoked when he would be deprived of the opportunity of pursuing other remedies if leave had been refused earlier. The rules of the Court should be amended suitably to achieve this purpose.

Where the leave was granted ex parte after condoning delay of four years, the Supreme Court refused to revoke the leave, in the peculiar circumstances of the case inasmuch as there was no by-passing the High Court and there was no suppression of any fact and the grant of special leave merely served to shorten the proceedings. ——Art. 136 — Supreme Court refusing leave to appeal against award of Industriai Tribunal—High Court if can exercise powers under Art. 226.

The right to apply for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 136 if it could be called a "right" at all, cannot be equated to a right to appeal. That the Supreme Court declined to exercise its discretion in favour of the petitioner by granting the leave asked for under Art. 136 cannot affect the jurisdiction vested in the High Court under Art 226.

However, the fact that the Supreme Court declined to exercise its discretion in favour of the petitioner and refused to grant leave under Art. 136, against the award of the Industrial Tribunal without giving any reasons is a factor that ought to be taken into account when the High Court is called upon to exercise its discretion in favour of interference. 71 Mad L W 371: (1958) Mad L J (Cr) 584: (1958) 2 Mad L J 74: (1958) 2 Lab L J 315: I L R (1958) Mad 672: AIR 1958 Mad 398 (403) (Pt A) (Prs 18, 19, 21).

● ——Art. 136 — Special leave — Grant of, when appeal lies to another Court.

It cannot be contended that the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal against the order of a Court when an appeal lies from that order to another Court. The provisions of Art. 136 of the Constitution are not circumscribed by any such limitation. But when an appeal lay to another Court the Supreme Court should not give special leave and thereby short circuit the legal procedure prescribed. Union of India v. Kishorilal Gupta, (1960) 1 S C R 493 : 1960 S C J 1101 : (1960) 2 S C A 343 : 1961 An L T 20 : AIR 1959 S C 1362 (1363, 1364, 1372) (Pt A) (Prs 2, 20).

3. Certificate of fitness and special leave—Distinction.

● ——Art. 136 (1)—Scope — Comparison with Articles 133 (1) and 134 (1).

Article 136 (1) confers very wide powers on the Supreme Court and as such, its provisions have to be liberally construed. It is significant that whereas Arts. 133 (1) and 134 (1) provide for appeals to that Court against judgments, decree or final orders passed by the High Courts no such limitation is prescribed by Art. 136 (1). All Courts and all Tribunals in the territory of India except those in Cl. (2) are subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Art. 136 (1). It is also clear that whereas the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Arts. 133 (1) and 134 (1) can be invoked only against final orders, no such limitation is imposed by Art. 136 (1). In other words, the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under this latter provision can be exercised even against any interlocutory order or decision. All causes and matters that are brought for adjudication before Courts or Tribunals are covered by Art. 136(1). It is true that in exercising its powers under the Article the Supreme Court in its discretion can refuse to entertain applications for special leave where it appears to the Court that interference with the orders sought to be appealed against may not be necessary in the interest of justice. But the limitations thus introduced, in practice, are the limitations imposed by the Court itself in its discretion. They are not prescribed by Art. 136 (1). Engineering Mazdoor Sabha v. 4. Effect of grant of special leave.

● ——Art. 136—Withdrawal of concession on a point of law—Question whether "ottas' and 'chabutras' fall within term 'buildings' not purely one of law — State not entitled to withdraw concession on such question made before High Court — What was urged in special leave petition was pressed in support of application for grant of certificate. State of Bombay v. Sardar Venkat Rao. 1962 Nag L J 369 : 1962 M P L J 753 : (1963) 1 S C R 428 : AIR 1966 S C 991 (993) (Pt B) (Pr 8).

● ——Art. 136—Appeal by special leave—Powers of Supreme Court—Respondent, if can be allowed to support judgment in his favour even on grounds found against him—Supreme Court Rules (1950), O. 18, R. 3.

As soon as special leave is granted there is an appeal before the Supreme Court and while dealing with such an appeal the Supreme Court exercises its civil jurisdiction, It is true that the Supreme Court Rules do not contain any provision analogous to O. 41, R. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure which permits a party to support the judgment appealed against upon a ground which has been found against him in that judgment. The provision nearest to it is the one contained in O. 18, R. 3 of the Rules of the Supreme Court which requires parties to file statements of cases. There is no reason to limit the provisions of this rule only to those contentions which deal with the points found in favour of that party in the judgment appealed from. Apart from that, while dealing with the appeal before it the Supreme Court has the power to decide all the points arising from the judgment appealed against and even in the absence of an express provision like O. 41, R. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure it can devise the appropriate procedure to be adopted at the hearing. There could be no better way of supplying the deficiency than by drawing upon the provisions of a general law like the Code of Civil Procedure and adopting such of those provisions as are suitable. Normally a party in whose favour the judgment appealed from has been given will not be granted special leave to appeal from it. Considerations of justice, therefore, require that the Supreme Court should in appropriate cases permit a party placed in such a position to support the judgment in his favour even upon grounds which were negatived in that judgment. ● ——Art. 136 — Question of law — Question as to nature of offence on proved facts—Power of Supreme Court.

In a case where the question for decision is the nature of the offence deducible from proved facts, the matter is one of pure law and even if there has been no elucidation of the point with clarity in the Courts below, the Supreme Court is not precluded from giving a decision as to the exact nature of the offence proved on a scrutiny of the findings. Dharman v. State of Punjab, 1957 Cri L J 420 : 1957 S C R 1 : A I R 1957 S C 324 (326) (Pt C) (Pr 9).

● ——Art. 136 — Admission of appeal by special leave—Procedure to be followed.

The assumption that once an appeal has been admitted by special leave the entire case is at large and the appellant is free to contest all the findings of fact and raise every point which could be raised in the High Court or the trial Court is entirely unwarranted. Only those points can be urged at the final hearing of the appeal before the Supreme Court which are fit to be urged at the preliminary stage when leave to appeal is asked for, because it would be illogical to adopt different standards at two different stages of the same case. The exercise of this extraordinary jurisdiction is not justifiable in criminal cases unless exceptional or special circumstances are shown to exist or that substantial and grave injustice has been done. A I R 1950 S C 169, Reiterated. State Government M. P. v. Ramkrishna Ganpatrao, 1954 Cri L J 244 : A I R 1954 S C 20 (22) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

5. Duty of High Court in disposing of appeal.

● ——Art. 136—Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 421—Summary dismissal—Special leave.

It is not right for the High Court to dismiss an appeal preferred by the accused to that Court summarily where it raises some arguable points which require consideration. In cases which prima facie raise no arguable issue that course is, of course, justified but the Supreme Court would appreciate it if in arguable cases the summary rejection order gives some indication of the views of the High Court on the points. Without the opinion of the High Court on such points in special leave petitions under Art. 136 of the Constitution, Supreme Court some times feels embarrassed if it has to deal with those matters without the benefit of that opinion. Mushtak Hussein v. State of Bombay, 1953 Cri L J 1116 : 1953 S C J 355 : 1953 S C R 825 : 56 Bom L R 1 : 1954 S C A 29 : A I R 1953 S C 282 (286) (Pt C) (Pr 9).

Himansu Kumar Bose v. Jyoti Prokash Mitter, (1964) 1 S C A 347 : A I R 1964 S C 1636 (1640) (Pt B) (Pr 14).

● ——Art. 136—'Determination' and 'order'—Meaning of — Authority of Supreme Court under Article being judicial 'determination' or 'order' sought to be appealed against must also have character of judicial adjudication—Judicial and administrative acts—Distinction.

The expression "determination" in the context in which it occurs in Art. 136 signifies an effective expression of opinion which ends a controversy or a dispute by some authority to whom it is submitted under a valid law for disposal. The expression 'order' must have also a similar meaning, except that it need not operate to end the dispute. Determination or order must be judicial or quasi-judicial ; purely administrative or executive direction is not contemplated to be made the subject-matter of appeal to the Supreme Court. The character of the power conferred upon the Supreme Court original or appellate, by its constitution being judicial, the determination or order sought to be appealed from must have the character of a judicial adjudication.

A judicial decision must be the act of a body or authority invested by law with authority to determine questions or disputes affecting the rights of citizens and under a duty to act judicially. What distinguishes an act judicial from administrative is therefore the duty imposed upon the authority to act judicially. A I R 1950 S C 222, Rel. on.

To make a decision or an act judicial, the following criteria must be satisfied :

(1) it is in substance a determination upon investigation of a question by the application of objective standards to facts found in the light of pre-existing legal rules ; (2) it declares rights or imposes upon parties obligations affecting their civil rights ; and (3) that the investigation is subject to certain procedural attributes contemplating an opportunity of presenting its case to a party, ascertainment of facts by means of evidence if a dispute be on question of fact, and if the dispute be on question of law on the presentation of legal argument, and a decision resulting in the disposal of the matter on findings based upon those questions of law and fact. Jaswant Sugar Mills, Ltd., Meerut v. Per Kania C. J., Fazl Ali and Mahajan JJ.; Mukherjea and Patanjali Sastri JJ., Contra. — Certain words used in Art. 136 seem to have a special significance; these words are 'determination', cause or matter' and tribunal.' These words greatly widen the scope of Art. 136. They show that an appeal will lie from a determination or order of 'any tribunal' in any cause or matter. Thus, the wording of Art. 136 is wide enough to give jurisdiction to the Supreme Court to entertain an application for leave to appeal.

Per Fazl Ali J. — "The proviso to S. 15 (2), Industrial Disputes Act, relates to a very special type of case (i. e., where the Government is a party to the dispute) and as at present advised I do not wish to express any opinion as to whether an appeal lies to this Court or not in such a case but, in my judgment, where the Government has only to declare the award to be binding an appeal shall lie." A Customs Officer is not a 'Court' or a 'Tribunal' though in adjudicating upon matters under S. 167 of the Sea Customs Act, he has to act in a judicial manner. But the Central Board of Revenue exercising appellate power under S. 190 of the Sea Customs Act and the Central Government exercising revisional power under S. 191 thereof are 'Tribunals' within the meaning of Art. 136 of the Constitution. These authorities are constituted by the Legislature and they are empowered to deal with the disputes brought before them by aggrieved persons. The scheme of the Act, the nature of the proceedings brought before the appellate and the revisional authorities, the extent of the claim involved, the nature of the penalties imposed and the kind of enquiry which the Act contemplates, all indicate that both the appellate and the revisional authorities acting under the relevant provisions of the Act constitute Tribunals under Art. 136 of the Constitution, because they are invested with the judicial power of the State, and are required to act judicially. ● ——Art. 136 (1)—Conditions for invoking Art. 136 (1) — Distinction between quasi-judicial and executive decisions—'Tribunal' contemplated by Art. 136 (1)—Comparison with Arts. 226 and 227—Industrial Disputes Act (1947), S. 10-A—Decision of arbitrator acting under—Appeal under Art. 136 (1)—Not competent — Arbitrator is not a Tribunal, although his decision is quasi-judicial — Positions of Industrial Tribunal and private arbitrator under Arbitration Act compared.

For invoking Art. 136 (1) two conditions must be satisfied; (1) the act complained against must have the character of a judicial or a quasi-judicial act as distinguished from a mere executive or administrative Act and (2) the authority whose act is complained against must be a Court or a Tribunal. Unless both the conditions are satisfied, Art. 136 (1) cannot be invoked.

The decision of the arbitrators to whom industrial disputes are voluntarily referred under S. 10-A, Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, are no doubt, quasi-judicial decisions and amount to a determination or order under Art. 136 (1). But an arbitrator acting under S. 10-A is not a 'Tribunal' under Art. 136 even though some of 'the trappings of a Court' are present in his case. As one of the essential conditions for invoking Art. 136 (1) is not satisfied special leave to appeal to the Supreme Court from the decision of an arbitrator acting under S. 10-A, Industrial Disputes Act, cannot be granted.

The question whether an act is a judicial or a quasi-judicial one or a purely executive act depends on the terms of the particular rules and the nature, scope and effect of the particular powers in exercise of which the act may be done and would, therefore, depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. Where an authority is required to act judicially either by an express provisions of the statute under which it acts or by necessary implication of the said statute, the decisions of such an authority generally amount to quasi-judicial decisions.

Article 136 (1) refers to a Tribunal in contradistinction to a Court. Tribunal as distinguished from the Court, exercises judicial powers and decides matters brought before it judicially or quasi-judicially, but it does not constitute a Court in the technical sense. A domestic tribunal appointed in departmental proceedings, for instance, or instituted by an industrial employer cannot claim to be a tribunal under Art. 136 (1). Purely administrative tribunals are also outside the scope of the said Article. The tribunals which are contemplated by Art. 136 (1) are clothed with some of the powers of the Courts. They may not be bound by the strict and technical rules of evidence, but, nevertheless, they must decide on evidence adduced before them. The procedural rules which regulate the proceedings before the tribunals and the powers conferred on them in dealing with matters brought before them, are sometimes described as the trappings of a Court and in determining the question as to whether a particular body or authority is a tribunal or not, sometimes a rough and ready test is applied by enquiring whether the said body or authority is clothed with the trappings of a Court.

Apart from the importance of the trappings of a Court, the basic and essential condition which makes an authority or a body a tribunal under Art. 136, is that it should be constituted by the State and should be invested with the State's inherent judicial power: AIR 1950 S C 188, Rel. on.

The arbitrator under S. 10-A of the Industrial Disputes Act is clothed with certain powers, his procedure is regulated by certain rules and the award pronounced by him is given by statutory provisions a cerain validity and a binding character for a specified period. Having regard to these provisions, it may perhaps be possible to describe such an arbitrator, as, in a loose sense, a statutory arbitrator.

But the fact that the arbitrator under S. 10-A is not exactly in the same position as a private arbitrator, does not mean that he is a tribunal under Art. 136. Even if some of the trappings of a Court are present in his case, he lacks the basic, the essential and the fundamental requisite in that behalf because he is not invested with the State's inherent judicial power. He is appointed by the parties and the power to decide the dispute between the parties who appoint him is derived by him from the agreement of the parties and from no other source. The fact that his appointment once made by the parties is recognised by S. 10-A and after this appointment he is clothed with certain powers and has thus, no doubt, some of the trappings of a Court, does not mean that the power of adjudication which he is exercising is derived from the State and so, the main test in determining the question about the character of an adjudicating body is not satisfied. Hence, from the decision of an arbitrator under S. 10-A, special leave to appeal to Supreme Court under Art. 136 (1) cannot be granted.

From the mere fact that a writ under Art. 226 may lie against the award pronounced by an arbitrator acting under S. 10-A it cannot be concluded that such an arbitrator is a "tribunal" within Art. 136 (1).

Like Art. 136, Art. 227 also refers to Courts and tribunals and what is said about the character of the arbitrator appointed under S. 10 A by reference to the requirements of Art. 136 may prima facie apply to the requirements of Art. 227. ● —Art. 136—Appeal lies from adjudication of Courts and tribunals only—Tribunal, meaning of—Conciliation Officer exercising powers under Cl. 29 of Order of U P. Governor under Ss. 3 and 8 of U. P. Industrial Disputes Act—Not a Tribunal within Art. 136—Appeal against this order of direction not competent.

Under Art. 136, an appeal lies to the Supreme Court from adjudications of Courts and tribunals only. Adjudication of a Court or tribunal must doubtless be judicial; but every authority which by its constitution or authority specially conferred upon it is required to act judicially, is not necessarily a tribunal for the purpose of Art 136. A tribunal, adjudication whereof is subject to appeal, must, beside being under a duty to act judicially, be a body invested with the judicial power of the State.

The duty to act judicially imposed upon an authority by statute does not necessarily clothe the authority with the judicial power of the State. Even administrative or executive authorities are often by virtue of their constitution, required to act judicially in dealing with question affecting the rights of citizens. Boards of Revenues, Customs Authorities, Motor Vehicles Authorities, Income-tax and Sales tax Officers are illustations prima facie of such administrative authorities, who though under a duty to act judicially, are still not delegates of the judicial power of the State. Their primary function is administrative and not judicial. In deciding whether an authority required to act judicially when dealing with matters affecting rights of citizens may be regarded as tribunal, though not a Court, the principal incident is the investiture of the "trappings of a Court"—such as authority to determine matters in cases initiated by parties, sitting in public, power to compel attendance of witnesses and to examine them on oath, duty to follow fundamental rules of evidence (though not the strict rules of the Evidence Act), provision for imposing sanctions by way of imprisonment, fine, damages or mandatory or prohibitory orders to enforce obedience to their commands.

The scheme of the Order promulgated by the Governor of U. P. in exercise of his powers under Ss. 3 and 8 of the U. P. Industrial Disputes Act (1947) indicates that no procedure is prescribed for the investigation to be made by the Conciliation Officer under Cl. 29. He is concerned in granting leave to determine whether there is a prima facie case for dismissal or discharge of an employee or for altering terms of employment, and whether the employer is actuated by unfair motives; he has not to decide whether the proposed step of discharge or dismissal of the employee was within the rights of the employer. The Conciliation Officer has undoubtedly to act judicially in dealing with an application under Cl. 29, but he is not invested with the judicial power of the State and he cannot therefore be regarded as a 'tribunal' within the meaning of Art. 136 of the Constitution.

The Conciliation Officer does not hold the status of an industrial tribunal in exercising powers under S 33 of the Industrial Disputes Act or Cl. 29 of the U. P. Order. Therefore, an appeal under Art. 136 of the Constitution to the Supreme Court is not competent against the direction given by the Conciliation Officer exercising power under Cl. 29 of the Order issued by the Governor of U. P. under the U. P. Industrial Disputes Act, 1947. Jaswant Sugar Mills. Ltd., Meerut v. ● —Art. 136—'Tribual'—Order made by Central Government in appeal under S. 111 (3), Companies Act, 1956 — Order is one made by 'tribunal' (Per Majority—Hidayatullah, J. contra).

Per Majority. — The proceedings started under S. 111, Companies Act, 1956, by way of an appeal before the Central Government have all the trappings of a proceeding before a judicial tribunal Central Government exercising appellate powers under S. 111 of the Companies Act, 1956, even before its amendment by Act (65 of 1960), is a tribunal exercising judicial functions and is subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Art. 136 of the Constitution.

Per Hidayatullah, J. (Contra)—Whether the right to hear appeals generally against decisions of the Central Government acting as a tribunal be within Art. 136 or not, special leave to appeal should not be granted in such cases, unless the Supreme Court is able to rend the veil of secrecy cast by the law without rending the law itself. A party can maintain a petition for an order for rectification of the register of shareholders. In the hearing of such a petition normally the Court will presume the exercise of the power was bona fide. The discretionary power conferred by the articles of association to refuse to register would be presumed to be properly exercised and it was for the aggrieved transferor to show affirmatively that it had been exercised mala fide and not in the interest of the company. (1872) 8 Ch A 446 and (1942) 1 Ch 304, Rel. on.

In the Companies Act, 1956, the Legislature has provided a right of appeal to the Central Government, in S. 111 against the order of refusal. But the power to entertain the appeal is not unrestricted; being an alternative to the right to approach the civil Court, it must be subject to the same limitations which are implicit in the exercise of the power by the civil Court under S. 155. The Central Government may therefore exercise the power to order that the transfer which the directors have in their discretion refused, be registered if it is satisfied that the exercise of the discretion is mala fide.

As the Central Government acts as a tribunal exercising judicial powers and the exercise of that power is subject to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Art. 136 of the Constitution the power of the supreme Court cannot be effectively exercised if reasons are not given by the Central Government in support of its Order. ● —Art. 136—'Court or tribunal'—Meaning of.

Per Hidayatullah, J.—By 'Court' is meant Courts of Civil Judicature and by 'tribunals', those bodies of men who are appointed to decide controversies arising under certain special laws. Among the powers of the State is included the power to decide such controversies.

The word 'judicial' has two meanings. It may refer to the discharge of duties exercisable by a Judge or by Justices in Court, or to administrative duties which need not be performed in Court, but in respect of which it is necessary to bring to bear a judicial mind —that is a mind to determine what is fair and just in respect of the matters under consideration. That an officer is required to decide matters before him 'judicially' in the second sense does not make him a Court or even a tribunal. Harinagar Sugar Mills Ltd. v. Shyam Sunder Jhunjhunwala, (1961) 31 Com Cas 387 : (1962) 2 S C R 339 : (1963) 1 Com Cas R 1 (SC): (1963) 1 S C J 471 : (1961) 2 S C A 384 : AIR 1961 S C 1669 (1679, 1680, 1681) (Pt E) (Prs 30, 32, 33, 34).

● —Art. 136—'Tribunal' meaning of— (Words and Phrases—Tribunal)

The expression 'Tribunal' as used in Art. 136 does not mean the same thing as 'Court' but includes, within its ambit, all adjudicating bodies, provided they are constituted by the State and are invested with judicial as distinguished from purely administrative or executive functions. The only Courts or tribunals, which are expressly exempted from the purview of Art. 136, are those which are established by or under any law relating to the Armed Forces as laid down in clause (2) of the Article. ● —Art. 136—Order made by Tribunal in Pondicherry at a time when it did not form part of India —Special leave under Art. 136 cannot be granted.

Special leave to appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 136 cannot be granted from an order which was passed by the Appellate Authority in Pondicherry under the Motor Vehicles Act at a time when Pondicherry was not within the territory of India. AIR 1962 S C 797, Foll. K. S. Ramamurthy Reddiar v. Chief Commr., Pondicherry, (1963) 1 S C W R 779 : (1964) 1 S C A 108 : (1964) 1 S C R 656 : AIR 1963 S C 1464 (1466) (Pt A) (Pr 6).

● —Arts. 136 (1), 1 (3) (c), 12, 32, 142 — Pondicherry, if territory of India—Appeal under Art. 136 (1) from orders of Chief Commissioner of Pondicherry acting as appellate authority under S. 64, Motor Vehicles Act, if maintainable — Writ petition against orders — Enforcement of orders on writ petition — Powers under Art. 32 not circumscribed by territorial limitations — Question whether Pondicherry is Indian territory, referred to Union Government under S. 4, Foreign Jurisdiction Act.

No appeal lies to Supreme Court under Art. 136 (1) from the orders of the Chief Commissioner Pondicherry, acting as Appellate Authority under S. 64, Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, which was extended to Pondicherry by Government of India with effect from June 19, 1959, by a notification under S. 4, Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1947, if Pondicherry is not a territory of India. But the powers of the Supreme Court under Art. 32 of the Constitution are not circumscribed by any territorial limitation. It extends not merely over any authority within the territory of India but also those functioning outside provided that such authorities are under the control of the Government of India.

Per Majority : The power conferred on the Supreme Court by Part III of the Constitution has, however to be read in conjunction with Art. 12 of the Constitution. Article 142 brings in a limitation as regards the territory in which the orders or directions of this Court could be enforced. It is manifest that there is an anomaly between the powers of this Court under Art. 32 read with Art. 12 and the executability or enforceability of the orders under Art. 142. If the order of the authority under the control of the Government of India but functioning outside the territory of India was not of an executive or administrative nature, relief can be afforded to a petitioner under Art. 32 by passing suitable orders against the Government of India directing them to give effect to the decision of this Court by the exercise of their powers of control over the authority outside the territory of India. Such an order could be enforceable by virtue of Art. 144, as also Art. 142. But in a case where the order of the outside authority is of a quasi-judicial nature as in this case, resort to such a procedure is not possible and if the orders or directions of this Court could not be directly enforced against the authority in Pondicherry, the order would be ineffective.

Per Court : Having regard to the subject dealt with the expression, 'acquired' in Art. 1 (3) (c) should be taken to be a reference to 'acquisition'. Where the administration of the territory is being conducted under the powers vested in the Government under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act such as in the case of Pondicherry this would prima facie show that Pondicherry has not been 'acquired' but shall continue to be outside the territory of India. But though this might be very strong evidence that the territory has not been 'acquired', it is still not conclusive.

Their Lordships in the exercise of the powers vested in them under S. 6 of the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1947, referred to the Union of India for submission of their answers to the following questions : (1) Whether Pondicherry which was a former French Settlement is or is not at present comprised within the territory of India as specified in Art. 1 (3) of the Constitution by virtue of the Articles of the Merger Agreement, dated 21st October, 1954, between the Governments of India and France and other relevant agreements, arrangements, acts and conduct of the two Governments. (2) If the answer to Question 1 is that Pondicherry is not within the territory of India, what is the extent of the jurisdiction exercised by the Union Government over the said territory and whether it extends to making all and every arrangement for its civil administration, its defence and in regard to its foreign affairs. The Government of India might also state the extent of jurisdiction which France possesses over the area and which operates as a diminution of the jurisdiction ceded to or enjoyed by the Government of India. On the question whether the Supreme Gourt can grant special leave to appeal under Art. 136 of the Constitution from judgments or sentences which were passed and made by the Hyderabad High Court on the 12th, 13th and 14th December, 1949. (i. e.) before the 26th of January. 1950, when the Constitution of India became applicable to Hyderabad State, Held, Under the words used in Art. 136, the Courts which passed judgments or sentences must be Courts within the territory of India. The territory of the Government of His Exalted Highness the Nizam was never the territory of India before 26th of January, 1950 and therefore the judgments and sentences passed by the High Court of His Exalted Highness the Nizam on the 12th, 13th and 14th of December, 1949, cannot be considered as judgments and sentences "passed by a Court within the territory of India" within the meaning of Art. 136 of the Constitution of India and therefore special leave to appeal against such judgments and sentences cannot be granted.

The question of hardship cannot be and, should not be allowed to affect the true meaning of the words used in the Constitution. The proper way is to approach the Articles irrespective of considerations of hardship. Janardhan Reddy v. ● ——Art. 136—Conviction by High Court in appeal —Supreme Court's jurisdiction to interfere—Practice of Supreme Court stated.

Per K. Subba Rao and Mudholkar, JJ. : In an appeal under Art. 136, against the judgment of the High Court convicting an accused after setting aside the order of acquittal made by a subordinate Court, the Supreme Court has undoubted jurisdiction to interfere even with findings of fact arrived at by the High Court.

The Supreme Court can, under Art. 136, in its discretion, entertain an appeal and exercise all the powers of an appellate Court in respect of judgments, decrees, determinations, sentences or orders mentioned therein. But that wide jurisdiction has to be regulated by the practice of the Court. The fact that the appellate Court in setting aside the order of acquittal has not followed the principles laid down by the Supreme Court in AIR 1961 S C 715, may certainly be a ground for that Court interfering with the judgment of the High Court. But if the High Court, having followed the aforesaid principles has considered the evidence and given findings of fact thereon, the same practice obtaining in the Court in regard to findings of fact in appeals under Art. 136, of the Constitution may conveniently be adopted.

Ordinarily the Supreme Court addresses itself to two questions when such an appeal comes before it for disposal, namely, (i) did the appellate Court follow the principles laid down by that Court in Sanwat Singh's case, AIR 1961 S C 715, in appreciating the evidence; and (ii) if it did, is it one of those exceptional cases which calls for the interference of that Court?

Per Raghubar Dayal, J. : The entire exercise of the Court's discretion under Art. 136, is solely dependent on the views of a particular Bench deciding a certain appeal on the basis of the facts and law and it is for that Bench as to how to proceed to hear and decide that appeal. No useful purpose is served by laying down what appears to a certain Bench to be a preferable mode for hearing such appeals and when to interfere with the order of the Court below. It is really for the Bench hearing the special leave petition to consider as fully as possible whether the case deserves a hearing in the Supreme Court, if it deserves a hearing whether that is to be limited to any particular aspect of law or fact and that therefore if the Bench grants special leave, it should make clear the matters on which it considers a hearing in the Supreme Court desirable or necessary. If no such indication is given, the appeal should preferably be heard both on facts and law. Dividing the hearing of an appeal under Art. 136, into two parts, hearing on a broader view and later, if necessary, on facts, does not go to make a hearing as perfect as it would be desirable for a proper adjudication of the appeal.

After hearing the appeal fully, the Court is in the best position as to how to dispose of the appeal. It can surely dispose of it by merely stating that it sees no reason to consider the findings of fact to be incorrect or it may consider those findings and express a different opinion. Nihal Singh v. Per Venkatarama Ayyar J.—When in appeal under S. 417, Criminal P. C., the High Court considers the evidence and comes to its own conclusion the findings recorded by it are not, open to interference by the Supreme Court in special appeal. Had the law provided a further appeal on facts against those orders of reversal the appreciation of the evidence by the High Court would be a matter open to review in the Supreme Court. And that would be the position in an appeal under Arts. 132 (1) and 134 (1) (a) and (b). But where no appeal on facts is provided the decision of the High Court is not open to review by the Supreme Court under Art. 136 on the ground that there were no compelling reasons for the Judges of the High Court to reverse an order of acquittal. Where the High Court reverses the decision of the trial Court without noticing or giving due weight and consideration to important matters relied upon by that Court and its decision has to a large extent been influenced by suspicious circumstances disclosed at the trial which are undoubtedly prejudicial to the accused, but in regard to which no opportunity of explanation was given to him when he was examined under the provision of S. 342, Criminal P. ● —Art. 136 — Acquittal — Power of Supreme Court to interfere — Extent of.

It cannot be said that under Art. 136 interference by the Supreme Court with findings of High Courts in judgments of acquittal is not intended. In Art. 136, the use of the words "Supreme Court may in its discretion grant special leave to appeal from any sentence made by any Court in the territory of India" show that in criminal matter no distinction can be made as a matter of construction between a judgment of conviction or acquittal. The Supreme Court will not readily interfere with the findings of fact given by the High Court, but if the High Court acts perversely or otherwise improperly, interference will be called for : AIR 1956 S C 158. ● —Art. 136—Exercise of extraordinary jurisdiction by Supreme Court when order of acquittal is made by High Court.

The exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction vested in the Supreme Court by Art. 136 is not justifiable in criminal cases unless exceptional or special circumstances are shown to exist or that substantial and grave injustice has been done. In the case of an order of acquittal where the presumption of the innocence of an accused person is reinforced by an order of acquittal of a High Court, the exercise of this jurisdiction will not be justified for merely correcting errors of fact or law of the High Court. An occasion for interference with an acquittal order may arise, however, where a High Court acts perversely or otherwise improperly or has been deceived by fraud. AIR 1950 S C 169. Rel. on. The Supreme Court is not a Court of appeal in criminal matters except on a certificate by the High Court or in the exceptional case described in Art. 134 of the Constitution, and it is not the practice of that Court in a criminal appeal on special leave to examine at large the evidence in the case unless there are circumstances which make it feel that there has been a miscarriage of justice. ● ——Art. 136 — Criminal case — Consideration of evidence.

Per Kapur and Hidayatullah, JJ. — Ordinarily the Supreme Court does not re-assess the evidence and re-examine the findings reached by the Courts below particularly where there are concurrent findings of fact. But where it is urged by the appellants in an appeal from conviction based solely on circumstantial evidence, that the circumstances established do not lead to the irresistible conclusion that the appellants are guilty, while according to the submissions of the respondents, they lead to one conclusion alone that the appellants have been rightly convicted, the Supreme Court may find it expedient to go into evidence and satisfy itself as to the guilt of the appellants. ● ——Art. 136 — Criminal appeal—Practice of Supreme Court—Review of evidence.

It is the settled practice of the Supreme Court that unless the trial is vitiated by an illegality or irregularity of procedure and the trial is held in a manner violative of the principles of natural justice resulting in an unfair trial, or unless the trial has resulted in gross miscarriage of justice, the Supreme Court in a criminal appeal, does not normally enter upon a review of the evidence on which the conclusion of the Courts below is founded. ● ——Art. 136—Right of appeal —:Question of fact —Interference.

Article 136 does not confer a right of appeal on any party from the decision of a Court; but it confers a discretionary power on the Supreme Court to interfere in suitable cases. The practice of the Privy Council and that followed by the Federal Court and the Supreme Court is not to interfere on questions of fact except in exceptional cases, when by disregard to the forms of legal process or some violation of the principles of natural justice or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done. Where the findings in the case at some places appeared to be inconsi-tent, and the admitted and proved circumstances were prima facie indicative of the guilt of the accused, the Supreme Court heard the counsel at some length on facts to ascertain whether it was one of those exceptional cases where the Supreme Court must deviate from the conventional rule of guidance laid down by it. ● ——Art. 136—Additional evidence— Admission of —Usually the Supreme Court does not admit additional evidence in appeals under Art. 136—It was the duty of the party to adduce evidence at the proper stage. Tika Ram & Sons, Ltd. v. Its Workmen, (1959-60) 16 F J R 255 : 1959 S C R 1287 : (1960) 1 Lab L J 514 : AIR 1960 S C 198 (199, 200) (Pt A) (Prs 8, 9).

● ——Art. 136—Question of fact.

In an appeal by special leave it is not ordinarily permissible to make submissions on questions of fact. Ram Prakash v. State of Punjab, 1959 All W R (H C) 152 : 1959 S C A 524 : 1959 Mad L J (Cr) 51 : 1959 All Cr R 179: 1959 Cri L J 90 : 1959 S C J 181 : 1959 S C R 1219 : AIR 1959 S C 1 (8) (Pt B) (Pr 12).

● ——Arts. 136 and 134—Certificate of fitness—Main ground, relating to question of fact — High Court not justified in sending up such case for further consideration by Supreme Court which does not, ordinarily, concern itself with deciding questions of fact unless such questions arise on a certificate granted under Cl. (a) or Cl. (b) of Art. 134 (1). See Ibid, Art. 134. AIR 1958 S C 22.

● ——Art. 136 — Appreciation of evidence — Interference.

Believing or disbelieving witnesses is essentially a matter of the Courts of fact and in an appeal by special leave the Supreme Court will not ordinarily interfere with their discretion.

Where the High Court was in error in thinking that it was the defence case that one of the accused had been beaten by the police at the time of his arrest but the error had not caused, failure of justice in the circumstances of the case :

Held, that this was not a case in which the Supreme Court would go behind the finding in that respect. Brij Bhukhan v. The State of Uttar Pradesh, 1957 Cri L J 591 : A I R 1957 S C 474 (476, 477) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

● ——Art. 136—Reference under S. 307, Cr. P. Code —High Court failing to consider evidence — Interference—(Cr. P. Code (1898), S. 307).

Where in reference under S. 307, Cr. P. Code the High Court failed to consider the entire evidence on record and in the appeal by special leave, the Supreme Court were invited to consider the entire evidence for themselves and come to the conclusion which, according to the provisions of S. 307 (3) the High Court should have done, the Supreme Court did not think that that was the proper procedure to adopt and remanded the matter to the High Court. Ramyed Rai v. State of Bihar, 1957 Cri L J 557 : 1957 S C R 273 : 1957 Pat L R (S C) 39 : I L R 36 Pat 464 : 1957 B L J R 316 : 1957 All L J 470 : 1957 M P C 363 : 1957 S C A 612 : 1957 All W R (H C) 485 : AIR 1957 S C 373 (375) (Pt B) (Pr 9).

● ——Art. 136 — Appreciation of evidence — Interference.

Except where there has been an illegality, or an irregularity of procedure, or a violation of the principles of natural justice resulting in an absence of fair trial or a gross miscarriage of justice the Supreme Court does not permit a third review of evidence with regard to questions of fact in cases in which two Courts of fact have appreciated and assessed the evidence with regard to such questions. Chikharage Gowda v. State of Mysore, I L R (1956) Mys 377 : 1956 Cri L J 1365 : 1957 Ker L J 25 : AIR 1956 S C 731 (735) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

● ——Art. 136—Appreciation of evidence—Credibility of witness—Interference.

As to whether the witness should be or should not be believed is prima facie a matter for the Courts of fact to determine. Khacheru Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 1956 Cr L J 950 : AIR 1956 S C 546 (548) (Pt C) (Pr 6).

● ——Art. 136 — Appreciation of evidence — Interference.

The Supreme Court is not a Court of appeal when it acts under Art 136 and it is not the practice of the Supreme Court to review or re-assess the evidence in special leave.

Where in a case under S. 149 read with S. 302, Penal Code, the two Courts of fact are satisfied that an unlawful object developed after the attack had started, and there are circumstances from which Courts of fact would deduce such an inference there is no reason for the Supreme Court to interfere. Sukha v. State of Rajasthan, 1956 All W R (Sup) 83 : 1956 Cr L J 923 : 1956 S C J 503 : 1956 S C R 288 : 1956 Andhra L T 583 : 1956 S C A 781 : 1956 S C C 355 : 1956 S C R 288 ; AIR 1956 S C 513 (518, 519) (Pt B) (Prs 29, 31),

● ——Art. 136—Appreciation of evidence.

The Supreme Court will not, save in very exceptional cases, convert itself into a regular Court of appeal on evidence, in dealing with matters arising by way of special leave. In a case where it finds that the appellate Court has not at all applied in judicial mind to the appreciation of the evidence and grave injustice has resulted therefrom, the Supreme Court may remand the case to the first appellate Court for fresh consideration. Surjan v. State of Rajasthan, 1956 Cr L J 815 : AIR 1956 S C 425 (431) (Pt B) (Pr 9).

● ——Art. 136—Appreciation of evidence.

In appeal by special leave, the Supreme Court cannot, consistently with its practice, convert itself into a third Court of facts. Gurbakhsh Singh v. State of Punjab, 1955 Cr L J 869 : AIR 1955 S C 320 (322) (Pr 4).

● ——Art. 136 — Criminal appeal on special leave — Appellants sentenced to death on opinion of third Judge — Consideration of evidence—Practice—(Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 411-A).

Though ordinarily, the Supreme Court in a criminal Appeal would not enquire into the questions of fact, yet where three persons have been sentenced to death on the opinion of the third Judge, despite the opinion of one that the death sentence should not be imposed and of the other that they are not guilty and so should be acquitted, the Supreme Court deemed it advisable to examine the evidence. ● —Art. 136—Appreciation of evidence—Question of fact—Finding of High Court—If can be discarded in appeal under Art. 136.

Where the High Court in second Appeal has preferred the view taken by the Trial Court and has refused to accept the view taken by the First Appellate Court, in an appeal with special leave under Art. 136 of the Constitution, Supreme Court will not ordinarily discard the findings of the High Court on what is essentially a question of fact, and on which question the Court was competent under the law governing the appeal before it to arrive. Mahadu, 1965 S C D 275 : (1965) 1 Andh L T 306 : (1965) 2 S C J 632 : (1965) 2 Andh W R (SC) 116 : (1965) 2 Mad L J (SC) 116 : (1965) 1 S C W R 278 : AIR 1965 S C 703 (708) (Pt A) (Pr 6).

● —Art. 136 — Finding of fact—Interference by Supreme Court in exceptional cases.

Ordinarily the Supreme Court in exercise of its jurisdiction under Art. 136 of the Constitution accepts the findings of fact arrived at by the High Court.

Held this was an exceptional case to depart from the said practice and the Supreme Court would consider the entire evidence for itself. Dayabhai Chhaganbhai Thakkar v. See Prevention of Corruption Act (1947), S. 4 (1). AIR 1964 S C 575.

● —Art. 136—Jurisdiction of High Court in cases of professional misconduct—Finding of High Court —Interference by Supreme Court.

The jurisdiction exercised by the High Court in cases of professional misconduct is neither civil nor criminal as these expressions are used in Arts. 133 and 134 of the Constitution. In one aspect it is a jurisdiction over an officer of the Court and the Advocate owes a duty to the Court apart from his duty to his clients. In another aspect it is a statutory power and a duty vested in the Court under S. 10 of the Bar Councils Act to ensure that the highest standards of professional rectitude are maintained, so that the Bar can render its expert service to the public in general and the litigants in particular and thus discharge its main function of co-operating with the judiciary in the administration of justice according to law. The Supreme Court is in consequence most reluctant to interfere with the orders of High Courts in this field, save in exceptional cases when any question of principle is involved or where the Supreme Court is persuaded that any violation of the principles of natural justice has taken place or that otherwise there has been a miscarriage of justice. Where however none of these factors are present, it is not the practice of the Supreme Court to permit the canvassing of the evidence on the record either for reappraising it or to determine whether it should be accepted or not. The findings of the High Court therefore on questions of fact are not open before the Supreme Court and it would only consider whether on the facts found, the charge of professional misconduct is established. ● ——Art. 136 — Finding of fact — Finding as to debtor's inability to pay — Interference— AIR 1955 Punj 193, Reversed.

Where the two lower Courts of appeal are under a clear misapprehension as to the finding of a fact by the trial Court, the Supreme Court will examine the evidence itself. AIR 1955 Punj. 193, Reversed. Kaushal Kishore v. Ram Dev, AIR 1958 S C 999 (1001) (Pr 5).

● ——Art. 136—Findings of fact—Interference.

The Supreme Court will not ordinarily interfere with findings of fact given by the trial Judge and the Appeal Court but if in giving the findings the Courts ignore certain important pieces of evidence and other pieces of evidence which are equally important are shown to have been misread and misconstrued and the Supreme Court comes to the conclusion that on the evidence taken as a whole no tribunal could properly as a matter of legitimate inference arrive at the conclusion that it has, interference by the Supreme Court will be called for. ● ——Art. 136 — Evidence — Breach of civil liability or offence under S. 420, Penal Code — Facts found against accused by lower Courts — If open to challenge in Supreme Court—(Penal Code (1860), S. 420).

The question whether the evidence discloses only a breach of civil liability or a criminal offence under S. 420, Penal Code, depends upon whether the complainant in parting with his money acted on the representation, of the accused and in belief of the truth thereof and were in fact false to the knowledge of the accused. If the Courts below find these facts specifically against the accused in categorical terms, the above questions of fact are not open to challenge in the Supreme Court in an appeal on special leave. Mobarik Ali Ahmed v. State of Bombay, 61 Bom L R 58 : (1958) Mad L J (Cri) 42 : 1958 S C A 865 : 1958 All W R (H C) 112 : 1958 All Cr R 94 : 1958 S C R 328 : 1958 S C J 111 : 1957 Cri L J 1346 : AIR 1957 S C 857 (863) (Pt A) (Pr 8).

● ——Art. 136—Appeal under special leave—Question of voluntariness of confession — Consideration of — (Evidence Act (1872), S. 24) — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 164).

Prima facie whether or not the confession is voluntary would be a question of fact and in an appeal by special leave under Art. 136, the Supreme Court would be reluctant to interfere with a finding on such a question of fact unless they are satisfied that the impugned finding has been reached without applying the true and relevant legal tests in the matter. Sarwan Singh Ratan Singh v. State of Punjab, 35 Mys L J 255 : 1957 S C R 953 : ILR (1957) Punj 1602 : 1957 Mad W N (SC) 88 : 1957 Pat L R (S C) 53 : 1957 All L R (Sup) 99 : (1957) M L J (Cr) 672 : (1957) S C J 699 : 1957 M P C 781 : 1957 Cri L J 1014 : AIR 1957 S C 637 (643) (Pt G) (Pr 10).

● ——Art. 136—Finding of fact—Finality.

The Supreme Court is, in criminal appeal under special leave, ordinarily bound by the finding of fact arrived at by the High Court; but if it is found that the High Court has not dealt with the appeal as it should have, the Supreme Court will proceed to hear the appeal on the evidence. Juman v. The State of Punjab, 1957 Cri L J 586 : AIR 1957 S C 469 (472) (Pt B) (Pr 13).

● ——Art 136—Appreciation of evidence — Finding of fact how far binding — Penal Code (1860), Ss. 34 and 302 – Applicability.

Held on facts, in an appeal by special leave, ordinarily the Supreme Court is bound by the findings of fact arrived at by the High Court and especially when such findings are in favour of the accused, the request on behalf of the State to canvass the correctness of the findings of the High Court, cannot be granted. The Judges of the High Court were apparently not alive to the situation created by the conclusion on facts which leave no option but to hold that the appellant is not guilty of the offence. In order, that S. 34 may be applied in a case of this kind, the common intention of committing the crime must be attributed to more than one individual and if the offence is the result of a joint act of more than one person, then only each one of them can be found guilty under S. 302 read with S. 34, Penal Code. Zabar Singh v. The State of Uttar Pradesh, 1957 Cri L J 581 : AIR 1957 S C 465 (466) (Pr 8).

● ——Art. 136 – Findings of fact — Interference. See Representation of the People Act (1951), S. 123 (7). AIR 1957 S C 444.

● ——Art. 136—Findings of fact—Interference.

The ordinary rule of the Supreme Court is not to go behind the findings of fact arrived at by the Courts below unless there is a sufficient ground for doing so. Kamala Devi v. ● ——Art. 136 — Scope — Findings of fact — Interference.

In an appeal by way of special leave, the Supreme Court does not interfere with the findings of fact arrived at by the Court below unless something substantial is shown to persuade it to go behind the findings of fact arrived at by them. Kacheru Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 1956 Cri L J 950 : AIR 1956 S C 546 (547) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

● ——Art. 136 – Findings of fact—Interference.

The Supreme Court on special leave does not ordinarily interfere with findings of fact of the Courts below. Ram Shankar Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 1956 Cri L J 822 : 1956 S C A 591 : AIR 1956 S C 441 (445) (Pt B) (Pr 9).

● ——Art. 136 — Criminal Appeal — Appreciation of evidence.

Where the Courts below have carefully examined and accepted evidence of eye-witnesses directly incriminating the appellant, the Supreme Court on special leave will not ordinarily go behind their findings. Chhutannai v. State of U. P., 1956 Cri L J 797 : AIR 1956 S C 407 (410) (Pt A) (Pr 8).

● ——Art. 136—Appreciation of evidence.

The question whether the evidence that the accused was seen with the deceased at about the time of the occurrence near a garden should be believed is one on which the Supreme Court would not ordinarily interfere with the views of the Courts below. Nathu v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 1956 Cri L J 152 : A I R 1956 S C 56 (59) (Ft D) (Pr 8).

● ——Art. 136—Question of fact.

The question whether a person is a benamidar or not, is purely one of fact, and a finding thereon cannot be interfered with in special appeal, if there is evidence on which it could be based. ● ——Art. 136—Special leave — Respondent, if can take up point decided against him by High Court — Supreme Court—Practice.

In an appeal to the Supreme Court, upon special leave the Supreme Court will not allow the respondent to re-open a finding of fact decided against him by the High Court. Bhikaji Keshao v. ● ——Art. 136 — Question of fact cannot be reagitated.

In a special leave to appeal under Art. 136, it is not open to the appellant to re-agitate questions of fact and ask the Court to disturb the findings of fact arrived at by the Courts below. Those findings must therefore be accepted as binding. Kunjilal v. State of M. ● ——Art. 136—Interference with finding of fact.

A finding of fact depending upon the merits or appreciation of the evidence is not open to reconsideration in an appeal brought by special leave.

Held, that no flagrant error of law or procedure had been pointed out to the Supreme Court in the findings of the Courts below, nor was the Supreme Court satisfied that in arriving at findings of fact any miscarriage of justice had resulted to accused. ● ——Art. 136—Murder trial — Concurrent finding by Courts below about deceased having died on account of gunshot injuries received by him — No evidence to support finding — Finding can be looked into by Supreme Court.

It is necessary for proving the charge of murder by firing that the deceased had died on account of the gunshot injuries received by him and any finding to that effect, in the absence of evidence, can be looked into by the Supreme Court even though the Courts below have confirmed that finding. ● ——Art. 136—Concurrent findings of lower Courts on simple questions of fact — High Court in second appeal interfering on ground of insufficiency of evidence — Contravention of S. 100, Civil P. C. — Supreme Court would interfere.

Where the Supreme Court is satisfied that in dealing with a second appeal the High Court has either unwillingly and in a casual manner or deliberately contravened the limits prescribed by S. 100, Civil P. C., by interfering with concurrent findings on simple questions of fact on ground of insufficiency of evidence, it becomes the duty of the Supreme Court to intervene and give effect to the said provisions. It may be that in some cases, the High Court dealing with the second appeal is inclined to take the view that what it regards to be justice or equity of the case has not been served by the findings of fact recorded by Courts of fact. ● ——Art. 136 — Concurrent findings of fact — No interference—Hindu law—Partition—Question whether certain property was left undivided.

Prima facie, the question whether at a partition between members of a joint Hindu family, certain property was left undivided is a question of fact depending upon appreciation of evidence, and the Supreme Court, according to its settled practice, would not disturb a concurrent finding on the question. The Supreme Court would not be justified in an appeal with special leave in discarding a finding by the trial Court because some other evidence which could have been brought before the Court in support thereof was not tendered. ● ——Art. 136 — Concurrent findings by lower Courts based on circumstantial evidence — Supreme Court will re-examine finding of fact.

Ordinarily, it is not the practice of the Supreme Court to re-examine the findings of fact reached by the High Court, particularly in a case where there is concurrence of opinion between the two Courts below. Where the case against the accused was entirely based on circumstantial evidence and there was no direct evidence that he administered a poison to the deceased their Lordships of the Supreme Court felt it necessary, in view of the extraordinary nature of the case to satisfy themselves whether each conclusion on the separate aspects of the case was supported by evidence and was just and proper. Ordinarily, the Supreme Court was not required to enter into an elaborate examination of the evidence, but it departed from this rule in the particular case, in view of the evidence of conduct which the appellant had sought to explain away on hypothesis suggesting innocence. Anant Chintaman Lagu v. State of Bombay, 1960 Cri L J 682 : 62 Bom L R 371 : 1960 Mad L J (Cr) 493 : 1960 S C J 779 : (1960) 2 S C A 623 : (1960) 2 S C R 460 : A I R 1960 S C 500 (505) (Pt B) (Pr 16).

● ——Art. 136 — Appreciation of evidence — Concurrent findings of fact.

It is against the practice of the Supreme Court in an appeal by special leave to embark on an assessment of the evidence when two Courts have already assessed it and come to concurrent conclusions therefrom. Charan Singh v. The State of Uttar Pradesh, 1960 S C (Notes) 68.

● ——Art. 136—Concurrent findings of fact—Interference by Supreme Court.

It is not the practice of the Supreme Court to set aside findings of fact concurrently arrived at by the Courts below.

Where the Courts below could on the evidence before them legally come to the conclusion that the consideration mentioned in the deed of sale had been paid, it is not for the Supreme Court to substitute its own view of the question for the view taken by the Courts below. ● ——Art. 136 — Interference with concurrent findings of fact.

In an appeal filed by special leave under Art. 136 of the Constitution it is not normally open to the appellant to raise questions of fact or to ask for interference with concurrent findings of fact, unless the findings are vitiated by errors of law or the conclusions reached by the Courts below are so patently opposed to well-established principles as to amount to a miscarriage of justice. Ratan Gond v. State of Bihar, 1960 Andh L T 407 : 1959 Mad L J (Cr) 109 : 1959 Cri L J 108 : 1959 All L J 35 : 1959 All W R (HC) 108 : 1959 B L J R 1 : 1959 M P C 46 : 1959

● ——Art. 136—Appeal by special leave — Conviction based on concurrent findings of facts — Interference—(Cr. P. Code (1898), S. 411-A).

In a criminal appeal filed by special leave under Art. 136, it would normally not be open to the appellants to raise questions of fact before the Supreme Court, unless they are satisfied that the said findings are vitiated by errors of law or that the conclusions reached by the Courts below are so patently opposed to well established principles of judicial approach that they can be characterised as wholly unjustified and even perverse. ● ——Art. 136—Concurrent findings of fact—Interference.

When both the Tribunal and the High Court have made concurrent findings of fact against the appellant that he was guilty of professional misconduct the Supreme Court in an appeal admitted on special leave under Art. 136 of the Constitution would not re-examine on merits that finding of fact. Manaklal, Advocate v. Dr. Premchand Singhvi, (1957) S C J 359 : (1957) Mad L J (Cr) 254 : 1957 S C A 719 : 1957 S C R 575 : A I R 1957 S C 425 (433) (Pt C) (Pr 11).

● ——Art. 136—Concurrent findings of fact—Interference.

Where both the Sessions Judge and the High Court concurred in the conclusion arrived at regarding respective degrees of guilt of the various accused the Supreme Court hearing an appeal under special leave would not ordinarily canvass the correctness or justification of the findings on question of fact arrived at by the lower Courts. Dharman v. State of Punjab, 1957 Cri L J 420 : A I R 1957 S C 324 (325) (Pt A) (Pr 4).

● ——Art. 136 (1)—Concurrent findings — Finding about guilt when can be re-opened by Supreme Court.

Where the Sessions Judge accepts the testimony of the prosecution witnesses and disbelieves the story put forward by the accused and in this he has the concurrence of the High Court on appeal, the Supreme Court would not be justified in re-opening the finding about the guilt of the accused appellants, if no question of law is involved or if the conclusion is not perverse or opposed to principles of natural justice or revolting to judicial conscience. Niranjan Singh v. State of U. P., 1957 Mad W N (S C) 1 : (1957) Mad L J (Cri) 1 : 1957 S C A 75 : 1957 S C J 69 : 1957 Cri L J 294 : 1957 All W R (HC) 258 : 1956 S C R 734 : 1957 All L J 233 : I L R (1956) 2 All 745 : AIR 1957 S C 142 (146) (Pt A) (Pr 11).

● ——Art. 136 — Practice — Concurrent findings of fact—Interference by Supreme Court.

The usual practice of the Supreme Court in special appeals under Art. 136 is not to disturb findings of fact by Tribunals unless there are exceptional grounds therefor. But where the Tribunal has spoken in two voices, and has given inconsistent and conflicting findings, the Supreme Court has, if necessary to determine which of them should be accepted as supported by material findings. Pipraich Sugar Mills, Ltd. v. Pipraich Sugar Mills Mazdoor Union, (1956-57) 11 F J R 262 : (1957) 1 Lab L J 235 : 1957 S C J 38 : 1956 S C R 872 : 1957 S C A 28 : AIR 1957 S C 95 (102) (Pt C) (Pr 11).

● ——Art. 136—Appeal by special leave in criminal case —Appreciation of evidence by lower Court — Inferference in appeal—Concurrent findings of lower Courts —Effect.

Where the witnesses on a certain point are, after due consideration of the circumstances and the criticisms levelled against their evidence, believed by both the Courts below, it is not for the Supreme Court to reweigh or to re-appreciate their evidence and come to a contrary conclusion. Pritam Singh v. State of Punjab, 1956 Cr L J 805 : AIR 1956 S C 415 (422, 424) (Pt A) (Prs 19, 21, 25).

● ——Art. 136—Appreciation of evidence.

Support was sought to be derived from the discrepancies to be found in regard to the date of the occurrence in the evidence as also in the report of the injuries made by the doctor to the police on the 15th March, 1952, evening. It was suggested that apart from the occurrence of the 13th March, 1952, deposed to by the witnesses there must have been of necessity some further occurrence on the evening of the 14th March, 1952, which aggravated the condition of the deceased and which was really responsible for his ultimate death. Both the Courts below arrived at a concurrent finding of fact that the injuries were really inflicted by the accused on the person of the deceased on the evening of the 13th March, 1952, and these were the injuries which were responsible for the ultimate death of the deceased.

Held, that the Supreme Court had no reason to differ from this concurrent finding of fact. Inder Singh v. State of Pepsu, 1955 Cr L J 1014 : I L R (1954) Patiala 380 : AIR 1955 S C 439 (440) (Pt B) (Pr 6).

● ——Art. 136 — Supreme Court—Practice—Concurrent findings of three courts—Mixed question of law and fact —Nature of property — Interference.

The question as to non-ancestral nature of property is a mixed question of law and fact and when there is a concurrent finding on it of three courts, it cannot be allowed to be re-opened in an appeal before the Supreme Court. Gopal Singh v. Ujagar Singh, 1954 S C J 562 : (1955) 1 S C R 86 : 1955 S C A 223 : AIR 1954 S C 579 (580) (Pt A) (Pr 7).

● ——Art. 136— Concurrent finding based on sole testimony of unreliable witness who was himself a party to the preparation of a forged document in the case — Review by Supreme Court on special leave.

When the Court of first instance and the Court of appeal arrive at concurrent findings of fact after believing the evidence of a witness, the Supreme Court as the final Court does not disturb such findings save in most exceptional cases. Thus where a finding of fact is arrived at on the testimony of a witness who is not a person on whom any reliance could be placed and who was himself a party to the preparation of a forged document in the suit and the courts below have departed from the rule of prudence that such testimony should not be accepted unless it is corroborated by some other evidence on the record, a finding of that character in the circumstances of a particular case may well be reviewed even on special leave if the other circumstances in the case require it, and substantial and grave injustice has resulted. Hanumant v. The State of Madhya Pradesh. (1952) S C A 623 : 1952 All W R (Sup) 109 : 1953 Mad W N 347 : (1952) 2 M L J 631 : 1952 S C J 509 : 1952 S C R 1091 : 54 Cr L J 129 : AIR 1952 S C 343 (345) (Pt A) (Pr 9).

● ——Art. 136 – Supreme Court practice — Concurrent findings on questions of fact —Interference.

When the Courts below have given concurrent findings on pure questions of fact, the Supreme Court would not ordinarily interfere with these findings and review the evidence unless there are exceptional circumstances justifying departure from this normal practice. The position may undoubtedly be different if the inference is one of law from facts admitted and proved or where the finding of fact is materially affected by a violation of any rule of law or procedure. The practice adopted by the Supreme Court is similar to what has always been acted upon by the Judicial Committee. "It is not by any means a cast iron practice" ; there may occur cases of unusual nature which might constrain the Supreme Court to interfere with the concurrent findings of fact to avoid miscarriage of justice. Sriniwas Ram Kumar v. Mahabir Prasad, 1951 A L J (S C) 64 : 64 L W 544 : (1951) S C J 261 : ILR 30 Pat 673 : (1951) S C R 277 : 87 C L J 236 : AIR 1951 S C 177 (179) (Pt A) (Pr 8).

● ——Art. 136 – Appeal under – Concurrent findings of fact by lower courts cannot be interfered with.

In appeals under Art. 136 the High Court generally does not interfere with the concurrent findings of fact. The appeal preferred by accused has to be limited to questions of law which may arise on the findings recorded against him by the courts below. Krishnan Nair v. The scope of an appeal cannot, even at the instance of the respondent who is entitled to support a decree in his favour even upon a ground found against him by the High Court, be permitted to be enlarged beyond that of the appeal before the High Court or the Courts below. But the Supreme Court may deal with it, if it is a question of considerable importance and might be raised in other similar suits which are pending. Bharat Kala Bhandar, Ltd., (Private) v. ● —Art. 136—New plea —Plea of jurisdiction not depending upon investigation of facts — Plea that order of Magistrate acting under S. 259 of Cantonments Act is not revisible under Ss. 435/439 of Cr. P. Code —Plea not allowed to be raised —Order can be interfered with under Art. 227 of the Constitution.

It is true that a question of jurisdiction not depending upon facts to be investigated can be allowed to be raised at any stage. But where in an appeal by special leave before the Supreme Court the question is raised for the first time that the Magistrate acting under S. 259 of the Cantonments Act (1924) is a persona designata and, therefore, his order is not revisable under Ss. 435, 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, though the High Court may not have jurisdiction to interfere under Ss. 435/439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure it can certainly interfere with the order of the Magistrate under Art. 227 of the Constitution. If this point had been raised before the High Court it may very well be that the High Court might have considered the reference as if it was an application before it under Art. 227 of the Constitution, in which case the High Court would have jurisdiction to interfere with the order of the Magistrate if it came to the conclusion that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction under S. 259 of the Act. In the circumstances the Supreme Court would not permit the appellant to raise this point before it. Cantonment Board, Ambala v. ● ——Art. 136—Question of law or fact not raised before High Court, when can be raised before Supreme Court.

It may be conceded that if a point of fact which plainly arises on the record, or a point of law which is relevant and material can be argued without any further evidence being taken, it may, in a proper case, be permissible to the appellants to ask the Supreme Court to consider that point in an appeal under Art. 136 of the Constitution; after all in criminal proceedings of this character where sentences of death are imposed on the appellants, it may not be appropriate to refuse to consider relevant and material pleas of fact and law only on the ground that they were not urged before the High Court. If it is shown that the pleas were actually urged before the High Court and had not been considered by it, then of course, the party is entitled as a matter of right to obtain a decision on those pleas from the Supreme Court. But even otherwise no hard and fast rule can be laid down prohibiting such pleas being raised in appeals under Art. 136. Masalti v. State of U. P., 1964 S C D 980 : 1964 Mad W N 588 : (1965) 1 S C J

● ——Art, 136 — Plea of mala fide against Government based on averments made for first time in application for special leave to appeal, cannot be raised in special appeal.

A plea of mala fide must always be made by proper pleadings at the trial stage, so that the respondent has an opportunity to meet the said pleadings. A case of mala fides cannot be made on the averments made for the first time in the application for special leave, Makhan Singh Tarsikka v State of Punjab, 1964 Cur L J (S C) 1: 1964 S C D 201: 1964 (2) Cri L J 217 : (1965) 2 S C A 739 : AIR 1964 S C 1120 (1126) (Pt B) (Pr 17).

● ——Art. 136—New plea—Case not made out in statement of case—Cannot be allowed at time of arguments.

If a certain case is not made out in the statement of the case the Supreme Court will not allow the case to be made out at the time of the arguments. The Supreme Court has to be very strict in enforcing the rules of pleading, as laid down in the rules of the Supreme Court bearing on the question of statement of case of the parties. These rules have been laid down with a view to help the Court in narrowing down the controversies between the parties and also for the purpose of giving notice to the other side that a particular question will be raised, and that that party should be ready to meet that particular point. The Supreme Court would not ordinarily permit any laxity in the matter of pleadings in the Supreme Court. Tulsi Das Khimji v. Where no grievance was made in the lower Courts about non-compliance with the requirements of S. 342, Criminal P. ● ——Art. 136—New plea.

In an appeal by special leave against the award of an Industrial Tribunal it was contended that the Tribunal erred in awarding bonus without having recorded a conclusion as regards the existence and extent of gap between the actual wages received by the workmen and the living wage. No such ground had been taken in the petition for special leave to appeal. The award of the Tribunal as well as the statement of the case filed by the appellant did not refer to any such question having been raised.

Held, that it was not open to the appellant to urge such contention in appeal before the Supreme Court. Burmah Shell Refineries, Ltd. v. Their Workmen, (1961) 1 S C J 577 : 1961 S C D 458 : (1961) 3 S C R 669 : (1961) 2 Fac L R 273 : (1961) 1 Lab L J 644 : AIR 1961 S C 917 (919) (Pt A) (Pr 3).

● ——Art. 136 — New point — Industrial dispute — Important point or mixed question of fact and law.

In an industrial dispute points of importance, such as, that the particular dispute is not an industrial dispute, should be raised before the original industrial Court. Where the point is not taken even in the petition for special leave the appellant would not be allowed to raise it before the Supreme Court.

The question whether a dispute relating to a single employee which is not taken up by the employees or the union is an industrial dispute is a mixed question of fact and law and the Supreme Court would be very reluctant to allow a new point to be raised, the decision of which would need further enquiry into relevant facts. The Manager, Bengal Nagpur Cotton Mills Ltd. v. In an appeal by special leave under Art. 136, the appellant assessee sought to raise for the first time a new point that the entries in her books of account could not in law show profits received by her because the appellant could not trade with herself.

An argument which would, if accepted, necessitate a retrial, as for example, that inadequate examination of accused under S. 342, Cr. P. ● ——Art. 136 — Criminal case — Special leave to appeal—New point—Entertainment of.

In an appeal on special leave in a criminal case, even though a new point was raised for the first time before the Supreme Court in that it was not raised before the High Court either during the hearing of the appeal or even at the time when the appellant applied for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court, still the Supreme Court considered the point on facts holding that there was no substance in the point which related to the injuries to have been caused by a lethal weapon with which they were alleged to have been caused. ● ——Art. 136—Retrospective operation.

Article 136 has no retrospective operation. Hence where an award was passed on 15th January 1950, and was published under S. 17, Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, by the Government in a notification of the Ministry of Labour, dated 17th January 1950, and was also declared binding on the same day for a period of one year, Art. 136 has no application. It cannot be said that the award was really published on 28th January 1950, when the notification referred to above appeared in the Gazette of India. Lloyds Bank, Ltd. v. The Lylods Bank Indian Staff Association, AIR 1956 S C 745 (745) (Pr 2).

● ——Art. 136—Retrospectivity.

Prima facie every legislation is prospective and there is no reason to depart from this rule of interpretation in the case of Art. 136 of the Constitution. Even without the use of the word 'hereafter' the Article conveys the same meaning. Janardhan Reddy v. ——Art. 136 — High Court Rules and Orders — Allahabad High Court Rules, Ch. 23, Rr. 28 and 29 — High Court has no power to grant bail or to suspend operation of sentence pending proposed application for special leave to appeal to Supreme Court—High Court does not possess inherent power to grant bail. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 426 (2B). AIR 1956 All 523.

15. Limitation.

● ——Art. 136 — Delay — Condonation—Grounds—State not appealing against decision of High Court —Time for appeal, expiring—Subject matter of suit coming under another State—Latter seeking leave—Delay, if can be condoned.

Where a party acquiesces in a judgment and deliberately allows the time for filing an appeal to lapse, it would not be a sufficient ground to condone the delay that he has subsequently changed his mind and desires to prefer an appeal. But where the result of the litigation would affect the rights of members of the public, and it is just that the matter should be decided on the merits, so that the controversies involved might be finally settled, the delay will be condoned.

Where the Madras State did not file appeal against the decision of the Madras High Court but actually supported the decision of the High Court, when the High Court granted certificate of fitness to the opposite party, for appealing to the Supreme Court :and the time for appeal was allowed to expire and the opposite party had appealed to the Supreme Court against the decision of the High Court upon the certificate of fitness and in the meanwhile due to the State reorganization the subject-matter of the suit had fallen in the State of Mysore and the State of Mysore was substituted in the place of the Madras State and the Mysore State had asked for special leave under Art. 136 to appeal against the High Court decision, the delay was condoned by the Supreme Court considering the fact that the result of the decision would affect rights of the public. Sri Venkataramana Daevaru v. State of Mysore, 36 Mys L J 232 : 1958 Mad W N (S C) 96 : (1958) S C J 382 : (1958) 1 Andh W R (S C) 109 : (1958) 1 Mad L J (S C) 109 : 1958 S C R 895 : AIR 1958 S C 255 (262) (Pt B) (Pr 11).

●——Art. 136—Limitation—Application for special leave—Supreme Court Rules (1950), O. 13, R. 1—Delay in filing application—(Limitation Act (1908), S. 5).

An application for special leave to appeal is to be filed in the time limited by the Rules of the Supreme Court. Where there was a delay of 44 days in filing the petition and the only ground urged for condonation of delay was that the petitioners had to collect money from amongst a large number of petitioners who were interested in the case :

Held, that that was not a sufficient ground for condoning the delay. Banarsidas v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 1956 SCJ 529 : 1956 Mad W N 834 : 1956 S C A 702 : 1956 B L J R 511 : 1956 S C R 357 : 1956 S C C 299 : 1956 All W R (H C) 421 : 1956 All L J 517 : AIR 1956 S C 520 (522) (Pt B) (Pr 6).

16. Interference with exercise of discretion.

●——Art. 136—Other remedy open but not availed of—Does not oust jurisdiction of High Court under Art. 226 — Alternative effective remedy — What is—Exercise of discretion by High Court — No interference by Supreme Court unless exceptional circumstances exist. See Ibid, Art. 226. (1965) 2 S C W R 1032 : AIR 1966 S C 197.

●——Arts. 136 and 226 — Other remedy open — Discretion of High Court to grant relief under Art. 226—Interference by Supreme Court.

Though the High Court would not ordinarily entertain a petition :under Art. 226 of the Constitution where an alternative remedy is open to the aggrieved party, it has jurisdiction to grant relief to such a party if it thinks proper to do so in the circumstances of the case. In the present case, the High Court has chosen to exercise discretion in favour of the respondents and it would not be right for the Supreme Court to interfere with the exercise of that discretion unless it is satisfied that the action of the High Court was arbitrary or unreasonable. ●——Art. 136—Sentence—Interference in appeal—Ordinarily Supreme Court will not interfere — Held however that discretion in this respect was not judicially exercised by trial Court and by High Court and therefore Supreme Court interfered.

The question of sentence is in the discretion of the trial Court and would not ordinarily be disturbed by the High Court in appeal if the discretion has been exercised judicially. There is still less reason ordinarily for the Supreme Court to interfere with sentences passed by the Trial Court and confirmed by the High Court. Where, however, some of the accused persons were womenfolk and no specific part had been allotted to them it is reasonable to think in all the circumstances of the case that they did not take a leading part in the occurrence but came into the field when their menfolk came out—partly to save their fields and partly to save their menfolk. On a consideration of all the circumstances of the case the sentence on these women-accused under S. 304, Part II read with S. 149, S. 326/149 and S. 148 should be reduced to the period of imprisonment already undergone. So also in respect of the male accused in consideration of their old age the interests of justice held would be served if their sentences were also reduced to period of imprisonment already undergone. ●——Art. 136—Discretionary order—Refusal to adjourn — No interference by Supreme Court—C. P. Code (1908), O. 17, R. 1.

Per Kapur and Raghubar Dayal, JJ.— It is a matter within the discretion of the Court to allow an adjournment and such discretionary order is, ordinarily not a matter for the consideration of the Supreme Court in an appeal under Art. 136 of the Constitution.

Per Das Gupta, J.—The conduct of the proceedings before a Court must necessarily be left to the Court itself and an appellate Court should not lightly interfere with the discretion exercised by a Court in refusing a prayer for adjournment.

Held, on facts that the action of the High Court in refusing the appellants' prayer for time to engage a counsel and to call on him to argue the case himself was not in the interests of justice. ● ——Art. 136—Powers of the Supreme Court — Refusal to grant injunction restraining defendant from proceeding with suit in another Court—Special leave —Grant of.

Whether the power of the Bombay High Court to issue an injunction restraining the defendant from proceeding with his suit against the plaintiff in a Court outside the jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court de hors the provisions of Rr. 1 and 2, O. 39 of the Code of Civil Procedure rests on S. 151 of the Code or in exercise of power under its general equity jurisdiction independent of the Code of Civil Procedure, the power is a discretionary one vested in a Court to be exercised for the ends of justice, having regard to the circumstances of each case.

Where the High Court has, in exercise of its discretion, refused to give an injunction, the plaintiff is not entitled to be granted special leave against such a purely discretionary order. Baldota Brothers v. Libra Mining Works, AIR 1961 S C 100 (104) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

● ——Art. 136 — Power of interference — Discretionary Orders.

Where the appellant comes to the Supreme Court by special leave under Art. 136, he is not entitled to challenge the correctness of the decision of the High Court as a matter of right. It is only in the discretion of the Supreme Court that the appellant can be permitted to dispute the correctness or the propriety of the decision of the High Court.

Where the trial Court and High Court exercised their discretion in not granting stay under S. 34 of the Arbitration Act, having regard to the limits on the exercise of the jurisdiction under Art. 136, he must still satisfy the Supreme Court that it would be justified in interfering with the concurrent exercise of discretion by the two Courts below. 17. Appeal against decision of Income-tax Appellate Tribunal.

● ——Art. 136 — Appeal by special leave — Appeal directly to the Supreme Court from the order of the Income-tax Tribunal—Appeal entertainable in special circumstances — Income-tax Act (11 of 1922)—Purchase and sale of shares by the assessee company—Loss—Capital loss or trading loss — Question one of mixed fact and law.

The Supreme Court under Art. 136 of the Constitution would not entertain an appeal directly from an order of the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal bypassing the decision of the High Court on Reference, except in very exceptional circumstances. Where it is difficult to say that the Commissioner of Income-tax was negligent an appeal direct to the Supreme Court from the order of the Tribunal is justified by the special circumstances.

The application to the Tribunal for a reference to the High Court on certain questions of law said to arise out of the order of the Appellate Tribunal was dismissed as the same was barred by limitation. The Tribunal had no jurisdiction to extend the time. An application against the order filed in the High Court under S. 66 (3) of the Income-tax Act was also dismissed on the same ground of limitation. By the appeal by special leave, no decision of the High Court could be said to be by-passed, because the decision of the High Court related to the correctness of the decision of the Tribunal on the question of limitation, which was not a question which was sought to be raised in an indirect way by the present appeal.

Whether a particular loss is a trading loss or a loss on the capital side undoubtedly depends upon the facts of each case but the question is not one of pure fact but one of mixed question of fact and law. C. I. T., Delhi and Rajasthan v. National Finance Ltd., 1962 Supp (2) S C R 865 : (1963) 1 S C J 597 ; (1962) 44 I T R 788 : AIR 1963 S C 835 (837) (Pt B) (Pr 4).

● ——Art. 136—Appreciation of evidence—Practice of Supreme Court — Order of Tribunal under S. 33 (4), Income-tax Act — Order of High Court under S 66 (2) refusing to direct Tribunal to state a case—Appeal by special leave against order of High Court dismissed on merits—Supreme Court will not entertain or hear appeal against order of Tribunal except in exceptional circumstances.

Where the High Court passes an order under S. 66 (2) Income-tax Act, refusing to require the Tribunal to state a case arising out of the Tribunal's order under S. 33 (4) of the Act, the Supreme Court in the exercise of its powers under Art 136 of the Constitution will not ordinarily entertain an appeal directly against the order of the Tribunal under S. 33 (4), Income-tax Act unless there are special or exceptional circumstances in the case. This principle would equally apply to a case in which an appeal is filed against the order of the Tribunal as well as against the order of the High Court and the latter appeal is dismissed on merits by the Supreme Court holding that no case is made out for calling for a statement of the case from the Tribunal. In the latter case if the Supreme Court were to proceed to decide the appeal against the Tribunal's order, it would be a departure from the well-settled rule that ordinarily the Supreme Court does not, in exercise of its jurisdiction under Art. 136, enter upon a reappraisal of the evidence on which the order of the Court or Tribunal is founded. The Legislature has expressly entrusted the power of appraisal of evidence to the Taxing authorities, and the decision of those authorities would ordinarily be regarded as final. AIR 1961 S C 1708, Foll. Soorajmull Nagarmull v. Commissioner of Income-tax (Central), Calcutta, (1964) 1 S C J 271 : (1962) Supp 3 S C R 306 : (1962) 45 I T R 220 : AIR 1963 S C 491 (492, 493) (Prs 3, 4).

● ——Art. 136—Grant of special leave in Income-tax cases — Income-tax Act (1922), S. 66 (1) and (2) — Assessee's application under S. 66 (1) to Tribunal for reference rejected — Assessee's application under S. 66 (2) also rejected by High Court — Assessee not entitled to ask for special leave to appeal from original decision complained of, when it did not move against subsequent orders of Board and High Court under S. 66.

Where after dismissing an appeal by the assessee from the order of assessment complained of, the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal rejects the assessee's application under S. 66 (1) of the Income-tax Act to make a reference to the High Court on the ground that the question on which the reference is sought, did not arise from the order of the Tribunal and the High Court also rejects the assessee's application under S. 66 (2) of Act, the assessee is not entitled to ask the Supreme Court to exercise its power under Art. 136 of the Constitution and grant special leave to appeal from the order complained, when it does not move against the orders of the Board and the High Court under S. 66 of the Act. A I R 1961 S C 1708, Foll. Indian Aluminium Co Ltd. v. Commr. of I.-T., West Bengal, (1961) 43 I T R 532 : A I R 1962 S C 1619 (1620, 1621) (Pr 7).

● ——Art. 136—Appeal from order of Income-tax Appellate Tribunal—There must be special circumstances.

An appeal against an order of the High Court deciding a question referred or against a refusal to call for a statement can be brought before the Supreme Court under S. 66-A of the Income tax Act, if the High Court decides the question referred and under Art. 136 of the Constitution, if the High Court refuses to call for a statement. However a circumstance which cannot be corrected by the procedure of a stated question of law on statement of the case to the High Court may afford a ground for invoking the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Art. 136 against an order of the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal itself. That ratio however does not apply, where a question of law can be raised, and is capable of being answered by the High Court or on appeal, by the Supreme Court:

Held, that no special circumstances existed, on which the assessee could claim to come to the Supreme Court against the decision of the Appellate Tribunal. AIR 1961 S C 1708 and AIR 1962 S C 1619, Rel. on. and AIR 1955 S C 65, Disting. Kanhaivalal Lohia v. Commr. of I.-T., West Bengal, (1962) 44 I T R 405 : (1962) 1 S C J 127 : A I R 1962 S C 1323 (1325, 1326) (Prs 6, 9).

● ——Art. 136 — High Court rejecting application under S. 66 (2), Income-tax Act and refusing to direct Income-tax Act Tribunal to state a case — Supreme Court will not entertain appeal from decision of Income-tax Tribunal—Income tax Act (1922), S. 66 (2).

Save in exceptional and special circumstances the Supreme Court would not exercise its power under Art. 136 in such a way as to by-pass the High Court by entertaining an appeal direct from the order of the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal and thereby ignore the decision given by the High Court.

Where the High Court rejected an application of the Commissioner of Income-tax under S. 66 (2), Income-tax Act and refused to ask the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal to state a case for its consideration of a question of law which the Commissioner said arose from the order of the Tribunal, the Supreme Court will not entertain an appeal under Art. 136 direct from the decision of the tribunal. (1961) 43 I T R 498, Rel. on. Commr. of I.-T., Bombay v. Lakhiram Ramdas, 1962 S C (Notes) 26: (1962) 44 I T R 726 (SC).

● ——Art. 136 (1) — Appeal, with special leave, against order of Tribunal refusing to state case on application made under S. 66 (1), Income tax Act — No appeal filed against order of High Court under S. 66 (2) — Maintainability of appeal — (Income-tax Act (1922), Ss. 33 (4) and 66 (1) and (2)).

Where appeals were filed, though with special leave given under Art. 136, only against the orders of the Income tax Appellate Tribunal refusing to state a case on application made to it under S. 66 (1) of the Act.

Held, that the appeals must be dismissed because if the result of the Supreme Court going into the appeals on merits were to confirm the judgment of the High Court, the appellants would be out of Court, but if it differed from High Court it would be in effect setting aside the judgment of the High Court, an eventuality contrary to all notions of comity of Courts. Chimmonlall Rameshwarlall v. Commr. of I.-T., Calcutta, (1959) 37 I T R 415 : A I R 1960 S C 280 (286, 287) (Pr 8).

● ——Art. 136 – Question of fact or law—'Adventure in the nature of trade'—Question as to—Mixed question of law and fact—Interference with the decision of Income-tax Appellate Tribunal by Supreme Court in appeal. See Income-tax Act (1922), S. 2 (4). A I R 1959 S C 1252.

● ——Art. 136—Finding on question of fact, when can be attacked — (Income-tax Act (1922), S. 66) — (Civil P. C. (1908), S. 100).

If any question of law arises on the order of the Income-tax Tribunal the decision of the Tribunal will be open to consideration by the Court under S. 66 of the Act. Stating the same proposition in a different form, if that decision is one of fact turning on the appreciation of evidence, the Supreme Court would not interfere with it in appeal under Art. 136 of the Constitution. Where the point in dispute is whether a sum received by the appellant as profits is taxable under the Act, and that, in turn, depends on whether the forward contracts were made at Gwalior or at Bombay, that would clearly be a question of fact, and the decision of the Tribunal thereon would not be liable to be challenged in these proceedings. But a finding of the Tribunal even on a question of fact would be erroneous in law if it is perverse. Such a finding is open to attack. Jiyajeerao Cotton Mills, Ltd. v. Commr. of I.-T., Bombay, (1958) 34 ITR 888 : A I R 1959 S C 270 (272, 275) (Prs 4,5, 14).

● ——Art. 136—Scope—Application under S. 66 (2), Income-tax Act — Dismissal — Appeal against decision of Appellate Tribunal—Grounds.

Though an appeal lies under Art. 136 of the Constitution of India to the Supreme Court against a decision of the Appellate Tribunal under the Indian Income tax Act, where the appellant had moved the High Court under S. 66 (2), Income-tax Act and a decision had been pronounced adverse to him and this had become final, obviously it would not be open to him to question the correctness of the decision of the Tribunal on grounds which might have been taken in an appeal against the judgment of the High Court. V. Govindarajulu Mudaliar v. Commr., I. T., Hyderabad, (1958) 34 I T R 807 : A I R 1959 S C 248 (249) (Pt B) (Pr 3).

● ——Art. 136 — Finding of fact — Interference — New plea.

Held on facts, that the Tribunal had to decide a question which was entirely one of fact.

The appellant could not ask the Supreme Court in an appeal under Art. 136 to reassess the evidence and to come to a conclusion of its own on it.

The Tribunal was really making a concession to the appellant and gave a benefit to him to which he was strictly not entitled in view of the Tribunal's findings on the evidence led by the appellant. The Tribunal's judgment was not liable to be set aside because it held that the whole of Rs. 2,68,000 was not taxable.

The contention that the appellant could not be taxed without a finding that the income which had arisen or accrued in British India as he had been assessed as a person not residing in British India and that finding had not been made, could not be allowed to be raised before the Supreme Court for it had never been mentioned at any earlier stage of the proceedings. Sevachand Baid v. Commr. of Income-tax, (1957) 34 I T R 650: AIR 1959 S C 59 (61, 62) (Prs 5, 6, 10, 12, 13).

18. Appeal against decisions of Industrial Tribunal.

● ——Art. 136 — Dearness allowance — Employees (clerical section) in factory — If can claim at the same rates as in sales section and complain of discrimination — Discretion of Tribunal in not awarding uniform dearness allowance — Not a ground for interference under Art. 136 of the Constitution of India, (1950).

There is no identity in the work of the clerical staff in the factory and those in the sales offices. Therefore it would be open to the employer to place different values on them. The same thing could be said of the subordinate staff. The sales office being a mercantile office the employer had to fall in line with other similar establishments and pay to the employees in the sales office the same dearness allowance as other mercantile firms were paying to their employees. In the circumstances the factory employees cannot as of right demand that the benefit of the rates fixed by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce be also given to them though those rates were not intended to be applied to them.

Even assuming that an Industrial Tribunal has exercised its discretion wrongly in not awarding uniform dearness allowance to all the employees of the same employer but who are working in different establishments that is no ground for interference under Art. 136 of the Constitution of India.

There is no valid reason for compelling employers to offer uniform terms of employment to their employees working in different establishments because various considerations must enter into the question such as the value of their work to the employer, the employer's ability to pay, the cost of living, the availability of persons for doing the particular kind of work and so on. ● ——Art. 136—Finding of fact — Propriety or correctness of — Challenge in Supreme Court will not ordinarily be allowed.

Usually, the Supreme Court does not, under Art. 136 entertain a plea that the findings of fact recorded by the Industrial Tribunal are erroneous on the ground that they are based on a misappreciation of evidence. Ordinarily in such appeals the propriety or the correctness of the findings of fact is not allowed to be challenged. Tata Iron & Steel Co. Ltd. v. The question whether there was go-slow during a certain period is a question of fact, and where the Industrial Tribunal has come to the conclusion that there was go slow during the period, ordinarily the Supreme Court will not go into the finding unless there are special reasons, as, for example, where the finding is based on no evidence. ● ——Art. 136 — Appeals in industrial matters — Supreme Court does not act as Court of Appeal on facts.

When the Supreme Court entertains appeals in industrial matters under Art. 136 of the Constitution, it does not act as a Court of Appeal on facts. It is only where general questions of law are raised that this Court feels called upon to pronounce its decisions on them for the guidance of industrial adjudication in this country. The decisions of Industrial Tribunals on questions of fact and their conclusions in matters within their discretion are not usually revised by this Court under Art. 136. Where the claim made by the employers by way of remuneration to the partners had not been properly established by adequate evidence, no grievance can be made by them before the Supreme Court under Art. 136, against the award of the Tribunal reducing the remuneration of the partners from Rs. 1,000 p. m. to Rs. 500 p. m. In appeal by special leave from an award of the Industrial Tribunal in respect of dismissal of certain workmen on grounds of misconduct, it is not the practice of the Supreme Court to enter into evidence with a view to finding facts for itself. ● ——Art. 136—Scope—Award of Industrial Tribunal — Provision in, for leave — Interference by Supreme Court.

When industrial adjudication seeks to do social justice it cannot ignore the needs of national economy; and so in considering matters of leave, either in the form of privilege leave or sick leave, the Tribunal should not ignore the consideration that unduly generous or liberal leave provisions would affect production and obviously production of essential commodities is in the interest of not only the employers and the employees but also of the general community. These are, however, matters primarily for the Industrial Tribunal to consider and decide and unless it appears that the impugned provisions cannot be sustained on any reasonable ground or that they mark a violent departure from the prevailing practice or trend, the Supreme Court in appeal from the decision of the Tribunal would be reluctant to interfere with the decision of the Tribunal. ● ——Art. 136—Question of fact—Finding by Industrial Tribunal whether person is 'workman' — No interference—Industrial Disputes Act (1947), S. 2 (s).

The question as to whether an employee is a workman as defined by S. 2 (s) of the Industrial Disputes Act is a question of fact and the finding recorded by the Industrial Tribunal on the said question, after considering the relevant evidence adduced by the parties, cannot be successfully challenged before the Supreme Court in an appeal by special leave. ● ——Art. 136 — Scope — If overrides — Industrial Disputes Act—(Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Ss. 17 and 17-A).

The provisions of the Industrial Disputes Act must be read subject to the overriding provisions of Art. 136 of the Constitution. Therefore, whatever finality may be claimed under the provisions of the Act, in respect of the award, by virtue of Ss. 17 and 17-A of the Act, it must necessarily be subject to the result of the determination of the appeal by special leave. The operation of Ss. 17 and 17-A of the Act is not automatically stayed by making an application for special leave. India General Navigation and Railway Co., Ltd. v. ● ——Art. 136 — Parties — Appeal by special leave from award of Industrial Tribunal — Government—If necessary or proper party.

In an appeal by special leave under Art. 136 against the award of the Industrial Tribunal the Government does not become either a necessary party or a proper party by reason of its giving the award the force of law. The State Government does not play any part in the proceedings, except referring the dispute to the Tribunal under S. 10 of the Act. India General Navigation & Railway Co., Ltd. v. ● ——Art. 136—Finding of fact — Conclusion based on consideration of provisions of Act — Question for decision, true scope of provision of Act — Finding is not mere question of fact.

Where the question before the Industrial Tribunal and the Supreme Court was the true scope and effect of Cl. (iii) of S. 25-E of the Industrial Disputes Act, with particular reference to the expression 'in another part of the establishment' occurring therein, and the question involved a consideration of the tests which should be applied in determining whether a particular unit was part of a bigger establishment, and for the application of the tests certain preliminary facts had to be found the final conclusion to be drawn therefrom is not a mere question of fact. ● ——Art. 136—Appeal against decision of Industrial Tribunal — Competency.

The Supreme Court does not sit as a regular Court of appeal over Industrial Tribunals, and does not ordinarily subject the evidence given on behalf of the parties to a fresh review and scrutiny, unless it is shown that exceptional or special circumstances exist, or that substantial and grave injustice has been done or that the case in question presents features of sufficient gravity to warrant a review of the decision appealed from. In the absence of exceptional or special circumstances or of grave injustice the Supreme Court will not be justified in interfering with what really is a finding of fact. Messrs. ● ——Art. 136—Powers of Supreme Court — Decision of Industrial Tribunal — Interference—(Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Ss. 2 (k), 15)—Power of Industrial Tribunal to grant dearness allowance.

Generally the necessary pre-requisites for the Supreme Court's interference to set right decisions arrived at by Tribunals whose conclusions on question of fact are final can be classified under the following categories namely; (i) where the Tribunal acts in excess of the jurisdiction conferred upon it under the statute or regulation creating it or where it ostensibly fails to exercise a patent jurisdiction ; (ii) where there is an apparent error on the face of the decision; and (iii) where the Tribunal has erroneously applied well-accepted principles of jurisprudence.

There cannot be a hard and fast rule regarding dearness allowance applicable to all kinds of employees. Where what has been done is that in computing the dearness allowance the Tribunal has considered various methods, and adopted one of them it is difficult to say that there is any question of principle at all, and the Supreme Court will not interfere. ● ——Art. 136 (1) — Industrial Tribunal — Interference with decision of—(Industrial Disputes Act (1947), S. 15 (1)).

The Industrial Tribunals are Tribunals within the meaning of Art. 136 and that Article has vested in the Supreme Court exceptional and overriding power to interfere where it reaches the conclusion that a person has been dealt with arbitrarily or that a Court or Tribunal within the territory of India has not given a fair deal to a litigant. ● ——Art. 136 — Exercise of extraordinary power given by Art. 136—Decision of Industrial Tribunal—Appeal on—Function of Supreme Court — Industrial Disputes Act (1947), S. 15.

Per Kania C. J.—Even though the Supreme Court has jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal from a decision given by an Industrial Tribunal, yet having regard to the nature of the functions of the Industrial Tribunal the Supreme Court will be very reluctant to entertain an application for leave to appeal.

Per Mahajan J.—The Supreme Court is not to substitute its decision for the determination of the Industrial Tribunal when granting relief under Art. 136. When it chooses to interfere in the exercise of these extraordinary powers, it does so because the tribunal has either exceeded its jurisdiction or has approached the questions referred to it in a manner which is likely to result in injustice or has adopted a procedure which runs counter to the well established rules of natural justice; in other words, if it has denied a hearing to a party or has refused to record his evidence or has acted in any other manner in an arbitrary or despotic fashion. In such circumstances no question arises of this Court constituting itself into a tribunal and assuming powers of settling a dispute. All that the Court when it entertains an appeal would do is to quash the award and direct the tribunal to proceed within the powers conferred on it and to approach the adjudication of the dispute according to principles of natural justice. This Court under Art. 136 would not constitute itself into a mere Court of error. Extraordinary powers have to be exercised in rare and exceptional cases and on well-known principles. Bharat Bank v. Employees of Bharat Bank, (1950-51) 2 F J R 1 : 86 Cal L J 230: 1950 S C R 459 : AIR 1950 S C 188 (189, 190, 200) (Pt C) (Prs 3, 33).

19. Appeal against decisions of Labour Appellate Tribunal.

● ——Art. 136 – Scope – Judgment of Labour Appellate Tribunal — Appeal by special leave pending — Compromise by parties – Validity – S. 23 of Payment of Wages Act or S. 6-C of U. P. Industrial Disputes Act – Effect of.

The provisions of S. 23 of the Payment of Wages Act postulate certain definite rights which are not likely or liable to be modified or reversed in any pending judicial proceedings. Since this factor is absent in cases where an appeal by special leave under Art. 136 from the judgment of the Labour Appellate Tribunal is pending before the Supreme Court it would not be reasonable to rely on the said provisions and contend that they in substance prevent or prohibit amicable settlement of disputes between the parties to the appeal.

Similarly S. 6-C of the U. P. Industrial Disputes Act can have no bearing on the powers of the Supreme Court in dealing with an industrial dispute brought before it under Art. 136 of the Constitution. So long as an award is pending before a Tribunal or a Court the jurisdiction of the tribunal or the Court to deal with it in accordance with law is not affected by S. 6-C and the competence of the parties to settle their dispute pending before the Tribunal or the Court is also not affected or impaired by the said Section. Where the compromise in question is intended to be filed in the Supreme Court for the purpose of enabling the parties to request that Court to pass an order in terms of the said compromise the procedure to be followed is the procedure prescribed by the rules of the Supreme Court and it cannot attract the procedure prescribed by R. 5 (1) of the U. P. Industrial Disputes Rules, 1957. Swadeshi Cotton Mills Co., Ltd. v. ● ——Art. 136—Industrial Disputes— Bonus—Determination of — Available surplus — Distribution of available surplus is determined in the light of several relevant factors — Labour Appellate Tribunal awarding bonus without taking into account all relevant factors — Records of appeal before Supreme Court containing no materials for decision of the point— Under the circumstances Supreme Court can only direct that award of the Tribunal should not be treated as a precedent in deciding similar disputes between the parties in future. See Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Sch. 3, S. 7A. AIR 1960 S C 1003.

● ——Art. 136— Appeal from Labour Appellate Tribunal—Claim of the appellant rejected by the Labour Appellate Tribunal on ground that sufficient material had not been placed before it by the appellant on which the claim could be examined and granted— Supreme Court will not in such a case interfere in favour of the appellant. ● ——Art. 136—Parties — Appeal to Supreme Court against order of Labour Appellate Tribunal allowing appeal of some workmen — Workmen to whom no relief was granted by Appellate Tribunal, if to be impleaded.

Where an appeal by the workmen before the Labour Appellate Tribunal against the order of the Industrial Tribunal was allowed in respect of some of them and the company (employer) appealed against the appellate order by special leave to the Supreme Court, the workmen to whom no relief was granted by the Appellate Tribunal and whose appeal was not allowed, cannot be joined as respondents before the Supreme Court. ● ——Art. 136—Powers of Supreme Court.

Under Art. 136 it is open to the Supreme Court to consider as Court of Appeal whether the order of the Labour Tribunal was vitiated by an error of law, and whether the order of the Appellate Tribunal modifying it is sound. Workmen of Burn and Co. v. Burn and Co., 1956 S C A 1175 : 1957 S C J 28 : (1957) 1 Lab L J 226 : 1956 S C R 781 : (1956-57) 11 F J R 217 : AIR 1957 S C 38 (48) (Pt G) (Pr 17).

● ——Art. 136 — Appeal against decision of Labour Appellate Tribunal.

The Supreme Court does not sit upon the decisions of Industrial Tribunals like an ordinary Court of appeal, and there must be special circumstances to justify the exercise of the special power under Art. 136 of the Constitution. Such special circumstances exist where the Labour Appellate Tribunal has not directed its mind to the real question to be decided on an application under S. 22, Industrial Disputes (Appellate Tribunal) Act and has passed an order on the basis of a somewhat irrelevant finding which has resulted in manifest injustice. Rohtas Industries v. Brijnandan Pandey, (1957) All W R (HC) 210 : 1957 B L J R 26 : 1956 S C J 740 : (1956-57) 11 F J R 209 : (1956) 2 Lab L J 444 : 1956 S C A 1089 : 1956 S C R 800 : 1957 M P C 3 : 1957 All L J 72 : AIR 1957 S C 1 (6) (Pt C) (Pr 10).

20. Appeal against decisions of Election Tribunal.

● ——Art, 136— Decision on election petition by the Election Tribunal —Appeal by special leave—Respondent, whether can support decree by grounds decided against him (Quaere)—(Civil P.C. (1908), O. 41, R. 22) — (Representation of the People Act (1951), S. 116A). Baru Ram v. Smt. Prasanni, A I R 1959 S C 93 (99) (Pt D) (Pr 11).

[Overruled in AIR 1965 S C 689].

● ——Art. 136—Finding of fact—Election dispute—Special leave for appeal against decision of Election Tribunal — Interference — Finding as to improper rejection of nomination paper Art. 329 — (Representation of the People Act (1951), S. 169 — Rules under, R. 2 (2)).

Where the Election Tribunal has found as a fact that the persons whose thumb impressions the nomination paper purported to bear had really proposed and seconded the candidate and that those thumb impressions had been attested by a Magistrate who had in fact been authorised in that behalf there is no room for the contention in appeal by special leave against the decision of the Election Tribunal that the Returning Officer was justified in rejecting the nomination paper in question. Surendra Nath Khosla v. S. Dalip Singh, 1957 S C J 162 : 1957 Ker L T 319 : 1957 Nag L J 193 : 1957 M P L J 249 : 1957 S C C 137 : 1957 S C A 433 : 1957 Andh L T 174 : 1957 S C R 179 : A I R 1957 S C 242 (244) (Pt A) (Pr 5).

● ——Art. 136 — Findings of fact — Interference— Finding by Election Tribunal as to effect of improper rejection of nomination paper — (Representation of the People Act (1951), S. 100 (1) (c)).

The Supreme Court in an appeal by special leave does not ordinarily open findings of fact recorded by a competent tribunal such as an Election Tribunal, namely that the result of an election has been materially affected by the improper rejection of the nomination paper. Surrendra Nath Khosla v. S. Dalip Singh, 1957 S C J 162 : 1957 Ker L T 319 : 1957 Nag L J 193 : 1957 M P L J 249 : 1957 S C C 137 : 1957 Andh L T 174 : 1957 S C R 179 : 1957 S C A 433 : AIR 1957 S C 242 (245) (Pt C) (Pr 7).

● ——Art. 136—Question of fact—(Representation of the People Act (1951), S. 123 (7)).

The question when a candidature commences is, as has been held over and over again, one of fact, and a decision of the Tribunal on that question is not liable to be reviewed by the Supreme Court in special appeal. It would again be a question of fact whether the payment by the candidate was a pure act of charity or was an expense incurred for election purposes. S. Khader v. Munnuswami, 1956 Mad W N 160 : 1956 S C A 433 : (1955) 2 S C R 469 : 1956 Nag L J 135 : (1955) 2 M L J (S C) 297 : (1955) Andhra W R (SC) 551 : (1955) S C J 303 (SC) : AIR 1955 S C 775 (777, 778) (Pt B) (Prs 6, 8).

● ——Art. 136—Findings of fact recorded by Election Tribunal—Interference—(Representation of the People Act (1951), Ss. 123 (6) and 124 (4)).

Ordinarily the Supreme Court will not, in special appeal under Art. 136, review findings of fact recorded by an Election Tribunal if there is evidence on which they could be reached. Hence where the Election Tribunal has held that certain candidate has committed corrupt practices mentioned in S. 123 (6) and (8) and S. 124 (4) of the Representation of the People Act and there is evidence to support these findings, the Supreme Court in appeal under Art. 136 will decline to interfere with them. ● ——Arts. 136 and 329 (b) — Power of Supreme Court to grant spceial leave to appeal against decision of Election Tribunal — Representation of the People Act (1951), Ss. 80 and 105—Civil P.C. (1908), S. 9).

The right of seeking election and sitting in Parliament or in a State Legislature is a creature of the Constitution and when the Constitution provides a special remedy for enforcing that right, no other remedy by ordinary action in a Court of law is available to a person in regard to election disputes. The jurisdiction with which the Election Tribunal is endowed is undoubtedly a special jurisdiction; but once it is held that it is a judicial Tribunal empowered and obliged to deal judicially with disputes arising out of or in connection with election, the overriding power of the Supreme Court to grant special leave, in proper cases, would certainly be attracted and this power cannot be excluded by any Parliamentary legislation. The non obstante clause with which Art. 329 of the Constitution begins debars the Supreme Court, as it debars any other Court in the land, to entertain a suit or a proceeding calling in question any election to the Parliament or the State Legislature. It is the Election Tribunal alone that can decide such disputes, and the proceeding has to be initiated by an election petition and in such manner as may be provided by a statute. But once that Tribunal has made any determination or adjudication on the matter, the powers of the Supreme Court to interfere by way of special leave can always be exercised.

An appeal is a creature of statute and there can be no inherent right of appeal from any judgment or determination unless an appeal is expressly provided for by the law itself. The powers given by Art. 136 of the Constitution however are in the nature of special or residuary powers which are exercisable outside the purview of ordinary law, in cases where the needs of justice demand interference by the Supreme Court of the land. The article itself is worded in the widest terms possible. It vests in the Supreme Court a plenary jurisdiction in the matter of entertaining and hearing appeals by granting of special leave, against any kind of judgment or order made by a Court or tribunal in any cause or matter and the powers could be exercised in spite of the specific provisions for appeal contained in the Constitution or other laws. The Constitution for the best of reasons did not choose to fetter or circumscribe the powers exercisable under this article in any way. S. 105 of the Representation of the People Act certainly gives finality to the decision of the Election Tribunal so far as that Act is concerned and does not provide for any further appeal but that cannot in any way cut down or affect the overriding powers which this Court can exercise in the matter of granting special leave under Art. 136 of the Constitution.

This overriding power, which has been vested in the Supreme Court under Art. 136 of the Constitution, is in a sense wider than the prerogative right of entertaining an appeal exercised by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in England. In the first place Art. 136 is a constitutional provision which, unlike the prerogative right of the Crown, no Parliamentary legislation can limit or take away. In the second place the provision being one, which overrides ordinary laws, no presumption can arise from words and expressions declaring an adjudication of a particular Tribunal to be final and conclusive that there was an intention to exclude the exercise of the special powers. Even when the Legislature states that the orders of a Tribunal under an Act like the Representation of the People Act, 1951, S. 105, shall be conclusive and final the High Court and the Supreme Court may interfere under Art. 226 and Art. 136, respectively.

The powers conferred on the Supreme Court by Art. 136 of the Constitution and on the High Courts under Art. 226 cannot be taken away or whittled down by the Legislature. So long as these powers remain discretion of the Supreme Court and that of the High Court is unfettered. Raj Krushna Bose v. ● ——Art. 136—Scope — Summary dismissal of writ petition by High Court — Appeal to Supreme Court by special leave—Interference.

Certain employees of the appellant mill made an application to the Authority under the Payment of Wages Act claiming that they were entitled to be paid according to a particular scale. The Authority rejected the objection of the appellant to its jurisdiction to entertain such application. The appellant then filed a writ petition but that was summarily dismissed. The appellant thereafter appealed to the Supreme Court by special leave. The Supreme Court found that the view of the authority on merits was correct and as regards the other contention.

Held, that there being no failure of justice it would not interfere with the order of the High Court dismissing the writ petition of the appellant. A I R 1956 S C 227, Foll. Raipur Mfg. Co. 22. Appeal against miscellaneous decisions.

● ——Art. 136 — Bihar Sales Tax Act (19 of 1947), Ss. 24, 25 Decision of Board of Revenue in revision under S. 24 Reference to High Court under S. 25 decided against appellant—Appeal by Special Leave against order of Board of Revenue—No appeal against decision of High Court — Supreme Court would not interfere.

The assessee was assessed to sales tax and against the order of assessment he took the usual appeals to the sales tax authorities and after the appeals were rejected he took revision under S. 24, Bihar Sales Tax Act to the Board of Revenue where also he was unsuccessful. The assessee applied under S. 25 for referring six questions of law to the High Court but the Board referred only four questions to the High Court. The High Court after reframing the question answered it against the appellant. The appellant then came up in appeal by special leave to the Supreme Court against the order of the Board of Revenue only but not against the judgment and order of the High Court.

Held, that the appellant was not entitled to agitate the correctness of the decision given by the Board of Revenue in respect of the questions which were agitated before the High Court. As the assessee had not obtained Special Leave in respect of any of the orders passed by the High Court under S. 25 those orders became final and binding and the assessee could not be allowed to by-pass or go behind the orders of the High Court and such exercise would be particularly inadvisable in a case where the result may be a conflict of the decision of two Courts of competent jurisdiction which was contrary to the object of Ss. 23, 24 and 25 of the Act. The fact that the Board had not referred some of the questions to the High Court was no ground for interference direct with the orders of Board of Revenue under Art. 136 of the Constitution as it was open to the appellant to apply to the High Court for a reference under S. 25. ● ——Art. 136—Question of fact—Industrial dispute—Finding of Labour Court—Conclusive—Civil P. C. (1908), S. 112.

The question whether a particular workman is a protected workman or not for the purpose of S. 33, Industrial Disputes Act is a question of fact, and the finding of the Labour Court on such a question will generally be accepted by the Supreme Court in appeal from the award of the Labour Court as conclusive. P. H. Kalyani v. Air France, Calcutta, (1963) 1 Lab L J 679 : (1963) 6 Fac L R 435 : (1963-64) 24 F J R 464 : (1963) 2 S C W R 359 : (1964) 1 S C J 566 : (1964) 2 S C R 104 : A I R 1963 S C 1756 (1758) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

● ——Art. 136—Scope—The Supreme Court will not interfere in appeal under Art. 136 of the Constitution to reverse the view taken by the Labour Court unless it can be said that the view was perverse or patently wrong on the materials before the Court. See Industrial Disputes Act (1947), Sch. 3, S. 7A. A I R 1962 S C 1348.

● ——Art. 136—Special leave — Exercise of discretion—Limitation—Bihar Sales Tax Act (19 of 1947), Ss. 23, 24 and 25—Assessment to sales-tax—Dismissal of revision under S. 24 by Board of Revenue—Application under S 25 (2) to High Court for directing Board of Revenue to state a case — Dismissal — Appeal by special leave against order of Board under S. 24—Maintainability.

Held, on facts that as the appellant had not obtained special leave in respect of any of the orders passed by the High Court under S. 25, those orders had become final and binding between the parties and the appellant could not be allowed to by-pass or go behind the orders of the High Court by entertaining appeal directly against the orders of the Board of Revenue. To ignore the decision of the High Court on a question of law would really nullify the statutory provisions of S. 25 of the Act. The special leave was not properly given and the appellant was not entitled to ask the Supreme Court to exercise its powers under Art. 136. It is no doubt open to the Supreme Court to grant special leave to appeal from the main decision of the High Court even though the High Court has refused to grant a certificate under Art. 133 of the Constitution. ● ——Art. 136—Finding of fact—Interference.

In an appeal under Art. 136, it would not be open to the appellant to challenge the correctness or the propriety of a finding of fact recorded by a labour Court but when the said finding is not supported by any legal evidence and is wholly inconsistent with the materials produced on the record, the Supreme Court may go into evidence and set aside the findings D. ARTICLE 137

● ——Art. 137 — Grounds of review — References to what Judges said in course of arguments—Propriety.

In a review application, it is highly improper on the part of an Advocate to refer in detail as to what, according to him, happened in Court on the prior occasion and what each Judge said in the course of the argument followed by a confident assertion how and why the application was dismissed. It is possible that a view which ultimately appeals to a Judge in coming to his conclusion is erroneous. That by itself can afford no ground for review. But what is improper is to assume and assert as to what a Judge's view is in making a particular order when the order pronounced does not set it out and to make references to what Judges say in course of arguments and make that a ground for rehearing. ● ——Arts. 139 and 226 —Writ of certiorari—When may issue.

When the executive authority has to form an opinion about an objective matter as a preliminary step to the exercise of a certain power conferred on it, the determination of the objective fact and the exercise of the power based thereon are alike matters of an administrative character and are not amenable to the writ of certiorari. When the law under which the authority is making a decision, itself requires a judicial approach, decision will be quasi-judicial. Prescribed forms of procedure are not necessary to make an inquiry judicial, provided in coming to the decision the well-recognised principles of approach are required to be followed. Therefore, wherever any body of persons having legal authority to determine questions affecting rights of subjects and having the duty to act judicially, act in excess of their legal authority a writ of certiorari may issue. Per Kania C. J., Fazl Ali, Patanjali Sastri and Dass JJ., (Mahajan and Mukherjea JJ. contra)— The decision of the Government about a public purpose is a fact which it has to ascertain or decide, and thereafter the order of requisition has to follow. The decision of the Provincial Government as to the public purpose contains no judicial element in it. The inquiries mentioned in Ss. 10 and 12 are only permissive and the Government is not obliged to make them. Moreover, they do not relate to the purpose for which the land may be required. They are in respect of the condition of the land and such other matters affecting land. The words of S. 3 read with the proviso, and the words of S. 4 taken along with the scheme of the whole Ordinance, do not import into the decision of the public purpose the judicial element required to make the decision judicial or quasi-judicial The decision of the Provincial Government about public purpose is therefore, an administrative act, and there is no scope for an application for a writ of certiorari: A I R 1949 Bom 277, Reversed. Province of Bombay v. A decision given by the Supreme Court is clearly a declaration of law applicable to the case and is consequently binding on the High Court under Art 141. The law declared by the Supreme Court is binding whether the declaration is made after discussing all possible aspects or without doing so. ——Art. 141 — Law declared by Supreme Court—Interpretation of.

Art. 141 says that "The law declared by the Supreme Court shall be binding on all Courts within the territory of India". It is the law declared by the Supreme Court that binds the Court and not the judgments. This is made clearer on a consideration of Art 145 (5). "The law declared" referred to in Art. 141 is the law to be gathered from any judgment in a case decided by the Supreme Court, whether it is the judgment of a Judge forming the majority or of a Judge in a minority and dissenting. 65 Bom L R 674 : (1965) 56 I T R 522 : 1964 Mah L J 157 : ILR (1964) Bom 163 : AIR 1964 Bom 170 (176) (Pt B) (Pr 23) (DB).

——Arts. 141, 143 and 3 — Decisions given by Supreme Court in advisory jurisdiction are binding on subordinate Courts.

The decision given by the Supreme Court in its advisory jurisdiction is binding on the Courts in India under Art. 141 of the Constitution of India. The law regarding several important and difficult points arising upon the interpretation of the Constitution is "declared" by the Supreme Court even in its advisory jurisdiction. "Declared" means made clear or manifest. Hence, where the Supreme Court decided in its advisory jurisdiction that Art. 3 of the Constitution had no application to a case of cession of the Union State territories to a foreign power, and that a Parliamentary Statute was not necessary in addition to the amendment of the first schedule of the Constitution, the decision was held to be binding on the High Court. Where the previous Division Bench came to a different conclusion it was wholly unnecessary for the later Division Bench to refer the matter to a Full Bench because of the later decisions of the Supreme Court. The law declared by the Supreme Court of India is binding on all Courts in India under Art 141 of the Constitution and must therefore be applied in a subsequent decision. A declaration of law, if made by the Supreme Court, is binding whatever be the facts of the case decided by the Supreme Court and whatever be the nature of the facts of the case before the High Court or before the Subordinate Courts. It would be contravening the provisions of Art. 142 (sic—Art. 141) of the Constitution if a declaration made by the Supreme Court is held not to apply to a case before the High Court on the ground that the facts of the case decided by the Supreme Court are fundamentally different from the facts of the case decided before the High Court. ——Art. 141—Scope of —'Declaration of law'—Obiter dicta or casual observation—Weight of.

Article 141 has the effect, in addition to investing the decisions of the Supreme Court with a binding force of creating a constitutional organ whose declaration of law pronounced ex cathedra shall be binding on all Courts in the Republic. Under this article it is not necessary that a pronouncement of the Supreme Court should be part of the ratio decidendi of any judgment. An obiter dictum or a mere enunciation of a principle of law would amount to a declaration of law under Art. 141.

A declaration of law may be expressed or may be indicated by clear implication. A High Court cannot circumvent a declaration of law made by the Supreme Court on the ground that it amounts to a casual observation. Any re-consideration can only be done by the Supreme Court itself. Where the Supreme Court deliberately with the intention of settling the law pronounces upon a question, the pronouncement is the law declared by the Supreme Court within the meaning of Art. 141 and is binding on all Courts in India. It cannot be treated as a mere obiter dictum.

It is true where a point has not been argued and certain general observations have been made which may seem to cover points not argued before the Court, they may not be considered to be binding, and in such cases the binding nature of the observation of the Court may be limited to the points specifically raised and decided by the Court It is also true that pronouncements made on concessions of counsel, when a point is not argued, are not binding but otherwise even what is generally called an 'obiter dictum', provided it is upon a point raised and argued, is binding upon the Courts in India. 1953 All W R (HC) 257 : 1953 All L J 273 : 1953 Cri L J 384 : ILR (1953) 2 All 735 : AIR 1953 All 613 (615, 616) (Pt D) (Prs 11, 13) (DB).

● ——Art. 141 — Obiter dicta of Supreme Court—Duty of inferior Courts.

Where the law is laid down progressively, one must not go by the strict rule of ratio decidendi and confine the decision only to the material facts in the case but must, if the decision is correct, use it even in spite of its broad statement of the law as a guide to future cases, and, in dealing with a case which is to be utilized, one must look not only to what was decided in the case but what was decided in previous and subsequent cases.

An inferior Court has under Art. 141 to take the law from the Supreme Court. When an inferior Court is taking the law from the superior Court, it cannot refuse to entertain or take into account a portion of the reasoning which was material for the decision of the case before the superior tribunal. ● ——Art. 141 — Power of Supreme Court to review and revise its earlier decisions—Considerations to be adverted in revising — Construction of statutory provision—Earlier view reasonably possible—Alternative view, pressed on subsequent occasion, also reasonably possible view — Supreme Court would be normally reluctant to revise its earlier decisions.

In the case, it was urged that Supreme Court should revise its view as to construction of S. 66 (4), Income-tax Act, 1922, in two earlier decisions, AIR 1959 S C 1177 and AIR 1963 S C 1484. (The latter was a unanimous decision of a Bench of five Judges.) The Supreme Court conceded that the alternative view pressed for revising the earlier decisions was a reasonably possible view; but refused to revise the earlier decisions on ground that the earlier view had been followed by the Supreme Court on several occasions and had regulated the procedure on reference proceedings in the High Courts ever since the decision in AIR 1959 S C 1177, and that no reported decision was cited to support the alternative view. ● ——Art. 141—Supreme Court if and how far bound by its own decisions — Doctrine of stare decisis how far applicable.

Per Gajendragadkar, C. J., Wanchoo and Raghubar Dayal, JJ. — The Constitution does not place any restriction on the powers of Supreme Court to review its earlier decisions or even to depart from them and in matters relating to the decision of constitutional points which have a significant impact on the fundamental rights of citizens, it would be prepared to review its earlier decisions in the interest of public good. The doctrine of stare decisis may not strictly apply in this context and the said doctrine should not be permitted to perpetuate erroneous decisions pronounced by the Supreme Court to the detriment of general welfare. Even so, the normal principle that judgments pronounced by the Supreme Court would be final, cannot be ignored and unless considerations of a substantial and compelling character make it necessary to do so, the Supreme Court should be slow to doubt the correctness of previous decisions or to depart from them. In such a case the test should be; is it absolutely necessary and essential that the question already decided should be re-opened. The answer to this question would depend on the nature of the infirmity alleged in the earlier decision, its impact on public good and the validity and compelling character of the considerations urged in support of the contrary view. If the said decision has been followed in a large number of cases, that again is a factor which must be taken into account. Applying the above test the Supreme Court refused to reconsider the correctness of its earlier decision in AIR 1951 S C 458. Sajjan Singh v. ● ——Art. 141 — Binding nature of Supreme Court Decisions—Power of Supreme Court to overrule its previous decision—(Precedents—Supreme Court).

In a proper case it is permissible for the Supreme Court to go back upon its previous decision.

(Per Majority). — There is nothing in our Constitution which prevents the Supreme Court from departing from a previous decision if it is convinced of its error and its baneful effect on the general interests of the public. Article 141, which lays down that the law declared by the Supreme Court shall be binding on all Courts within the territory of India quite obviously refers to Courts other than the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court should not lightly dissent from a previous pronouncement of the Court. Its power of review, which undoubtedly exists, must be exercised with due care and caution and only for advancing the public well-being in the light of the surrounding circumstances of each case brought to its notice but it is not right to confine its power within rigidly fixed limits. If on a re-examination of the question it comes to the conclusion, that the previous majority decision was plainly erroneous then it will be its duty to say so and not to perpetuate its mistake even when one learned Judge who was party to the previous decision considers it incorrect on further reflection. It should do so all the more readily when its decision is on a constitutional question and its erroneous decision has imposed illegal tax burden on the consuming public and has otherwise given rise to public inconvenience or hardship, for it is by no means easy to amend the Constitution. The doctrine of stare decisis has hardly any application to an insolated and stray decision of the Court very recently made and not followed by a series of decisions based thereon. In any case, the doctrine of stare decisis is not inflexible rule of law and cannot be permitted to perpetuate errors of the Supreme Court to the detriment to the general welfare of the public or a considerable section thereof.

(Per contra). — Held, that there was no ground for reconsideration of the prior decision of the Court in AIR 1953 S C 252.

When the decision in a case given after full consideration is sought to be challenged, the first question to have been considered was whether or not there were circumstances to justify a reconsideration. It is only after the Court came at least to a prima facie conclusion on that preliminary matter that a reargument on the merits of that decision should have been permitted. The correctness of the prior decision cannot be straightaway canvassed before the Supreme Court and the question as to the competency or the desirability of such reconsideration must not occupy a later and subordinate part in the arguments.

The Supreme Court cannot differ from a previous decision of the Court because a view contrary to the one taken therein appears to be preferable. Case-Law discussed. Bengal Immunity Co., Ltd. v. Article 374 (2) of the Constitution was only for the period of 'interregnum' when the proceedings which were pending before the Privy Council were removed to the Federal Court and on the Federal Court was conferred, the jurisdiction which was previously exercised by the Privy Council. (Per Majority ; Kapur, J., Dissenting).— The ambit of Art. 161 is very much wider than Art. 142 and it is only in a very narrow field that the power contained in Art. 161 is also contained in Art. 142, namely, the power of suspension of sentence during the period when the matter is sub judice in the Supreme Court. Therefore, on the principle of harmonious construction and to avoid a conflict between the two powers it must be held that Art. 161 does not deal with the suspension of sentence during the time that Art. 142 is in operation and the matter is sub-judice in the Supreme Court.

It is open to the Governor to grant a full pardon at any time even during the pendency of the case in the Supreme Court in exercise of what is ordinarily called 'mercy jurisdiction'. But the Governor cannot exercise his power of the suspension of the sentence for the period when the Supreme Court is in seisin of the case. What is covered in Art. 142 is not covered by Art. 161 and similarly what is covered by S. 426 is not covered by S. 401. On that interpretation there is no conflict between the prerogative power of the sovereign State to grant pardon and the power of the Courts to deal with a pending case judicially. There is no conflict between O. 21, R. 5, Supreme Court Rules and Art. 161, but the conflict is between the wide powers conferred on the Supreme Court by Art. 142 and similar wide powers conferred on the Governor under Art. 161. Where the Governor in exercise of his powers under Art. 161 had passed an order granting suspension of the sentence on a convict on the ground that he intended to file an appeal before the Supreme Court, the order could only operate until the matter became sub-judice in the Supreme Court on the filing of the petition for special leave to appeal. After the filing of such a petition it would be for the Supreme Court when moved in that behalf, either to apply R. 5 of O. 21 or to exempt the petitioner from the operation of that rule. It would be for the Supreme Court to pass such orders as it thought fit as to whether the petitioner should be granted bail or should surrender to his sentence or to pass such other or further orders as it might deem fit in all the circumstances of the case. It follows that the petitioner for special leave cannot be exempted from the operation of O. 21, R. 5. The words of Art. 143 (1) are wide enough to empower the President to forward to the Supreme Court for its advisory opinion any question of law or fact which has arisen or which is likely to arise, provided it appears to the President that such a question is of such a nature or of such public importance that it is expedient to obtain the opinion of this Court upon it. However, the Supreme Court is not bound to give such advisory opinion in every case. Art. 143 (1) provides that after the questions formulated by the President are received by the Court, it may, after such hearing as it thinks fit, report to the President its opinion thereon. The use of the word "may" in contrast with the use of the word "shall" in the provision prescribed by Art. 143 (2) clearly brings out the fact that in a given case, the Supreme Court may respectfully refuse to express its advisory opinion if it is satisfied that it should not express its opinion having regard to the nature of the questions forwarded to it and having regard to other relevant facts and circumstances. ● ——Art. 143 — Advisory jurisdiction of Supreme Court—Ambit and scope — Opinion on questions relating to contemplated legislation.

Article 143 (1) does contemplate the reference of a question of law that is likely to arise. It is for the President to determine what questions should be referred and if he does not entertain any serious doubt on the other provisions, it is not for any party to say that doubts arise also out of them. The Supreme Court cannot go beyond the reference and discuss those problems. The circumstance that the President has not thought fit to refer other questions as to the constitutional validity of some of the clauses of the said Bill on the ground that they infringe other provisions of the Constitution cannot be a good or cogent reason for declining to entertain the reference and answer the questions touching matters over or in respect of which the President does entertain some doubt. A substantial question of interpretation of a provision of the Constitution cannot arise when the law on the subject has been finally and effectively decided by the Supreme Court. (a) of Art. 145 (1)—No conflict between the Rules and Legislative powers of Parliament under Entry 77 of List I— Rules held within powers under Art. 145 (1) and valid.

Under S. 58 (3) of the Advocates Act the right conferred on Advocate enrolled under the Bar Councils Act to practise in the Supreme Court is made subject to any rules made by that Court. To reinforce this position there is a saving enacted by S. 52 of the Advocates Act which specifically saves the powers of the Supreme Court to make rules under Art. 145 of the Constitution. In view of the saving which is repeated in S. 52 there is no question of the Rules 16 and 17 of O. 4 of the S C Rules restricting the right to act to a certain class of advocates, as being contrary to a law made by Parliament within the opening words of Art. 145 (1) Secondly, the submission that the words 'the persons practising before the Court' in Art. 145 (1) (a) are narrower than the words 'Persons entitled to practise before the Court' in Entry 77 of the Union list and that by a rule made under Art. 145 (1) (a) the Supreme Court could neither entitle a person to practise nor impose qualifications as to the right to practise as these are matters entirely within Entry 77 and therefore exclusively for Parliamentary legislation, is not correct. The words used in Art. 145 (1) (a) have been taken substantially from S. 214 (1) of the Government of India Act, 1935. The words were then used in a comprehensive sense so as to include a rule not merely as to the manner of practice but also of the right to practise or the entitlement to practise. Those words which are repeated in Art. 145 (1) (a) have still the same content. On the express terms of Art. 145 (1) (a) the impugned Rules 16 and 17 are therefore, valid and within the rule-making power of the Supreme Court under Art. 145 (1). Further, there is no anomaly involved in the construction that the Supreme Court can by its rules make provision prescribing qualifications, entitling persons to practise before it, and that Parliament can do likewise. There is no question of a conflict between the legislative power of Parliament and the rule-making power of the Court, because by reason of the opening words of Art. 145, any rule made by the Supreme Court would have operation only subject to laws made by Parliament on the subject of the entitlement to practise, Lily Isabel Thomas, In re, (1964) 6 S C R 229 : 1964 (1) Cri L J 724 : (1964) 2 S C W R 367; 1964 Cur L J (S C) 133 : (1964) 2 S C A 536 : A I R 1964 S C 855 (857, 858, 859) (Pt B) (Prs 7, 11).

● —Art. 145 — Scope — Supreme Court Rules, O. IV-A, Rr. 23 and 24 as amended in 1959 — If ultra vires.

The Supreme Court has the inherent jurisdiction to regulate its proceedings, relating to conduct of persons appearing before it, in and out of Court, in so far as such conduct has a bearing on their professional relations and ethics. Apart from the inherent jurisdiction, Art. 145 of the Constitution itself has authorised the Court to make rules for regulating generally the practice and proeedure of the Court. Hence, R. 23 which provides that an advocate shall be guilty of professional misconduct if he accepts an engagement in any legal business through a person included in the list of touts, cannot be said to be beyond the rule-making powers of the Supreme Court. So also R. 24, which lays down the procedure for publishing lists of touts and for holding an enquiry to determine whether or not a particular person should be included in such a list must be equally within the purview of the rule making power of the Supreme Court. ● ——Art. 145 (3) — Constitution Bench of five Judges can split up case by deciding constitutional questions and leaving the rest for disposal by Division Bench.

There is no general rule of indivisibility and the splitting up of cases is not generally repugnant to law and in particular to the Constitution. The proviso to Art. 145 (3) and Art. 228 of the Constitution of India clearly indicate that the splitting up of cases into different stages for hearing and decision is not repugnant to the Constitution or the general principles of procedural Law. The underlying principle of the Constitution is clear and all that it insists upon is that all constitutional questions should be heard and decided by a Bench of not less than five Judges. As long as this requirement is fulfilled there can be no Constitutional objection to the rest of the case being disposed of by a Division Bench of less than five judges, so as to save the time of the Constitution Bench of five or more judges.

In construing clause (3) of Art. 145 no quality of indivisibility need be attributed to the words "the case" used therein. As the Court is entitled to decide a case in stages there is no reason why Art. 145 (3) should be so construed as to deprive the Supreme Court of that inherent power. It will involve no violation of any principle of natural justice or of any legal principle if Art. 145 (3) is construed as requiring only that the minimum number of five Judges must sit for the purpose of deciding any case in so far and so long as it involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution.

Hence a Constitution Bench of five judges before which the case happens to be posted in the first instance can split up the case by deciding the constitutional questions and leaving the rest of the case to be dealt with and disposed of by a Division Bench of less than five Judges on merits in conformity with the opinion of the Constitution Bench. It is not necessary that the Constitution Bench of five Judges must decide the whole of such case.

(Per Contra.)—The Constitution while laying down Cl. (3) of Art. 145, contemplates the whole matter in controversy arising in a case which may include substantial questions of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution as also other questions. The main Cl. (3) excepting cases coming within the purview of the proviso does not contemplate a splitting up of a case into parts, one part involving substantial questions of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution and another part or parts not involving such questions. 5. State Government.

1. Executive power of the State.

●——Art. 154 — Functions of Government — Executive, legislative and judicial functions — Distinction — Functions which are not legislative or judicial must be regarded as executive. Jayantilal Amratlal v. F. N. Rana, (1964) 5 Guj LR 481: (1964) 2 SCA 284: AIR 1964 SC 648 (655, 656) (Pt B) (Prs 10, 11).

●——Art. 154 (1) — Construction and scope — 'Executive' — Meaning of — Notification issued in name of Governor and authenticated as prescribed by Art. 166 (2) — Effect — Responsibility of Governor — Art. 166 (1) and (6) — Scope.

It is no doubt correct to say that the process of making an order precedes and is different from the expression of it, and that while Art. 166 (1) merely prescribes how orders are to be made, the authentication referred to in Art. 166 (2) indicates the manner in which a previously made order should be embodied. The term 'executive' in Art. 154 (1) is used in the broader sense as including both a decision as to action and the carrying out of the decision. AIR 1945 PC 156, Rel. on.

Where an order of the Government viz. a notification under Section 3 (1), Bihar Land Reforms Act is expressed to be made 'in the name of the Governor' and is authenticated by the Additional Secretary to the Government as prescribed by Art. 166 (2), the validity of the order or instrument cannot be called in question on the ground that it is not an order or instrument made or executed by the Governor. Even assuming that the order did not originate from the Governor personally but was made by some one duly authorised by him in that behalf within Art. 154 (1), the Governor nevertheless remains responsible for the action of his subordinates taken in his name. AIR 1945 PC 156, Rel. on. State of Bihar v. Rani Sonabati Kumari, 1960 Mad WN 818: ILR 40 Pat 216: (1960) 2 Ker LR 681: 1961 BLJR 285: (1961) 1 SCA 399: (1961) 1 SCR 728: 1961 Pat LR (SC) 26: AIR 1961 SC 221 (230, 231) (Pt D) (Prs 39, 40, 42).

——Art. 154—U. P. Government Industries Manual (1950) — Examination Rules for Government Technical Institutions, R. 4 — Nature of Rules — Amount to Government Orders — No statutory force — Effect of Art. 154 — Art. 154 is not by itself sufficient to clothe Government order with attributes of statutory notification so as to bring it within rules relating to issue of writ of mandamus. See U. P. Government Industries Manual 1950 — Examination Rules for Government Technical Institutions, R. 4. AIR 1959 All 681.

——Arts. 154, 161 and 162 — Governor's powers under Constitution.

A combined reading of the three Articles indicates that the entire executive power of the State vests in the Governor in respect of all matters in regard to which the Legislature of the State has power to make laws. In regard to the same matters he has also got the limited judicial power given under Art. 161. These are all the powers conferred on the Governor under the Constitution. ILR (1955) Andhra 208: (1954) 2 Mad LJ (Andh) 33: 67 Mad LW 1212: AIR 1954 Andhra 9 (10) (Pt A) (Pr 10).

●——Arts. 154 (1) and 238 (1) — Executive powers of Rajpramukhs.

Per Ansari J.:— The prerogative of absolute monarchy is so obviously inconsistent with a republican Constitution where the supreme powers reside in the body of the people that it cannot exist under it. The executive powers of the Rajpramukhs under the Constitution, therefore, cannot be co-extensive with those of the former Rulers of Part-B States. These powers are now circumscribed by and have to be gathered from the text of the Constitution. To this extent, there is a similarity between he Constitution of this Country and that of the United States. It is true that Articles 372 and 375 of the Constitution preserve earlier laws and functions of the former authorities. But they are also subject to the other provisions of the Constitution and cannot authorize continuance of the powers which are not conferred by the Constitution on the Governors of the States. ●——Arts. 154, 238 — Rajpramukh — Powers of — Power to decide question of succession to jagirs — R. 14 (2) of Jaipur Matmi Rules (1945) — Validity.

Under Art. 7 (3) of the Covenant of Rajasthan, the right to resume Jagirs or to recognise succession according to law and custom to the rights and titles of the Jagirdars vested exclusively in the Rajpramukh. But on the coming into force of the Constitution the power conferred on the Rajpramukh under Art. 7 (3) of the Covenant lapsed. For with the enforcement of the Constitution the Rajpramukh was not given power to decide the question of succession to Jagirs by any provision of the Constitution.

The questions of succession to Jagir are to be decided in accordance with the personal law applicable to the last holder. This personal law includes custom or usage relating to such Jagirs. Where the custom or usage applicable to a jagir was that the adoptee should be a direct male lineal descendant of the original grantee, on the date of the holder of a Jagir without leaving any issue the grant would vest in such adopted son and the grant does not remain in suspension till Matmi is effected in the name of a successor. Even if the Jaipur Matmi Rules 1945 had the force of law the provision contained in Rule 14 (2) regarding recognition of an adoption for purposes of succession by the Ruler before the adopted son could succeed to the grant became void on the coming into force of the Constitution. Thakur Jai Sing v. Thakur Sobhag Sing, 1961 Raj LW 168: ILR (1960) 10 Raj 1788: AIR 1961 Raj 146 (150, 152, 153) (Pt E) (Prs. 28, 29, 30, 41, 42) (FB).

——Art. 154 — Power to recognise succession to jagirs.

It is true that the power under Art. 7 (3) of the Covenant of the State of Rajasthan is executive power, but from that it does not follow that the executive power mentioned in the Constitution in Art. 154 includes the power to recognise succession to jagirs. A dispute as to a question to a jagir can only result in a suit of a civil nature and would lie in a Civil Court unless it was expressly or impliedly barred. When Art. 7 (3) became abrogated by virtue of the Constitution coming into force on 26-1-1950 there was no bar left to the suits of this nature being filed in the Civil Court. 2. Exercise of executive power.

——Art. 154 — Power to dismiss a public servant at pleasure is outside the scope of Art. 154 and therefore, cannot be delegated to a subordinate officer and can be exercised by him only in the manner prescribed by Constitution. See Ibid, Art. 309. 1961 (1) Cr LJ 773: AIR 1961 SC 751.

——Art. 154 (2) (a) — S. 7 of Police Act — Validity — Powers under — If delegated by Governor.

The powers of the Superintendent, Deputy Inspector General and the Inspector General of Police under S. 7 of the Police Act having been conferred by a law existing on the date of the Constitution were not transferred to the Governor but continued to be vested in those three officers. The powers under that section are not delegated by the Governor but created by statute and therefore, subject to all the conditions and limitations prescribed by that statute. It follows that any serious violation of the conditions will invalidate any decision made under S. 7. AIR 1954 All 629, Rel. on. AIR 1960 All 304 (311) (Pt D) (Prs. 26, 27).

——Art. 154 — Scope — Appointment of Special Magistrate for entire State — Power to direct place of sitting. See Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 14. 1959 Cr LJ 113: AIR 1959 All 82.

——Art. 154 — Powers of Governor — Notification under S. 14, Criminal P. C. — Power to direct at what place Special Magistrate shall exercise power — (Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 14 and 16).

The executive power of the Governor which is vested in him by Art. 154 includes the superintendence, direction and control of the Civil Government of the State, and it is within the ambit of this power that the Governor may direct at what place or places the officers of Government shall perform their duties, including the place or places at which a Special Magistrate shall exercise powers conferred upon him by a notification under S. 14 of Cr. P. C. The provisions of S. 16 of the Code are in no way inconsistent with this view as that section is concerned only with the power to frame rules. 1956 All LJ 247: 1956 All WR (HC) 300: AIR 1956 All 448 (448) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Arts. 154, 161 and 162 — Exercise of executive power — Mode of — Duty of Governor.

Such powers as are to be exercised by the Governor under the Constitution can only be exercised on the advice of the Ministers except where the Constitution expressly or by necessary implication provided that he can exercise the powers in his individual discretion as in the case of the Governor of Assam with respect to the Tribunal matters. AIR 1954 Andhra 9, Foll. (1957) 2 Andhra WR 464 : 1957 An LT 828 : AIR 1958 Andh Pra 619 (623) (Pt B) (Pr 11) (DB).

——Arts. 154, 163 and 311 (2) — Madras Public Service Commission Regulations (1937), Reg. 20 (1) (a) and (b) — Applicability — Adverse order against public servant — Appeal.

Where an order in appeal preferred by a public servant is passed subsequent to the passing of the Constitution, the Governor of the State is not entitled to exercise his individual judgment and dispose of the appeal. The words "Provincial Government" in Reg. 20 (1) (a) and (b) should be given the same meaning and should not be construed differently. The words 'Provincial Government' should be read as the Governor acting in consultation with the Ministers. There can be no right of appeal after the Constitution against the order of the Provincial Government, i.e., the Governor acting in consultation with his Ministers, to the Governor acting in his individual judgment. Therefore, Reg. 20 (1) (a) will now have no application whatsoever to an appeal preferred to the Governor exercising his individual judgment. (1957) 1 An WR 370: ILR (1957) Andh Pra 802: AIR 1957 Andh Pra 794 (805) (Pt F) (Pr 31).

——Arts. 154, 166 and 299 — Executive action in administration of Government property — Non-compliance with formalities under Art. 166 — Effect — Right of third party to challenge validity.

Although everything that is done by Government in the administration of property in its possession may be called executive action in an enlarged sense, because it is certainly not judicial or legislative, it does not follow that formality under Art. 166 should be observed strictly as long as the rights of the third parties are not affected. It is now well settled that even if the constitutional formality is not observed, the order does not become void but is only voidable, and a person who is affected might make an application to the Court, and the Court will have to be satisfied that the order has really been passed by the Government.

Assuming that the order amounted to a contract the violation of Art. 299 was a matter that concerned the contracting parties. An outsider could not come in and agitate its defects and obtain relief by way of a high prerogative writ. 64 Cal WN 1017: 1960 Cr LJ 1436: AIR 1960 Cal 668 (671, 672, 673) (Pr 6).

The Government can exercise only those powers which have been delegated to it by the legislature. Governments have no inherent powers of their own. The position of an Adviser to the Rajpramukh under an order of the President under Art. 356 taking over the administration of that State is analogous to that of a Minister in the ordinary constitutional set up. He must therefore, be regarded 'officer subordinate' within the scope of Art. 154 (1) of the Constitution, and the President, or the Rajpramukh exercising the powers on behalf of the President, acts in accordance with the Constitution when he exercises the executive power of the State through such a subordinate officer to him as the Adviser. The powers referred to in Art. 161 are not intended to be exercised arbitrarily except for good and sufficient reasons. It is of the very essence of a pardon that it releases the offender from the consequences of his offence. If the property or interest is not vested in others, the effect of the pardon is to restore that property to the original owner. Similarly if no one has been appointed to the forfeited office, the original office-holder is entitled to claim the office. Hence, where subordinate Police Officers have been dismissed as a result of their conviction and during the pendency of their appeal, a general amnesty is granted by the Andhra Government G. O. The accused, subject to naval law, was convicted for murder by an ordinary criminal Court and sentenced to imprisonment for life. After the judgment was pronounced, the accused made an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. Before the warrant issued for the arrest of the accused, who was in naval custody, could be executed, the Governor issued an order under Art. 161 of the Constitution suspending the sentence subject to the condition that the accused was to remain in naval custody till the disposal of the appeal to the Supreme Court.

Held, that the pith and substance of the condition was that the accused should remain in custody and not the mode or manner of that custody. Hence, the Governor's order was not unconstitutional and invalid.

An order made by an Authority, which was entrusted with wide powers under the Constitution and which on its face was ascribable to those powers, could not be struck down as invalid, because it contained a condition, the fulfilment of which might make someone do an act, which was not expressly authorised by law.

Held, further that as the sentence passed upon the accused had been suspended, it was not necessary for the accused to surrender to his sentence. O. 21, R. 5 of the Supreme Court Rules would not, therefore, apply in such a case. State v. A Sub-Inspector of Police and some constables (respondents) were dismissed from service as they were convicted of certain offences. They filed appeals against their convictions and sentences in the High Court. Pending the appeals, the Andhra State was formed upon which the Government of the new State declared a general amnesty to all the prisoners by its order. After the respondents were released from jail, they withdrew their appeals as not pressed. Immediately thereafter the respondents asked the concerned Authorities for postings. Upon being told that they were already dismissed from service, they moved the High Court under Art. 226 to quash the orders of dismissal.

Held, (1) on the construction of the amnesty order that it did not purport to afford any pardon under Art. 161 but was limited to the remission of sentences wholly and had a limited operation.

(2) that the prisoners were absolved only from the punishment that was inflicted on them but not from the other penal consequences flowing from the conviction. Therefore, the order did not touch the dismissal of the respondents AIR 1957 Andhra Pra 249, Rel. on., 1956 Andh WR 682, Reversed.

(3) that R. 3 (b) of the Madras Police Subordinate Services Discipline and Appeal Rules dealing with the conduct of enquiries in disciplinary proceedings did not denote that the Authority inflicting punishment of dismissal should await the disposal of the appeal and that the requirements of Art. 311 (2) were dispensed with in case of convicted persons by virtue of the Proviso to Art. 311 (2).

(4) that the order of dismissal was not rendered void by the circumstance that an appeal was pending.

(5) that sub-rule (3) of Police Standing Order No. 77, being conceived in the interests of administrative convenience had not the effect of rendering the order of dismissal null and void. ——Arts. 161 and 226 — G. O. Ms. 26 d/- 12-1-1954 directing general amnesty to all prisoners to celebrate inauguration of Andhra State — Applicability of order — "Amnesty", meaning of — Effect of pardon on office-holder—Right to office not forfeited — Dismissal from office — Alternative remedy available but not availed of — Writ could be issued, it being a fit case. Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 401 — Words and Phrases— "Amnesty" — Madras Police Subordinate Services Discipline and Appeal Rules.

The petitioners, one of whom was a Sub-Inspector and others constables, were convicted for an offence involving moral turpitude and sentenced to imprisonment. When their appeal was pending, the D. I. G. of Police dismissed them from service. Meanwhile after the inauguration of the Andhra State, the Government of Andhra, by G. O. Ms. No. 26, dated 12th January, 1954, ordered general amnesty to all the prisoners in the State. The petitioners who were on bail under the orders of the High Court of Madras were also granted amnesty. The appeals preferred to the High Court of Madras were thereafter, dismissed as not pressed in view of the amnesty. On the question whether the general amnesty applied to them and what was its effect on their office.

Held, (i) that the amnesty granted to the prisoners was a general pardon and not a remission of the sentence only. AIR 1954 Mad 911; 24 L. Ed. 442, 59 L. Ed. 476, Rel. on.

(ii) that the effect of the pardon was that even in respect of an office it was only if it was forfeited and vested in another that it could not revert to the original office-holder.

As no one was appointed to the forfeited office, the original office-holders were entitled to claim the office. LR (1890) 24 QBD 561; 15 L Ed. 421; 23 L. Ed 388 : 18 L Ed 366; 33 L Ed 550, Considered. 24 L Ed. 442, Relied on.

(iii) that it is not every conviction that leads to a dismissal. The moral turpitude has to be taken into account before any such order is passed. It could not, therefore, be contended that as a result of the conviction by the Court of Session, the petitioners forfeited their offices. It was only as a result of the enquiry and the orders passed by the Deputy Inspector General and the District Superintendent of Police that, the petitioners were removed from office. Moreover, their removal being opposed to the terms of Standing Order No. 77, was invalid and inoperative. In such a case it could not be held that they forfeited their offices or that they were not entitled to be restored to their posts as a result of the amnesty granted. 79 ER 651; LR (1890) 24 QBD 561; 18 L Ed. 366, Ref.

(iv) that the fact that the petitioners did not avail themselves of the opportunity that was afforded to them in appeal to establish their innocence had no bearing upon the question, because it was open to them either to establish their innocence in appeal or to rely on the rights conferred upon them by law as a result of the pardon granted under Art. 161; and they chose the latter course.

(v) that though petitioners had an alternative remedy to prefer an appeal under the Madras Police Subordinate Services Discipline and Appeal Rules, this was a fit case in which writ under Art. 226 could be issued. W. P. Nos. 904 and 905 of 1952 dated 3-4-1956; AIR 1954 SC 403, Rel. on. (1956) 2 Andh WR 682.

[Reversed in AIR 1960 Andh Pra 259 (SB).]

——Art. 161— Andhra G. O. Ms. No. 26, Law (Prisons) Department, dated 12-1-1954 — "Amnesty" — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 401) — (Words and Phrases — "Amnesty").

As understood in common parlance, the word 'amnesty' is appropriate only where political prisoners are released and not in cases where those who have committed felonies and murders are pardoned. But the intention of the Andhra Government in G. O. Ms. No. 26 was to pardon not only political prisoners but those convicted and sentenced to the extreme penalty of the law as well as for various terms of imprisonment for non-political crimes involving moral turpitude.

Chandra Reddi, J.: The order, G. O. Ms. No. 26 Law (Prisons) Department, dated 12-1-1954 was issued in the name of the Governor of the Andhra State. Although the provisions of law under which this order was issued are not mentioned, it may be taken that it was under S. 401, Criminal P. C. and Art. 161 of the Constitution of India. It is not within the province of High Court to consider whether the use of the expression "amnesty" is appropriate in the context. (1954) 2 MLJ 166 : 1954 Cr LJ 1370 : ILR (1955) Mad 92: AIR 1954 Mad 911 (912, 915) (Pt A) (Prs 2, 15) (DB).

——Arts. 162, 73, 53, 75, 202, 203, 204, 266 (3) — Scope of executive power — Executive power not confined to carrying out of laws — Power of executive Government to carry on trade or business without specific legislation sanctioning such course.

The functions of a modern State like the police States of old are not confined to mere collection of taxes or maintenance of laws and protection of the realm from external or internal enemies. A modern State is certainly expected to engage in all activities necessary for the promotion of the social and economic welfare of the community.

Neither of Articles 162 and 73 contain any definition as to what the executive function is and what activities would legitimately come within its scope. They are concerned primarily with the distribution of the executive power between the Union on the one hand and the States on the other. They do not mean that it is only when the Parliament or the State Legislature has legislated on certain items appertaining to their respective lists, that the Union or the State executive, as the case may be, can proceed to function with respect to them. On the other hand, the language of Art. 162 clearly indicates that the powers of the State executive do extend to matters upon which the State Legislature is competent to legislate and are not confined to matters over which legislation has been passed already. The same principle underlies Art. 73 of the Constitution.

It may not be possible to frame an exhaustive definition of what executive function means and implies. Ordinarily the executive power connotes the residue of Governmental functions that remain after legislative and judicial functions are taken away. The Indian Constitution has not indeed recognised the doctrine of separation of powers in its absolute rigidity but the functions of the different parts or branches of the Government have been sufficiently differentiated and consequently it can very well be said that our Constitution does not contemplate assumption, by one organ or part of the State, of functions that essentially belong to another. The executive indeed can exercise the powers of departmental or subordinate legislation when such powers are delegated to it by the legislature. It can also when so empowered, exercise judicial functions in a limited way. The executive Government, however, can never go against the provisions of the Constitution or of any law. This is clear from the provisions of Art. 154 of the Constitution, but, it does not follow from this that in order to enable the executive to function there must be a law already in existence and that the powers of the executive are limited merely to the carrying out of these laws. Opinion of Agarwala, J. in AIR 1951 All 257 (FB), held too narrow and unsupportable.

Our Constitution, though federal in its structure, is modelled on the British Parliamentary system where the executive is deemed to have the primary responsibility for the formulation of governmental policy and its transmission into law though the condition precedent to the exercise of this responsibility is its retaining the confidence of the legislative branch of the State. The executive function comprises both the determination of the policy as well as carrying it into execution. This evidently includes the initiation of legislation, the maintenance of order, the promotion of social and economic welfare, the direction of foreign policy in fact the carrying on or supervision of the general administration of the State. In the Indian Constitution, we have the same system of parliamentary executive as in England, and the Council of Ministers consisting, as it does, of the members of the legislature is, like the British Cabinet, 'a hyphen which joins, a buckle which fastens the legislative part of the State to the executive part". The Cabinet enjoying, as it does, a majority in the legislature concentrates in itself the virtual control of both legislative and executive functions; and as the Ministers constituting the Cabinet are presumably agreed on fundamentals and act on the principle of collective responsibility, the most important questions of policy are all formulated by them.

Where the Ministry or the executive Government of a State formulates a particular policy in furtherance of which they want to start a trade or business, a specific legislation legislating such trade activities before they could be embarked upon is not always necessary. If the trade or business involves expenditure of funds, it is certainly required that the Parliament should authorise such expenditure either direcly or under provisions of a statute. What is generally done in such cases is, that the sums required for carrying on the business are entered in the annual financial statement which the Ministry has to lay before the House or Houses of Legislature in respect of every financial year under Art. 202 of the Constitution. So much of the estimates as relate to expenditure other than those charged on the consolidated fund are submitted in the form of demands for grants to the legislature and the legislature has the power to assent or refuse to assent to any such demand or assent to a demand subject to reduction of the amount (Art. 203). After the grant is sanctioned, an Appropriation Bill is introduced to provide for the appropriation out of the consolidated fund of the State of all moneys required to meet the grants thus made by the Assembly (Art. 204). As soon as the Appropriation Act is passed, the expenditure made under heads covered by it would be deemed to be properly authorised by law under Art. 266 (3) of the Constitution.

It is true that the Appropriation Acts cannot be said to give a direct legislative sanction to the trade activities themselves. But so long as the trade activities are carried on in pursuance of the policy which the executive Government has formulated with the tacit support of the majority in the legislature, no objection on the score of their not being sanctioned by specific legislative provision can possibly be raised. Objections could be raised only in regard to the expenditure of public funds for carrying on of the trade or business and to these the Appropriation Acts would afford a complete answer.

Specific legislation may indeed be necessary if the Government require certain powers in addition to what they possess under ordinary law in order to carry on the particular trade or business. Thus when it is necessary to encroach upon private rights in order to enable the Government to carry on their business, a specific legislation sanctioning such course would have to be passed.

Where the entire expenses necessary for carrying on the business of printing and publishing the text books for recognised schools in Punjab were estimated and shown in the annual financial statement and the demands for grants, which were made under different heads, were sanctioned by the State Legislature and due Appropriation Acts were passed for the purpose of carrying on the business, the Government do not require any additional powers and whatever is necessary for their purpose, they can have by entering into contracts with authors and other people. This power of contract is expressly vested in the Government under Art. 298 of the Constitution. In these circumstances, the carrying on of the business of printing and publishing textbooks cannot be said to be beyond the competence of the executive Government without a specific legislation sanctioning such course. 31 CLR 421 and 52 CLR 533, Disting. The functions and duties of the executive extend to subjects not only in regard to which there have been enacted legislatations but to all topics in regard to which the State Legislature is competent to legislate. But the existence of a legislation is not a prerequisite to the exercise of executive functions in regard to any subject. AIR 1955 SC 549 and AIR 1951 All 257 (FB), Rel. on.

It is the primary duty of the Executive to take stock of the educational needs of the people in the State, and lay down a policy in regard thereto in furtherance of the educational advancement of its people. If the field is not occupied by a statute, the State Government functions in its executive capacity in that regard. It follows that the G. O. Ms. No. 1071 (Health), dated 26th May, 1958 and G. O. No. 1155, dated 4th June, 1958, issued by the Government of Andhra Pradesh regulating admissions to certain courses in the colleges cannot be regarded to be laws in any sense of the term, nor can they be disregarded on the ground that they lack legislative sanction.

Held, further that as the colleges in question were maintained by the Government and not by the University the State Government was empowered to make the rules with regard to the admission into those colleges. ILR (1959) Andh Pra 137 : (1959) 2 Andh WR 15 : AIR 1959 Andh Pra 437 (439, 440, 442) (Pt B) (Prs 8, 9, 10, 11, 27) (DB).

——Arts. 162 and 73 — Kerala Education Bill submitted for assent of President — Executive order embodying provisions — Validity.

The Government Order Ed. (C. Spl.) 1-20599/57/EHD, dated 12th October, 1957, does not directly or indirectly seek to achieve the result of the Presidential assent by making law of Cl. 3 of the Kerala Education Bill, which was awaiting the assent of the President. All that the order does is to do what the State Government has the power to do even without such a law. The power of the State Legislature to make laws on the subject of education remains altogether unaffected by the fact that a bill it has passed on the subject is yet to become law. The executive power of the State still extends to the whole subject of education, even to matters covered by the Education Bill, and until the Bill becomes law unaffected by it. Articles 73 and 162 of the Constitution do not mean that it is only when Parliament or the State Legislature has legislated on matters within their respective limits that the Union or the State execuive as the case may be can proceed to function in respect of them. Consequently the fact that the State Legislature is in the process of making a law governing the matters covered by the orders does not in any manner affect the executive power of the State in respect of those matters until the law is actually made. 1958 Ker LT 233 : 1958 Ker LJ 357 : ILR (1958) Kerala 558 : AIR 1958 Ker 290 (300, 301) (Pt H) (Prs 46, 47) (DB).

The Madras Government Notification No. 951, dated 18th November, 1952, is ultra vires and unenforceable to the extent that it imposes duty on medicinal preparations. The duty payable under Notification No. 473 was in respect of the spirit contents of medicinal preparation at Rs. 35 per gallon, whereas the duty under Notification No. 941 is in respect of potable medicinal preparations at Rs. 3 per bulk gallon. The two duties are so dissimilar that it is not possible to treat the one as substantially identical with the other. The tax on the spirit contents of medicinal preparations is in reality a tax on intoxicating liquors which has always been within the competence of the State Legislature (Vide Entry No. 31 in List 2 in Sch. 7 to the Government of India Act, 1935 and Entry No. 8 in List 2 in Sch. 7 to the Constitution). The duty on bulk gallon imposed by Notification No. 941 is clearly excise duty on medicinal preparations and that is under the Constitution, within the exclusive competence of the Union under Entry 84, in List I. As neither the Legislature nor the Government of Madras had on that date any competence to impose a duty on medicinal preparations, the imposition under Notification No. 941 is not within the saving of Art. 277 and must be held to be ultra vires. 1953 Mad WN 909 : (1953) 2 MLJ 724 : AIR 1954 Mad 643 (649, 650) (Pt E) (Prs 24, 27) (DB).

The notification No. 14223-IIJ/Ex. 1/61 R dated 1-4-1961 issued by the Government of Orissa in exercise of their powers under S. 27 of the Bihar and Orissa Excise Act 2 of 1915 levying countervailing duty payable as from that date on imported foreign liquor at an increased rate of Rs. 70 per London Proof Gallon is not invalid as being unconstitutional.

The contention that the word "Countervailing" occurring in Entry 51 of List II should be given its full meaning and unless duty was actually paid for liquor manufactured in Orissa there could be no question of levying a countervailing duty on the same liquor imported into Orissa is fallacious. The power to levy duty itself is not derived from entry 51 in List II of the Seventh Schedule. The entry merely refers to the legislative power of the State Legislature. The Bihar and Orissa Excise Act 2 of 1915 is an 'existing law'. It is only when a law has been so made by the Legislature that the power of Government to levy either a duty or a countervailing duty would arise. It is true that the Executive power of the Government of a State is co-terminous with the legislative power of the State Legislature (see Article 162). But by virtue of Article 265 of the Constitution no tax can be levied or collected except by authority of law. Hence unless there is first a law validly made by the competent Legislature, in exercise of the power conferred by Entry 51 of List 2, Government cannot, merely on the strength of the aforesaid entry alone, exercise their executive power to levy duty.

Being a pre-Constitution Act, it was adapted by the President with a view to conform to the provisions of the Constitution. Sections 27 and 28 of the Act would therefore, be the relevant provisions authorising the levy of Excise duty as well as countervailing duty. A law may provide for levy of excise duty on liquor manufactured in Orissa even though at the time of the coming into force of the said law no liquor is, in fact, manufactured in Orissa. The law is meant to apply later whenever liquor is manufactured. Similarly the same law may provide for the levy of a countervailing duty on the same class of liquor imported into a State. That also will only apply when liquor is actually imported into the State. It would not be correct to say that unless the liquor is actually manufactured in Orissa, the Legislature will not have the power to make a law providing for the levy of an excise duty thereon.

As admittedly the rate of duty on liquor produced in Orissa as levied by the State Government, is identical with the countervailing duty required by the Notification to be paid in respect of imported liquor there is nothing unconstitutional in the Government Notification. 29 Cut LT 76 : ILR (1963) Cut 93 :(1963) 5 Ori JD 168.

Entry 17 of List 2 includes what is contemplated in Item 56 of list 1. Unless the Parliament declares the extent to which the regulation and development of inter-State rivers and the river valleys are to be expedient in the public interest, the State has full power with regard to all legislation regarding water as contemplated by Entry 17 of List 2.

Therefore a project which is essentially a project relating to water for purposes of preventing the floods is clearly within the competence of the State Legislature and as such the executive action in notifying the same for acquisition and the contemplated project cannot be held to be unconstitutional under Entry 56 of List 1 and Art. 162 of the Constitution. ILR (1956) Cut 443 : AIR 1956 Orissa 114 (118) (Pt A) (Pr 11) (DB).

Under the Indian Constitution the Advocate-General is only an officer of the State charged with certain duties. This is clear from Art. 165 of the Constitution. In discharging the functions assigned to him under S. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he is discharging duties of a legal character as contemplated by clause 2 of Art. 165. When the jurisdiction is conferred under Art. 226 on the High Court to issue writs in appropriate cases even as against a Government, there is no point in contending that such writs will not lie against the Advocate-General acting under S. 92, Civil P. C., who is only an officer under Government. His orders regarding consent are undoubtedly liable to scrutiny by the High Court and are amenable to appropriate writs under Art. 226, provided that there are justifiable grounds calling for such interference by the High Court. ILR (1954) Trav-Co 369 : AIR 1954 Trav-Co 331 (336) (Pt A) (Pr 9) (DB).

Art. 166 (1) of the Constitution does not require a magic incantation which can only be expressed in a set formula of words. It is sufficient if the substance of the requirements is there. S. 3 of the Preventive Detention Act (1950) provides that the State Government may if satisfied make an order directing that such person be detained. It is therefore, appropriate that an order of detention should set out that the "Government of Bombay was satisfied" and that "the Government directed the detention." It is also proper that the order should have been executed under the Orders of the Governor authenticated by the signature of the Secretary, though the addition of the words "and in his name" to the words "by order of the Governor of Bombay" would have placed the matter beyond controversy. An order purporting to be an order of the Governor cannot fail to be otherwise than in his name.

Where the order produced is sought to be proved by other evidence, it is impossible to lay down any rule regarding either the quantum or nature of the evidence necessary to satisfy the Court. That is a question of fact which must be different in each case. It is not necessary in every case to call the Minister in charge to depose to the facts. If the secretary, or any other person, has the requisite means of knowledge and his affidavits are believed that will be enough.

The verification of such affidavit should invariably be modelled on the lines of O. 19, R. 3 of the Civil P. C. whether the Code applies in terms or not. And when the matter deposed to is not based on personal knowledge the source of information should be clearly disclosed. State of Bombay v. ——Art. 166 — Memorandum of State appeal — Signature of Rajpramukh — Necessity of — (Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 417).

The signature of the Rajpramukh is not necessary under Art. 166 on the memorandum of a State appeal against acquittal for, in such matters, the direction in that Article is only declaratory and not mandatory and, moreover, that Article refers to executive acts and the filing of an appeal is evidently a judicial and not an executive Act. 1953 Cri LJ 477: ILR (1953) Hyd 131: AIR 1953 Hyd 59 (60) (Pt A) (Pr 3) (DB).

——Art. 166 — Scope.

The provisions of Art. 166 are directory and the failure on the part of the State Government to issue a proper order in the name of the Governor and in the case of a Part B State in the name of the Rajpramukh, or to notify that order by publishing it in the Government Gazette does not affect the validity of the order AIR 1952 SC 181, Rel. on. ILR (1953) Patiala 588: AIR 1953 Pepsu 196 (199) (Pt B) (Pr 4).

——Art. 166 — Scope — Sanction under S. 6 (b) of Prevention of Corruption Act (1947) — Validity — Article 166 is not complete bar to questioning of validity of sanction — Sanction can be questioned on ground that sanctioning authority had not applied its mind to the facts of the case.

Article 166 of the Constitution does not operate as a bar to the validity of sanction under S. 6 of the Prevention of Corruption Act being questioned in a Court of law save on the limited ground mentioned therein. Where the two conditions laid down in Art. 166 are satisfied, then an irrebuttable presumption arises that the order purporting to have been made by the Governor was made by him and the same cannot be questioned. But the immunity is available so far as that particular ground goes and no further. Thus the sanction does not enjoy immunity from attack on any other ground, e. g., that the sanctioning authority had not applied its mind to the facts of the case before according the sanction, 1962 (2) Cr LJ 786 : ILR (1962) 12 Raj 327 : 1962 Raj LW 307 : AIR 1962 Raj 250 (253, 254) (Pt A) (Pr 6) (DB).

——Art. 166 — Scope of — 'Governor' in the article means Governor himself as distinguished from any other authority.

The word 'Governor' as used in the context was intended to be used for the Governor himself as contradistinguished from any other authority and what was intended to be conveyed thereby was that the papers had been placed before the Governor himself and that his own satisfaction had been obtained. If there is another competent authority under the Rules of Business made by the Governor whose satisfaction would be required or was obtained before a valid sanction could be or was given, this article does not require it to be mentioned and such a mention cannot be justified on the language of the article. Hence when the mention of the Governor being satisfied on the papers placed before him was made in the sanction, it would not necessarily amount as a matter of fact or law to this that the material papers had been put before the Minister concerned and/or that the latter's satisfaction had really been obtained as it should have been. 1962 (2) Cri LJ 786: ILR (1962) 12 Raj 327: 1962 Raj LW 307: AIR 1962 Raj 250 (257, 258) (Pt I) (Pr 20) (DB).

● ——Art. 166 — Order of the State Government —Two essential ingredients of—Action taken by Council of Ministers when becomes action of State — Communication of order to person concerned — This is essence of order.

Before something amounts to an order of the State Government two things are necessary. The order has to be expressed in the name of the Governor as required by Cl. (1) of Art. 166 of the Constitution and then it has to be communicated. It is not till this formality is observed that the action can be regarded as that of the State. Constitutionally speaking, the Minister is no more than an adviser and that the head of the State, the Governor is to act with the aid and advice of his Council of Ministers. Therefore, until such advice is accepted by the Governor whatever the Minister or the Council of Ministers may say in regard to a particular matter does not become the action of the State. It is of the essence that the order has to be communicated to the person who would be affected by that order before the State and that person can be bound by that order. For, until the order is communicated to the person affected by it, it would be open to the Council of Ministers to consider the matter over and over again and, therefore till its communication the order cannot be regarded as anything more than provisional in character. One of the meanings of "expressed' is to make known the opinions or the feelings of a particular person and when a secretary to Government apprehends a man and tells him in the order that it is being done under the order of the Governor, he is in substance saying that he is acting in the name of the Governor and, on his behalf, is making known to the detenu the opinion and feelings and orders of the Governor. The Constitution does not require a magic incantation which can only be expressed in a set formula of words. What the Court has to see is whether the substance of the requirements of Art. 166 (1) is there.

An order of detention under S. 3 (1) of the Preventive Detention Act, 1950 stated in the preamble "whereas the Government of Bombay was satisfied . . . . . ." and its operative part read as follows.

"Now, therefore, ... the Government of Bombay is pleased to direct that the said Shri . . . . . be detained.

By order of the Governor of Bombay
Sd/- X.X.X.X.
Secretary to the Government of Bombay, Home Department."

Held that the order was "expressed" to be made in the name of the Governor as required by Art. 166 (1) because it said "By order of the Governor."

Further that though the addition of the words "and in his name" to the words. "By order of the Governor of Bombay" would have placed the matter beyond controversy, the order which purported to be an order of the Governor of Bombay could not be otherwise than in his name. By reason of Art. 166 read with Art. 238, the Rajpramukh was empowered to make rules for the conduct of governmental business of a State. The allocation of distinct subjects to different Ministers is only for the sake of convenience and any order passed by any Minister shall be deemed to have been made by the Governor on the advice of his Council of Ministers.

The acts of the Government of a State, either Part A or Part B State, were to be expressed in the form of an order and that order was to be issued by the Secretary or some other officer authorised in that behalf in the name of the Governor or the Rajpramukh. Under the concerned rules, the Minister in charge of the portfolio might be mainly responsible for tendering advice to the Rajpramukh for the disposal of the business relating to the subjects allotted to him but whether the advice was accepted by the Rajpramukh or not could not be investigated by a Court. An individual Minister could not issue orders in his own name independently of the Secretariat even in regard to matters that are within the portfolio allotted to him. ILR (1960) 1 Andh Pra 42: AIR 1960 Andh Pra 234 (242, 243) (Pt G) (Prs 45, 47, 48) (DB).

3. Non-compliance with Clause (1) — Effect.

●——Art. 166 — Nature of — Non-compliance with — Effect.

Clauses (1) and (2) of Art. 166 are directory only and non-compliance with them does not result in the order being invalid, and in order to determine whether there is compliance with these provisions all that is necessary to be seen is whether there has been substantial compliance with those requirements. AIR 1952 SC 181, Rel. on.

Held, that the notice signed by the Chief Secretary of the State and expressed to be on behalf of the Government and giving opportunity to the petitioner to show cause against the action proposed to be taken against him was in substantial compliance with the provisions of the Article. ——Art. 166 (1) — Omission and irregularity.

It is clear from Art. 166 (1) that all executive action of the Government of a State shall be expressed to be taken in the name of the Governor. So far as the Governor is concerned, he can exercise his discretion only in matters which are left to his discretion by some express provision in the Constitution. In all other matters, the decision is to be arrived at with the aid and advice of the ministers as is provided in Art. 163.

An omission or irregularity in not complying with the requirement of Art. 166 (1), is not fatal to the validity of the order where the actual decision culminating in the order is that of the Government. 1955 Cri LJ 1474: AIR 1955 Assam 240 (243) (Pt E) (Pr 11) (DB).

——Art. 166 (1) — Order of appointment by Governor to be effective until further orders—Reversion from the post by inter-departmental letter without mentioning name of Governor — Validity.

An order of the Governor, in view of Art. 166 (1) can be valid only if it is expressed in the name of the Governor, by the use of such words as 'By order of the Governor'. An order of appointment by the Governor until further orders, can be terminated or varied only if a further order of the Governor is issued. An inter-departmental letter issued by an Under-Secretary without mentioning the name of the Governor at all will not be a valid order. An order of dismissal, removal or reduction in rank which affects the legal rights of an employee which have even secured constitutional protection under Art. 311 cannot be made by an inter-departmental correspondence. AIR 1959 SC 65, Rel. on. AIR 1964 Cal 265 (271, 272) (Pt B) (Pr 12).

——Art. 166 — Executive order affecting third parties — Essentials — Order under S. 58-A, Motor Vehicles Act held not in accordance with law — (Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, S. 58-A introduced by Motor Vehicles (West Bengal Amendment) Act (19 of 1951), S. 58-A).

Both Cls. (1) and (2) of Art. 166 are directory and not mandatory. Non-compliance with the provisions of either of the clauses only leads to the result that the order in question loses the protection which it would otherwise enjoy, had the proper mode for expression and authentication been adopted. Strict compliance with the requirements of Art. 166 gives an immunity to the order, in that it cannot be challenged on the ground that it is not an order made by the Gov- error. If, therefore, the requirements of that Article are not complied with, the resulting immunity cannot be claimed by the State.

When, however, an executive decision affects an outsider or is required to be officially notified or to be communicated, it should normally be expressed in the form mentioned in Art. 166 (1) i.e., in the name of the Governor and duly authenticated. In such a case, if the provisions of Cls. (1) and (2) are not satisfied it does not follow that the order is bad, but it would be subject to the provisions mentioned above and the immunity granted by Cls. (1) and (2) of Art. 166 will be lost and the onus would be on the State Government to prove to the satisfaction of the Court that the order has been made by the Governor.

Section 58-A, introduced by Motor Vehicles (West Bengal Amendment) Act (19 of 1951) in the Motor Vehicles Act requires an order to be made by Government directing the Regional Transport Authority or the State Transport Authority to grant a stage carriage permit to the State Government or any local authorities specified in the order. Such an order cannot be made verbally. When the order under S. 58-A, affected third parties, it should be in the form provided for under Cls. (1) and (2) of Art. 166. ('61) 65 Cal WN 1179.

Per Reddy J.: Any order which affects the rights of any person, and has as its basis a judicial enquiry or an enquiry whereby the person making it is required to apply a judicial process by not only taking evidence of both parties, but by hearing them and directing his mind to the records so constituted and coming to a conclusion uninfluenced by any extraneous matter other than the record itself would be quasi-judicial order. Case law discussed.

On the death of a big jagirdar and nobleman of Hyderabad, the Nizam issued a Firman on 18-2-44 appointing a Commission to inquire into his succession and report. After the Police Action another Commission was appointed by a Firman of 22-11-1948. It reported on 9-11-49 and on 3-5-50 the Chief Minister of Hyderabad by an order accepted the opinion of the majority recognising the persons recommended by it as heirs and the quantum of their shares also. The order sanctioning the succession having been challenged by applications for the writs of certiorari, prohibition and mandamus.

Held (1) that the order was quasi-judicial and the High Court had jurisdiction to quash it under Art. 226.

Per Ansari, Siadat Ali Khan and Reddy JJ.: (2) that after the Constitution came into force the Nizam has no prerogative right of sanctioning recommendations by the Commissions which were hearing Jagir succession cases at the time the Jagir Abolition Regulation was passed.

Per Chari and Deshpande JJ.:— Even before the Jagir Abolition Regulation, the Nizam was only exercising his right as the head of the State and even if it be assumed that he had any prerogative right there was no question of the exercise of such prerogative right when after the Jagir Abolition Regulation the question of the grant of a jagir to a jagirdar did not arise.

Per Ansari, Chari, Deshpande and Reddy JJ.:— (3) that the right to grant successions in pending proceedings being statutory still survives under the Constitution to the Hyderabad State and the Rajpramukh has power to confirm successions for the purpose of granting commutations, etc.

Per Siadat Ali Khan J.:— The executive of the Hyderabad State has no power under Constitution to confirm succession proceedings though it has power to sanction commutation after succession is settled by the law Courts.

Per Ansari, Chari, Deshpande and Reddy JJ.:— (4) that Art. 166 (1) is only directory and therefore, the order in question was not invalid merely because of the fact that it was not expressed to be made in the name of the Rajpramukh.

Per Siadat Ali Khan J.:— As the order sanctioned succession, it was ultra vires the powers of the executive. Ahmad-un-Nisa Begum v. State, ILR 1952 Hyd 595: AIR 1952 Hyd 163 (168, 171, 176, 181 to 183, 185, 186) (Pt A) (Prs 13, 23, 25, 52, 62, 64, 70, 79) (FB).

——Arts. 166, 15 (4) — Order under Art. 15 (4) made by Minister — Provisions of Art. 166 not complied with — Effect — Order not invalid.

An omission to make and authenticate an executive decision in the form mentioned in Art. 166 does not make the decision itself illegal, for the provisions of that Article like their counterpart in the Government of India Act, are merely directory and not mandatory. AIR 1952 SC 181 and AIR 1947 FC 38 and AIR 1959 All 82, Rel. on.

Where therefore the Court is satisfied that an order under Art. 15 (4) of the Constitution has been made by the Minister who was authorised to make it under the Rules of Business, mere fact that the same has not been expressed in the manner contemplated in Art. 166 is not sufficient to hold that the order in question is invalid. The only effect of the non-compliance is that the Government is put to the task of proving the existence of that order. (1963) 2 Mys LJ 302: AIR 1964 Mys 132 (142, 143) (Pt H) (Prs. 26, 27) (DB).

——Art. 166 (1) — Municipalities — Mysore Town Municipalities Act (22 of 1951), S. 14 (3) — Decision by Government — Compliance with Art. 166 (1).

Strict compliance with the requirements of Art. 166 (1) gives an immunity to the order in that it cannot be challenged on the ground that it is not an order made by the Governor: If, therefore, the requirements of that Article are not complied with, the resulting immunity cannot be claimed by the State; this, however, does not vitiate the order itself or render an executive action a nullity.

Thus, where the decision has in fact been taken by the appropriate Government and there has been in the circumstances no breach of the procedure established by law the mere circumstance that the copy of the order produced by the petitioner purports to be issued under the name of an Assistant Secretary to Government cannot affect the validity of the order. ——Art. 166 (1) — Scope — Non-compliance with — Effect.

If an order is expressed to be in the name of the Governor or Raj Pramukh and is authenticated properly, then it is immune from being called in question in any Court of law under Art. 166 (2) of the Constitution. But the non-compliance with the formality only results in depriving the order of its immunity and does not render it invalid. If on enquiry it is found that there was an order passed by the proper authority it would be valid even though it is not issued in a particular form. Provisions of Art. 166 (1) and (2) are directory and not mandatory in their nature and a substantial compliance of the requirements of that Article is all that is necessary. AIR 1952 SC 181 and AIR 1952 SC 317, Rel. on. The rules relating to making or execution of orders or instruments by or on behalf of the Government of West Bengal which have been made in exercise of the powers conferred by Cl. (2) of Art. 166 of the Constitution contained in the notification dated 25th August, 1951 (published in the Calcutta Gazette Extraordinary) enjoin that for the purpose of authentication of an order it is essential that the officers empowered to authenticate an order or instrument of the Government of West Bengal will have to sign the order of the instrument. Consequently where a dealing assistant submitted to the Assistant Secreary and through him to the Chief Secretary a note with a draft order to be issued under S. 58-A of the Motor Vehicles Act, and the Chief Secretary instead of signing the draft order which was to be issued in his name put his signature on the note sheet and not the draft order.

Held, that the requirements of Art. 166 (2) had been complied with and the order which was made and authenticated by the Chief Secretary to the Government of West Bengal did not lose the protection provided in Cl. (2) of Art. 166 and was therefore, immune from challenge in a Court of law on the ground that it had not been made or executed by the Governor of the State. AIR 1964 Cal 155 (159) (Prs 12, 13) (DB).

——Arts. 166 (2) and 311 (2) — Order expressed to be by order of Governor — Even so it cannot be held to be beyond challenge.

Merely because an order is expressed to be "by order of the Governor" and executed in his name and authenticated in the manner specified in rules made by the Governor, it cannot be held to be beyond challenge on any ground whatsoever. Art 166 (2) takes away the right to challenge the legality of the order or instrument on the ground that it is not an order made or executed by the Governor. Where, however, the order is executed and authenticated in the proper manner and the affidavits of the Secretaries filed in a writ petition go to show that before the making of the order the matter had been considered according to the normal Rules of Business the petitioner cannot challenge the same on the ground that it was not considered by the Governor personally. AIR 1945 PC 156, Rel. on. ('63) 67 Cal WN 859.

——Art. 166 (2) — Satisfaction contemplated under the proviso to Art. 311 (2) is not personal satisfaction of the Governor but of Government — Order dismissing a Government servant under Art. 311 issued in the name of the Governor and duly authenticated by a Secretary of the Government is in compliance with Art. 166 (2). ——Art. 166 — Matter relating to preventive detention — Order of approval and order of confirmation of the detention order duly authenticated as required by rules framed under Art. 166 (2) — No objection can be taken.

Presumably Art. 166 (3) relates to rules made for the more convenient transaction of the business of Government and for allocation of such business among Ministers. Those are what may perhaps be described as domestic rules. In the case of a matter relating to preventive detention, the Court is concerned with other rules made under Art. 166 (2) and in exercise of the power conferred by that clause, the Governor was pleased to make the rules on the 25th of August, 1951. Where under these rules the order of approval as also the order of confirmation of the detention order made by the State Government were duly authenticated by the Deputy Secretary and Joint Secretary no objection can be taken to them. ILR (1961) 1 Cal 276 : 1962 (1) Cri LJ 311 : AIR 1962 Cal 162 (165, 166) (Pt F) (Prs. 11, 12) (DB).

——Art. 166 (2) — Authentication of Government orders — Presumption as to.

Art. 166 (2) of the Constitution precludes challenge of an authenticated order issued in the name of the Governor on one ground and on one ground only, namely, on the ground that the order is not an order made or executed by the Governor. It does not preclude challenge of the order on the ground that the condition precedent to the validity of the order has not been fulfilled.

Under Art. 166 (2) what the authentication makes conclusive is that the order has been made by the Governor. Whether in making the order the Governor has acted in accordance with law remains open. There is no doubt that where the authentication order states, that the Governor is satisfied of a certain matter, the presumption is that the Governor has been so satisfied. This, however, is only a presumption and can be rebutted. AIR 1945 PC 156, Rel. on. ILR (1960) 1 Cal 685: AIR 1959 Cal 552 (554, 556) (Pt A) (Prs 4, 25) (DB).

of Business and Secretariat Instructions — Rr. 5, 7.

If the State Government, according to the General Clauses Act, means the Governor, orders of the Governor are the orders of the State Government, and Art. 166 declares that a properly authenticated order in the name of the Governor shall not be questioned as invalid on the ground that it is not an order of the Governor. This constitutional finality, therefore, prevents even an enquiry into the source of an order. Further Rule 8 of the State Transport Undertakings (Mysore) Rules, 1960, which have been issued in the name of the Governor, may itself be taken as having the same force as a rule made under Art. 166 (3) allotting to the Chief Minister the business of the State Government of approving a proposed Scheme for nationalisation under S. 68-D of the Motor Vehicles Act. Therefore, it is not possible to hold that either rule 8 of the State Transport Undertakings (Mysore) Rules, 1960, is ultra vires or that the Chief Minister was incompetent to discharge the function of the State Government under S. 68-D of the Motor Vehicles Act. ILR (1961) Mys 786.

——Art. 166 (2) — Rules under — Orissa Government Rules of Business, Rr. 11 and 12 — Authentication of Government order — Manner of — Effect of non-compliance.

A letter purporting to be a show cause notice under Art. 311 (2), by the Secretary to Government in the Works Department had not stated anywhere that the letter was issued under 'the direction of the Government. In the last portion of that letter also he had not settled that it was issued 'By order of the Governor':

Held, that the letter was not authenticated in the manner indicated by Rr. 11 and 12 of the Rules of business of Government. Hence the bar on judicial scrutiny imposed by Cl. (2) of Art. 166 of the Constitution will not apply. ILR (1960) Cut 13 : AIR 1960 Orissa 37 (38) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Art. 166 — Order passed by Minister — When takes effect — Absence of provision for publication — Effect — (Tenancy Laws — Madras Estates Land Act (1 of 1908), S. 180 (1)).

Any order passed by the Minister in order to take effect must issue in an authenticated form as required by Art. 166 of the Constitution. Where there is no clear provision as to the mode of publication of the direction and the determination of Government, the reasonable view would be that the order becomes effective only from the date on which it is made known to the person affected thereby. Where the statutory order has the effect of saddling landholders and ryots in large areas with liability to pay heavy expenses, such as one under S. 180 (1) of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, it will be idle to contend that the liability to incur those expenses arose as soon as the Minister passed an order to that effect on the file: ILR (1956) Cut 721: AIR 1957 Orissa 263 (267) (Pt C) (Pr 10) (DB).

——Art. 166 (2) — Scope of — Challenge to the validity of order.

What Art. 166 (2) of the Constitution prevents is the challenge to the validity of properly authenticated order on the ground that it is not an order or instrument made or executed by the Governor; but that does not prevent a challenge to the validity of the said order on the ground that such an order was not based on the satisfaction of the appropriate authority who under the law, can legally act for the Provincial Government. AIR 1945 P. C. 156, foll. The presumption that all official acts are to be taken to have been regularly performed is one that "may" be drawn by a Court. In a matter so fundamental and important as the liberty of a subject, which can be deprived of only by strict compliance with the statutory requirements of S. 3 of the Preventive Detention Act, the High Court will not be prepared to uphold the validity of an order of detention by reliance on any such presumption.

Even though the Secretary deals with such cases, they have to be submitted to the Chief Minister and Governor, and if there is no proof of the same, the orders are invalid.

Having regard to Art. 166 (3) of the Constitution and R. 8 of the main Rules of Business made by the Governor, in exercise of the powers conferred by Art. 166 of the Constitution, the satisfaction of the concerned Minister, i.e., the Chief Minister in the present case, must be taken to be the satisfaction of the Provincial Government. but there is no legal provision at all for the delegation of that responsibility from the Chief Minister to the Home Secretary. ILR (1952) Cut 353 : 18 Cut LT 307 : 1952 Cri LJ 1051 : AIR 1952 Orissa 200 (201, 202) (Pts A, B, C, D) (Prs 3, 4, 5, 6) (DB).

It does not oust the jurisdiction of the Court to examine the validity of the order on any other ground. Similarly, where an order is said to embody the prior decision of the Chief Secretary as approved by the Minister and is accordingly claimed to be valid, the question whether such approved decision has really been embodied in the order in question, can legitimately form the subject of a judicial enquiry. 5. Rules of Business of Government.

●——Art. 166 — Allocation of business by Governor —Principle — It is not necessary to make allocation after every new legislation has been passed by Parliament — Power to detain under R. 30, Defence of India Rules — Allocation made before promulgation of Ordinance — Validity.

Allocation of Business under Art. 166 (3) of the Constitution is not made with reference to particular laws which may be in force at the time the allocation is made. It is made with reference to the three lists of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution, for the executive power of the Centre and the State together extends to matters with respect to which Parliament and the Legislature of a State may make laws. Such allocation may be made even in advance of legislation made by Parliament to be available whenever Parliament makes legislation conferring power on a State Government with respect to matters in List I of the Seventh Schedule. Consequently, it is not necessary that there should be an allocation of power to detain under the Defence of India Ordinance, Act and Rules after they were passed. It will be enough if the allocation of the subject to which the Defence of India Ordinance Act and rules refer has been made with reference to the three Lists in the Seventh Schedule and if such allocation already exists, it may be taken advantage of, if and when laws are passed. ●——Art. 166 (3) — Punjab Rules of Business Rules 28 (1) and 4 — Powers of Chief Minister— His right to call for record and pass orders.

The question whether though grave charges had been proved against an official he should be removed from service forthwith or merely reduced in rank raises a question of policy. The Chief Minister is, therefore, entitled under R. 28 (1) (ii) of the Punjab Rules of Business to call up the file of his own accord and pass orders thereon.

There is also Cl. (xix) which confers a wide discretion upon the Chief Minister to call for any file and deal with it himself. Thus the order passed by the Chief Minister, even though it is on a matter pertaining to the portfolio of another Minister, will be deemed to be an order of the Council of Ministers. So deemed its contents would be the Chief Minister's advice to the Governor, for which the Council of Ministers would be collectively responsible. The action taken thereon in pursuance of R. 8 of the Rules of Business made by the Governor under Art. 166 (3) of the Constitution would then be the action of the Government. Bachhittar Singh v. Under the West Bengal Land Development and Plannning Act, 1948, the Government has power to sanction a development scheme and to issue a declaration under S. 6 of the Act, after being satisfied of certain matters. The duty to be satisfied is certainly a statutory duty. The Minister deals personally with the most important matters, but matters of ordinary import are dealt with by other officials. There can be no doubt that the Secretary or the Assistant Secretary is an important official. The Standing Orders whereby the Minister has determined as to which matters are to be put before him personally and which are to be dealt with by his subordinates, are valid, and the Assistant Secretary could be satisfied on behalf of the Government and also sanction the plan on behalf of Government AIR 1952 Orissa 200, not foll. 62 Cal WN 640 : AIR 1960 Cal 113 (116, 117, 118) (Pt A) (Prs 8, 11, 12).

Under the Madras Government Business Rules and Secretariat Instructions framed under Art. 166 (2) and (3) of the Constitution, the Governor is the head and symbol of the executive administration, and it is an order issued by or under his authority that constitutes an order of the Government. He discharged these functions with the aid and advice of his Ministers who are collectively responsible for the advice they tender (R. 7). The 'advice' that is tendered and the 'decision' that is taken by the Minister will not amount to an order of the Government unless it is embodied in a formal order issued on the authority of the Governor. The Secretaries of the departments are to carry out the orders of the Ministers, and in that sense there is a delegation of the functions of the Governor and by the issue of the order by the Secretary it becomes an order of the State Government. This is in line with Art. 154 (1), which vests the executive power in the Governor, and also in the line with the definition of State Government in the General Clauses Act in S. 3 (60) (b). Under R. 12 of the Business Rules read in conjunction with Art. 166 (2), the signatures of the Secretary or that of any of the other officers designated under the rules serve a double purpose : (1) of substance and (2) proof. The voting by a Minister on the file is not a decision of the Government or an order of the Government. Under the Constitution, no Minister can issue an order which could be treated as an order of Government. What he could issue is only a direction to the Secretary, and it would of course be carried out under the Business Rules, subject to the exceptions laid down there; but it is only when the Secretary or those under him carry out this duty that an order of Government results.

Hence, where on revision petitions filed under S. 64-A of Motor Vehicles Act, the Minister concerned had noted his 'decision' on the file before the repeal of S. 64-A by the Madras Amending Act (39 of 1954) took effect but the order issued by the Secretary embodying the decision was passed after the repeal took effect, the order of the State Government must be taken to have been passed after the repeal took effect. The proceedings in respect of the revision petitions must be held to have been pending before the Government on the date the repeal took effect and these stood automatically transferred to the new Tribunal under S. 5 of Act (39 of 1954), and the Government had no jurisdiction to pass any order in relation to them at the time when the impugned orders were issued 69 Mad LW 623 : (1956) 2 Mad LJ 430 : ILR (1957) Mad 115 : AIR ——Art. 166 — Business Rules of Mysore State, Rr. 12, 13, 14, 18 — Order passed by Minister of State — Not formally expressed as laid down in Art. 166 or R. 13 — Review — Power of.

It cannot be contended that an order passed by a Minister of the State is not an order of the Government because it was not put in the form in which it is required to be done under Art. 166 of the Constitution or under R. 13 of the Business Rules, or, because it was liable to be reopened at the instance of the Governor under R. 18. The order is still an order of the Government. How the order has to be expressed and whether or not it is liable to be reopened by the Governor are different matters. They do not affect the question whether or not an order has been made by Government. Mere non-compliance with Art. 166 does not vitiate the order itself and does not render the action in question a nullity. AIR 1952 SC 181, Rel. on.

Further, the Government having once passed an order, which is still a valid order, cannot review it on a subsequent application. AIR 1953 Mys 156 (FB), Foll. 38 Mys LJ 433: ILR (1959) Mys 356 : AIR 1960 Mys 243 (244, 245) (Prs 7, 8) (DB).

The presumption that all official acts to be taken to have been regularly performed is one that "may" be drawn by a Court. In a matter so fundamental and important as the liberty of a subject, which can be deprived of only by strict compliance with the statutory requirements of S. 3 of the Preventive Detention Act, the High Court will not be prepared to uphold the validity of an order of detention by reliance on any such presumption.

Thus R. 2 of the Subsidiary Rules of Business cannot validate an order of detention passed by the Home Secretary, as the authority of the Minister in charge who could have passed the order to the Home Secretary to deal with the case cannot be presumed. 18 Cut LT 307: ILR (1951) Cut 624 : 1952 Cri LJ 1051 : AIR 1952 Orissa 200 (204) (Pt B) (Pr. 4) (DB).

If orders of preventive detention fall under Cl. (iii) of sub-R. An order within the executive functions of the State Government, when it is expressed in the name of the Rajpramukh and is properly authenticated, cannot be attacked on the ground that it is not made by the person who purports to have made it. It is the essence of all democratic Constitutions of the kind we have in this country that even in matters which must be submitted to the Head of the State for his approval the latter is bound to follow the advice given to him by his Ministers but in a case in which the Minister was not bound even to submit the case to the Rajpramukh the orders made by him are final and must be enforced. The fact that the order was not communicated to the person affected by a competent authority in the form provided by the Constitution is immaterial and cannot affect the legality of the order which was otherwise final. ILR (1953) Patiala 639: AIR 1954 Pepsu 129 (130, 131) (Pt B) (Pr 5).

——Arts. 168, 194, 200, 208, 212 and 371 — Andhra Pradesh Regional Committee Order (1958) and bye-laws made thereunder — Andhra Pradesh Legislative Assembly Rules — 'Regional' bill referred to Regional Committee — Bill passed by Legislature after considering Regional Committee's report — Absence of notice to some members of the Regional Committee about its meeting — Effect — Proceedings of Committee, if null and void — Injunction to restrain Council of Ministers from presenting the Bill to the Governor for assent — Power of High Court.

The Andhra Pradesh State Legislative Assembly passed two 'Regional Bills' after considering the report of the Regional Committee constituted under Art. 371 (1) of the Constitution. At this stage, petitioners, who are some of the members of the Regional Committee questioned the validity of the report, before the High Court, on the ground that no notice of the meeting of the Committee was given to them as required by rules. They sought directions from the Court to declare the proceedings of the Committee null and void and to compel the Chairman of the Committee to convene a fresh meeting after proper notice to all the members. They also sought another direction restraining the Council of Ministers represented by the Chief Minister, from presenting those Bills to the Governor for assent, pending disposal of the Writ Petition.

Held, R. 35 of the Assembly Rules expects every member of the Assembly to turn up to participate in the deliberations of the Assembly and therefore, contents itself with placing the notice "on meeting days" in the Notice Office, or in the alternative with distrubuting the notices to the members in the Assembly itself. It is not the case of the second petitioner that he informed the Speaker or the Assembly Secretariat that he would not attend the session and communications meant for him should be sent to his residence in the muffasil. On the facts, it cannot be said that the petitioners have been wholly ignorant of the meeting. Decisions of Courts rendered in respect of inferior and subservient bodies cannot be applied to the Legislature or its committees. Art. 212 (1) of the Constitution enjoins that the validity of any proceedings in the Legislature of a State shall not be called in question on the ground of any alleged irregularity of procedure. The matter of giving notice in pursuance of bye-law No. 4 made by the Regional Committee, is essentially a matter of procedure. A committee of the Legislature is only an agency or instrument through which the Legislature functions. The proceedings of a committee are therefore, in substance and effect the proceedings of the Legislature itself. Art. 212 therefore, applies equally to both the proceedings. Even if the Regional Committee's report to Legislative Assembly was bad for non-compliance with correct procedure or non-observance of a bye-law, the Legislative Assembly could still in its wisdom accept that report and make it the basis of its legislation. In such a case, it will be futile for a Court of law to declare the report of the Regional Committee to be bad, for, that would be an ineffective declaration, a mere brutum fulmen, and a Court of law will surely not make an order which it knows will be ineffective.

The members of the Regional Committee are members of the Legislative Assembly and they share the rights and privileges of the members of that House and are amenable to its discipline and jurisdiction. The primary legislative activities of the members of the Committee are performed in the Legislative Assembly as members thereof. The Committee is only an agency through which the Assembly functions. It is therefore, not tenable to say that the Regional Committee itself is a separate House of the State Legislature. Even if the Regional Committee is to be regarded as a House of the Legislature itself, the absence of intimation to the members of that Committee will be only an irregularity of procedure on which an attack against the validity of its proceedings cannot be grounded in view of Art. 212 (1) of the Constitution.

The attempt of the petitioners is to persuade the Court to interfere with the proceedings of the Legislature in the formative stages of an enactment. The Court cannot and should not accede to this request. The sovereignty of the Legislature vouchsafed by Arts. 194, 208 and 212, not to speak of the general scheme and structure of our Constitution, is a potent factor and a decisive answer against the petitioners in this regard.

Under Art. 168 of the Constitution, the Governor is an essential part of the State Legislature. Art. 200 enjoins that a Bill passed by both Houses of Legislature of the State shall be presented to the Governor. This is undoubtedly an essential legislative process and a Court of law will not interfere with it. Moreover, it does not appear that the responsibility of presenting the bills to the Governor under Art. 200 is cast by the Constitution on the Council of Ministers. It is for the Houses of the Legislature represented by its Presiding Officers to submit a Bill to the Governor. It is a matter of internal arrangement whether the responsibility for submission of a Bill to the Governor should be placed on the Speaker or his Secretariat. Therefore, the relief sought by the petitioners against the Council of Ministers is neither appropriate nor effective. (1965) 1 Andh WR 304: AIR 1965 Andh Pra 306 (310, 313, 314, 315) (Prs 10, 11, 16, 19, 21, 22).

It was by amendment by Constitution (7th Amendment) Act, 1956, that the words 'Madhya Pradesh' were introduced in sub-cl. (a) of Cl. (1) of Art. 168. The language of sub-cl. (2) of S. 8 of the Act makes it clear that the words 'Madhya Pradesh' became a part of sub-cl. (a) of Cl. (1) of Art. 168 only after a notification has been made by the President. Cls. (3) and (4) of S. 33 States' Reorganisation Act provide that certain preliminary actions can be taken by the President after the appointed day for constituting the Legislative Council. 'Appointed day' for the purpose of the States Reorganisation Act means 1st November, 1956. The day for establishing a Legislative Council is to be appointed by the President and the appointment of such day has nothing to do with the definition of 'appointed day' in S. 2 of the Act. No day has yet been appointed by the President. The appointment of a day for the purpose of S. 33 (1) of the States Reorganisation Act and the day to be appointed by public notification under S. 8 (2) of the Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, 1956, are two different actions to be taken by the President. Unless a public notification is made appointing a day for the purpose of S. 8 (2) of the Seventh Amendment, Art. 168 does not stand amended and the Legislature of Madhya Pradesh continues to consist of only one House. Consequently the fact that the M. P. Municipalities (Amendment) Act (14 of 1958) was passed by only one House of legislature does not make the Act ultra vires. 1959 MPLJ 710: ILR (1959) Madh Pra 343: 1959 Jab LJ 453: 1959 MPC 458: AIR 1959 Madh Pra 353 (355, 356) (Pt B) (Prs 11, 12) (DB).

Nomination of members of the Legislative Council of the State made by the Governor under Cl. 3 (e) of Art. 171 read with Cl. (5) thereof of the Constitution, is an act done by him in his official capacity. The Governor not being answerable to Court by reason of Art. 361 of the Constitution it follows that the validity or invalidity of the nominations cannot be enquired into by the Court. The Governor not being liable to justify the nominations is not bound to disclose any facts relating to such nominations. The words "purporting to be done" in Art. 361 are of very wide application and even though the act done is outside or in contravention of the Constitution, it comes within the protection of that article, if the act is professed to be done in pursuance of the Constitution. Accordingly an application for a writ in the nature of mandamus directing the Governor to recall the nominations is wholly incompetent, if it cannot be said that the Governor acted mala fide in exercising his power under Art. 171 of the Constitution.

So long as the notification containing the nominations stands, it will be a complete answer to a writ of quo warranto against the nominated members. 56 Cal WN 651: AIR 1952 Cal 799 (802, 803) (Pt C) (Prs. 10, 14, 15).

Section 73 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, provides that upon the issue of a notification by the Election Commission in the Official Gazette of the names of the members elected for the various constituencies the Legislative Assembly 'shall be deemed to be duly constituted', though it begins to function only after it has been summoned to meet under Art. 174 of the Constitution. Once the Assembly is constituted it becomes capable of dissolution. A Legislature can be summoned to meet only if it is in esse at the time. There is nothing in S. 36 (7) of the Representation of the People Act of 1951 or S. 30 of the Act of 1950 or in any other provisions of the said Acts to hold that the age of the candidate as mentioned in the previous electoral roll should be accepted to be conclusive at an election dispute where his election is challenged on the ground that the said candidate was not qualified to stand at the election of Legislative Assembly because he lacked one of the essential conditions provided under Art. 173 of the Constitution, viz., that he was less than 25 years of age at the material time. The question of the qualifying age of a candidate whenever it is sought to be raised before an Election Tribunal would properly fall to be decided on all the materials which may be before it and the entry as to his age in the electoral rolls in force will be just one piece of evidence admissible under S. 35 of the Evidence Act, but no presumption that it must be accepted as conclusive proof of the age entered therein or that the candidate was at least 21 years of age at the date of his enrolment or on the qualifying date vis-a-vis the electoral roll in force can legitimately attach to it.

Under S. 36 (7) of the R. P. Act of 1951 a certified copy of an entry in an electoral roll shall be conclusive evidence of the fact that the individual referred to in that entry is registered as 'an elector' for the constituency. This, in other words means at the highest that his status as an elector for that constituency cannot be challenged before the Returning Officer. The conclusiveness of the presumption created by S. 36 (7) does not and cannot extend any further so as to bar an inquiry. It would depend entirely on the kind of the totality of evidence offered at the enquiry by the rival parties as to what value can be properly attached to the entries made as to age in the electoral rolls as compared with the other proofs offered at the trial, and no hard and fast rule can be laid down as to whether the one kind of evidence should prevail or the other. That must depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. It cannot be said that the entries regarding age in electoral rolls should always be assigned a greater value than like entries in educational records any more than the latter should prevail over the former. Any other view would render S. 100 (1) (a) of the R. P. Act of 1951 and Art. 173 of the Constitution as nugatory.

Section 30 of the R. P. Act of 1950 is also no bar to the jurisdiction either of the Election Tribunal or of the High Court to decide any question as to the age of the candidate; for neither the Election Tribunal trying an election dispute as a tribunal of original jurisdiction nor the High Court while hearing an appeal from its decision, can be said to be a Civil Court as such. In the second place, the question is not whether any person was or was not entitled to be registered in any electoral roll for a constituency or as to the legality of any action taken by or under the authority of an election registration officer or of any decision given by any authority appointed under the Act for the revision of any such roll within the meaning of S. 30. But the question is whether the candidate was qualified to stand for the election, inasmuch as he lacked the minimum qualifying age of 25 years as required by Art. 173 of the Constitution. Section 30 of the Act of 1950 has no relevance in a matter of this kind.

The failure to raise an objection either at the stage of the making of the entry as to age in the relevant electoral roll or at the time of the scrutiny of the nomination papers cannot in any manner adversely effect the conclusion, for there can be no estoppel against the statute and therefore, even if such an objection may not have been raised earlier, it can legitimately be raised before the Election Tribunal under the scheme of the election law. ARTICLE 176.

——Arts. 176 (1), 212, 154, 160 and 208 (1) — Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business (W. B. Legislative Assembly), R. 16 — Governor's address before Legislature — Address must be by delivery of speech — No deadlock possible if Governor becomes unable to address — Address is not idle formality or mere directory provision — Governor attempting to deliver speech — Disturbances in House — Walk out by Governor — Copy of address laid on table of House — Duty under Art. 176 (1) is merely irregularly performed — Mere irregularity cannot be questioned under Art. 212 (1).

On reading Art. 176 of the Constitution with sub-rules (1) and (2) of Rule 16 of the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in W. B. Legislative Assembly there can be little doubt that the address by the Governor, under Art. 176, shall be by delivery of a speech, may be by reading out from a prepared text. It is true that there is no Deputy Governor to discharge the functions of the Governor, but if the Governor becomes unable to deliver the address, as required under Art. 176, the President may make some other provision under Art. 160 for the discharge of the aforesaid function of the Governor.

The Constitution lays down the purpose for the address under Art. 176, namely, informing 'the Legislature of the causes of its summons'. Such an informative speech, which serves as the springboard for discussion in the legislature, either for approval or disapproval of administrative policies, cannot be an idle formality or a mere ceremony. Art. 176 casts upon the Governor the constitutional duty of delivering a special address at the annual opening session of the Legislature and the provisions for such address, in Art. 176 should not be interpreted as merely directory. The Legislature in India cannot ordinarily be said to have met until the mandatory preliminaries under Art. 176 have been gone through: AIR 1952 Orissa 234, Rel. on.

Unless the Governor delivers a speech informing the Legislature of the causes of the summons, the Legislature cannot meet to transact legislative business. A Governor cannot decline to deliver a speech and thus refuse to perform a constitutional duty. But when the Governor makes due attempt to perform the duty under Art. 176 but fails and walks out of the House and makes up the failure by publication of the address to the members of the Legislature by a well-known method, namely, by laying the address on the table of the House, the duty is merely irregularly performed and such an irregularity cannot be called in question under Art. 212 (1). Unless there grows a constitutional convention that the Governor's address shall be heard with attention, respect and ceremony due to the constitutional head of the State, there may be occasions when members of the Legislature may indulge in loud shoutings and unruly behaviour when the Governor comes to address. To hold that Legislature must not be deemed to have met when a Governor is unable to begin or to finish the address under Art. 176 and is compelled otherwise to publish the address is to put a value on such disturbances which they do not deserve. (1965) 69 Cal WN 484: AIR 1966 Cal 363 (368, 369, 370) (Pt B) (Prs 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 16, 17).

There is nothing in the language of Art. 176 (1) which says that the first Session of the Orissa Legislative Assembly commenced from the date on which the newly elected members were summoned to take their oaths. The expression "Commencement of every Session" is deliberate and the Session is said to commence with the address of the Governor under Art. 176 (1). The rules of Business of the Assembly also warrant the above interpretation.

Art. 212 of the Constitution operates as a bar to the jurisdiction of the High Court being invoked for the issue of a writ against the Speaker of the Assembly or the Secretary of the Assembly while functioning in his capacity as such inside the Legislature to regulate the conduct of business of the Assembly by virtue of the powers vested in him by the Constitution of India, Art. 226. ILR (1952) Cut 209: AIR 1952 Orissa 234 (236, 237) (Prs. 3, 4, 5, 9) (DB).

——Art. 190 (3) (b) — Resignation of his seat by a member of a legislature — Resignation expressed to operate in future is valid — Such a resignation takes effect from the date mentioned in it and not earlier — 'Addressed to the Speaker', connotation of—'Shall thereupon become vacant' meaning of — Withdrawal of resignation before the date it was expressed to take effect renders it non est in law.

A resignation under Art. 190 (3) of the Constitution to be valid need not operate in praesenti; a resignation expressed to take effect on a future specified date is well within the ambit of the article.

The expression 'addressed to the Speaker', in Art. 190 (3) means conveyed to the Speaker and not mere naming of the Speaker in the heading of the letter of resignation. For the resignation to be effective actual receipt of the letter of resignation by the Speaker is necessary. If the letter of resignation is expressly made to take effect on a specified date, the seat of the member becomes vacant only on such specified date and not immediately on its receipt by the Speaker. The word 'thereupon' in the expression 'shall thereupon become vacant' in the Article means in consequence of the resignation and not immediately or without delay or lapse of time. R. 162 of Kerala Legislative Assembly Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business dealing with resignation of seat by a member and providing a form for resignation strengthens this view. Consequently where a member tenders his resignation on a prior date to take effect on a subsequent date specified therein it takes effect only on the date specified by the member and therefore, if the member tendering the resignation withdraws the same in writing addressed to the Speaker before the specified date when it is to take effect, the withdrawal nullifies the entrustment or deposit of the letter of resignation in the hands of the Speaker rendering the resignation non est in the eye of law. The absence of specified provision for withdrawal of prospective resignation in the Constitution or the Rules is immaterial, as basic principles of law and procedure apply wherever they are relevant. The effect of withdrawal of the letter of resignation before it breathed effect being thus to render it as non est in law, the seat of the member resigning does not become vacant and therefore, a notification published in the Gazette about vacancy of the seat without giving any head to the letter of withdrawal is not warranted in law and is, therefore, null and void. 1964 Ker LJ 130: 1964 Ker LT 140: ILR (1964) 1 Ker 662 : AIR 1964 Ker 194 (196, 197) (Pt A) (Prs 6, 7, 8, 9).

——Art. 190 (3) (b) — Letter of resignation—Requirements of — Power of speaker to enquire about genuineness.

What is contemplated in the section is a resignation with the full consent of the writer of his or her own volition and not any letter of resignation. Provision in Art. 190 (3)(b) necessarily indicates that the letter of resignation must proceed from the member and that the resignation must relate to a membership held by the person who sends the same. A person cannot resign prospective status which he or she may or may not get in the ordinary course of events. The mere receipt by the Speaker of a letter of resignation purporting to be from a member will not cause that member's seat to become vacant. It is open to the speaker to enquire whether that is a genuine letter or a forged letter, or one obtained by fraud or force or is only a void document.

Held, on facts that the letter of resignation was not intended to be one resigning the seat, and it was void document and by virtue of that, the petitioner had not lost seat in the assembly. ILR (1952) TC 66 : 1952 Ker LT 166 : AIR 1952 Trav-Co 166 (169, 170) (Pt C) (Prs 7, 9).

The disqualification referred to in Art. 191 (1) must be incurred subsequent to the election of the member. This follows from Art. 190 (3) (a). AIR 1953 SC 210, Rel. on. Brundaban Nayak v. ——Art. 191 — Object of.

The object of the provision in Art. 191 is to secure independence of the members of the Legislature and to ensure that the Legislature does not contain persons, who have received favours or benefits from the executive and who, consequently, being under an obligation to the executive, might be amenable to its influence. The provision appears to have been made in order to eliminate or reduce the risk of conflict between duty and self-interest amongst the members of the Legislature. 60 Bom LR 217: 13 ELR 334 : ILR (1958) Bom 1294 : AIR 1958 Bom 314 (316) (Pt A) (Prs 2, 3) (DB).

——Art. 191 (1) (a) — Office of profit under the Government.

The salary paid to the member makes the office of the member of the Legislative Council as an office of profit. But it is not an office of profit under the Government. The source from which the salary is paid to a person holding office is not necessarily the sole test to determine whether he is holding an office under the State Government. The principal criterion is whether the appointment to the office and removal therefrom of a person is under the control of the State Government. ——Art. 191 (1) (a) — 'Office' — Meaning of.

The word 'office' has been judicially construed in several different senses and in each case a meaning has been assigned to it, having regard to the language used in the enactment and its object. The word 'office' does not necessarily imply that it must have an existence apart from the person, who may hold it. In order to make use of the special knowledge, talent, skill or experience of certain persons, posts are created, which exist only for so long as they hold them. It will be difficult to hold that such persons are not holders of offices. Hence, a person cannot be said not to hold an office, because the post of an Insurance Medical Practitioner which he holds, will cease to exist as soon as he gives it up or because, other persons cannot be appointed to it. 60 Bom LR 217: 13 ELR 334: ILR (1958) Bom 1294 : AIR 1958 Bom 314 (316, 318) (Pt C) (Prs 5, 9) (DB).

——Art. 191 (1) (a) — 'Office of profit under the Government' — Test for deciding.

The principal tests for deciding whether an office is under the Government, are (1) what authority has the power to make an appointment to the office concerned, (2) what authority can take disciplinary action and remove or dismiss the holder of the office and (3) by whom and from what source is his remuneration paid. Of these, the first two are more important than the third one. 60 Bom LR 217: 13 ELR 334: ILR (1958) Bom 1294 : AIR 1958 Bom 314 (318, 319) (Pt E) (Pr 12) (DB).

An Insurance Medical Practitioner functioning under the Employees' State Insurance Act, 1948, is a holder of an office. ——Art. 191 (1) (a) — Office of profit — Office of Sarabarakar.

The true test to determine whether a person holds an office of profit under the State is the power of the Government to appoint the person to the office or to revoke his appointment. Payment of remuneration to him from a source other than Government revenue is not always the decisive factor.

A sarabarkar is a holder of an office of profit under the State inasmuch as he is appointed and is removable by it. The fact that his remuneration comes out of the collections of revenue made by him is not a ground for holding him to be otherwise. Hence, the disqualification prescribed by Art. 191 (1) (a) applies to him and he cannot be a member of the State Legislature. AIR 1958 Orissa 260 (264, 165, 266) (Pt B) (Pr 9) (DB).

——Art. 191 — Ghatwal — If holds office of profit.

The character and incidents of Ghatwali tenures, show unmistakably that Ghatwals must be regarded as persons holding office of profit under the Government. The two main characteristics of the Ghatwali tenures are the creation of the office of Ghatwals for the performance of certain duties of police and military nature and grant of land for support and remuneration of a Ghatwal. These tenures are not transferable and also not heritable in the strict sense of the term. The appointing authority is the Government, and the Government also assigns lands for the remuneration of the services. These Ghatwali tenures are further liable to resumption and Ghatwals are liable to removal on the ground of incompetence or misconduct. All these clearly establish that Ghatwals hold office of profit under the Government within the meaning of Art. 191 of the Constitution of India, so that they are disqualified from membership to the Legislative Assembly of the State AIR 1958 SC 937, Rel. on. 21 Ele LR 64 : ILR 38 Pat 1007 : AIR 1961 Pat 41 (54) (Pt F) (Pr 30) (DB).

——Art. 191 (1) (a) — Office of profit under Government — Grant of Meena Bara Gaon.

In order to hold a certain person disqualified under Art. 191 (1) of the Constitution of India it must be proved that he was holding an office, that the office was under the Government of India, or the State Government and that it also carried profits with it. An office under the Government cannot be both heritable and partible under personal law. If a particular post is created by the Government and then a grant of land is made to the person holding that post, to remunerate him for his services in lieu of cash payment, then it may be held that he is holding an office under the Government. If, however, a grant of land is made by the Government to a certain person out of regard for his meritorious services or some other personal consideration for the grantee and if in such a case some service is also required from him, then it cannot be said in every case that he is holding any particular office under the Government. The grant of 'Meena Bar Gaon' is both heritable and partible. State Legislature Members (Prevention of Disqualification) (Supplementary) Act, 1956 (U. P. Act 3 of 1957), S. 2 — Effect of amendment of S. 2 by U. P Act 5 of 1960.

Persons disqualified for being chosen as, and for being a member of the Legislative Assembly or Legislative Council of a State, are detailed in Cls. (a) to (d) of Art. 191 (1) of the Constitution. The power conferred on the State Legislature under Cl. (a) is to declare by law that the disqualification laid down in clause (a) shall not apply to and shall not disqualify the holders of certain offices of profit. When the State Legislature has the power to make a law to remove the disqualification of the holders of any office of profit, it cannot pass a law directly laying down which holders of the office shall also stand disqualified. Hence, the deletion by U. P. Act 5 of 1960 of Cl. (b) of S. 2 of the U. P. Act of 1956, cannot by implication or directly, lay down the additional offices of profits, the holders of which cannot be chosen as and for being members of the State Legislature. ILR (1962) 1 All 265 : 1961 All LJ 999 : AIR 1962 All 128 (129) (Pt D) (Pr 7) (DB).

●——Art. 192 (1) — Scope — Who can raise question — Ordinary citizen or voter can raise question under Art. 192 (1).

What the first clause of Art. 192 (1) requires is that a question should arise; how it arises by whom it is raised, in what circumstances it is raised, are not relevant for the purpose of application of this clause. Such a question can be raised not only on the floor of the Legislative Assembly by members of the Assembly but also by an ordinary citizen or voter in the form of a complaint to the Governor. Any question of the type contemplated by clause (1) shall be decided by the Governor and Governor alone and by no other authority. The decision of the said question as such cannot fall within the jurisdiction of the Courts. Person who has incurred any of the disqualifications specified by Art. 191 (1) cannot continue to be a member of the Legislative Assembly of a State and the obligation to vacate his seat as a result of his subsequent disqualification having been imposed by the Constitution itself by Art. 190 (3) (a), any citizen can make a complaint to the Governor alleging that, such member of the Legislative Assembly has incurred one of the disqualifications mentioned in Art. 191 (1) and should, therefore, vacate his seat. ●——Art. 192 (2) — Scope — Opinion by Election Commission — It is Election Commission and not the Governor which is to hold enquiry to arrive at such opinion.

The scheme of Article 192 (1) and (2) is absolutely plain. The decision on the question raised under Art. 192 (1) has no doubt to be pronounced by the Governor, but that it must be in accordance with the opinion of the Election Commission. It is the opinion of the Election Commission, which is in substance decisive. When the Governor receives the complaint, and he forwards the same to the Election Commission, it can be assumed that the Election Commission should proceed to try the complaint before giving its opinion. It would not therefore, be correct to say that it is the Governor who should hold the enquiry and then forward to the Election Commission all the material collected in such an enquiry to enable it to form its opinion and communicate the same to the Governor. SYNOPSIS

(Constitution of India, Art. 194.)

1. Freedom of speech in the Legislature.
2. Publication of speech made in the Legislature.
3. Clause (3).
(a) Law made by State Legislature.
(b) Legislative functions of officers and members—Power of Court to Interfere.
(c) Power to punish for breach of privilege.
(d) Action for contempt—Interference by Court.
4. Freedom from arrest.

1. Freedom of speech in the Legislature.

●——Art. 194 (1) and (2) and Art. 19 (1) (a) — Scope of Art. 194 (1) — It confers on legislators freedom of speech independently of Art. 19 (1) (a).

Clause (1) of Art. 194, makes it clear that the freedom of speech in the Legislature of every State which it prescribes, is subject to the provisions of the Constitution, and to the rules and standing orders, regulating the procedure of the Legislature. While interpreting this clause, it is necessary to emphasise that the provisions of the Constitution subject to which freedom of speech has been conferred on the legislators, are not the general provisions of the Constitution but only such of them as relate to the regulation of the procedure of the Legislature. The rules and standing orders may regulate the procedure of the Legislature and some of the provisions of the Constitution may also purport to regulate it; these are, for instance, Arts. 208 and 211. The adjectival clause "regulating the procedure of the Legislature" governs both the preceding clauses relating to "the provisions of the Constitution" and "the rules and standing orders". Therefore, clause (1) confers on the legislators specifically the right of freedom of speech subject to the limitation prescribed by its first part. By making this clause subject only to the specified provisions of the Constitution, the Constitution makers wanted to make it clear that they thought it necessary to confer on the legislators freedom of speech separately and in a sense, independently of Art. 19 (1) (a). If all that the legislators were entitled to claim was the freedom of speech and expression enshrined in Art. 19 (1) (a), it would have been unnecessary to confer the same right specifically in the manner adopted by Art. 194 (1); and so, it would be legitimate to conclude that Art. 19 (1) (a) is not one of the provisions of the Constitution which controls the first part of clause (1) of Art. 194. Further the Constitution-makers attached so much importance to the necessity of absolute freedom in debates within the legislative chambers that they thought it necessary to confer complete immunity on the legislators from any action in any Court in respect of their speeches in the legislative chambers in the wide terms prescribed by clause (2). Thus, clause (1) confers freedom of speech on the legislators within the legislative chamber and clause (2) makes it plain that the freedom is literally absolute and unfettered. In the Matter of Under Art. 143 of the Constitution of India, (1965) 1 SCJ 847: (1965) 1 SCA 447: AIR 1965 SC 745 (760) (Pt D) (Pr 31).

●——Art. 194 —Art. 194, whether is subject to other provisions of Constitution.

All the four clauses of Art. 194, are not in terms made subject to the provisions contained in Part III. In fact, clause (2) is couched in such wide terms that, in excreising the rights conferred on them by clause (1), if the legislators by their speeches contravene any of the fundamental rights guaranteed by Part 3, they would not be liable for any action in any Court. Nevertheless, if for other valid considerations, it appears that the contents of clause (3), may not exclude the applicability of certain relevant provisions of the Constitution, it would not be reasonable to suggest that those provisions must be ignored just because the said clause does not open with the words "subject to the other provisions of the Constitution." In dealing with the effect of the provisions contained in clause (3) of Art. 194, wherever it appears that there is a conflict between the said provisions and the provisions pertaining to fundamental rights, an attempt will have to be made to resolve the said conflict by the adoption of the rule of harmonious construction. In the Matter of Under Art. 143 of the Constitution of India, (1965) 1 SCJ 847: (1965) 1 SCA 447 : AIR 1965 SC 745 (761, 806, 807) (Pt F) (Prs 36, 196).

——Art. 194 — Scope and extent of privilege.

Art. 194 of the Constitution makes it clear that the immunity from liability to prosecution extends to only what is said within the walls of the Legislature. It helps to secure a free, frank and fearless discussion in the Legislature. Similarly, official publications of the proceedings of the Legislature carry immunity for all concerned or connected with such publication. ILR (1957) 3 Cal 529 : 60 Cal WN 971 : AIR 1956 Cal 433 (435) (Pt A) (Pr 12).

——Art. 194 (2) and (3) — Scope — If mutually exclusive.

Clauses (2) and (3) of the Article are mutually exclusive and the powers, privileges and immunities of the latter clause can have nothing whatever to do with those of clause (2). The two clauses cannot possibly cover the same field. ILR (1957) 3 Cal 529 : 60 Cal WN 971 : AIR 1956 Cal 433 (436) (Pt C) (Pr 19).

——Art. 194 — Member of Legislative Assembly — Extent of rights and privileges in respect to speech and publication.

A member cannot be prosecuted for anything said in the Assembly Chamber nor can he be held liable in respect of any publication under the authority of the House of any report or proceedings. As a member of the Assembly the petitioner cannot have any further or higher constitutional rights of speech and publication than those guaranteed under clauses (1) and (2) of Art. 194. ILR (1957) 3 Cal 529 : 60 Cal WN 971 : AIR 1956 Cal 433 (437) (Pt D) (Pr 22).

——Art. 194 (1) and (2) — Freedom of speech in legislature — Protection from legal proceedings.

Cls. (1) and (2) of Art. 194 protect absolutely and completely a member in respect of any speech made by him in the Legislative Assembly or in any committee of the Legislature—His words spoken within the four walls of the Assembly are clearly and absolutely privileged and no proceeding either civil or criminal may be taken in respect of them. 55 Cal WN 745: 52 Cri LJ 1522: AIR 1951 Cal 176 (178) (Prs 21, 22) (DB).

——Art. 194 (1) — Scope — If controlled by Art. 211 — Freedom of speech in State Legislature — — Restrictions on.

The freedom of speech referred to in Cl. (1) of Art. 194 is subject to the restrictions imposed by Art. 211. And the rules made by the State Legislature may further restrict that freedom of speech. Cl. (i) of R. 189 of the said Rules is intended to prevent discussion of any matter wider is sub judice in law Courts and Cl. (iv) is wider in its language than Art. 211 of the Constitution, inasmuch as it prohibits any reflection on any Court of law (not only of High Courts) in exercise of its judicial functions. 1958 Cri LJ 1055: ILR (1958) Cut 195 : AIR 1958 Orissa 168 (172, 173) (Pt C) (Pr 10) (DB).

——Art. 194 (1) and (2) — Scope.

The Constitution deliberately uses the restrictive words, namely 'subject to the other provisions', etc., only in Cl. (1) of Art. 194 but omits the same from Cl. (2). Hence there is considerable force in the contention that the intention of the framers of the Constitution is that the immunity conferred by Cl. (2) of Art. 194 should be unfettered.

Held on facts (i) that the Chief Minister was entitled to claim immunity under Cl. (2) of Art. 194. (ii) that the Editor, the Printer and Publisher of the newspaper had committed contempt of Court by publishing the speech of the Chief Minister as they could not claim immunity under Cl. (2) of Art. 194. 1958 Cri LJ 1055: ILR (1958) Cut 195: AIR 1958 Orissa 168 (175, 176, 177) (Pt E) (Prs 16, 17, 21, 22) (DB).

——Art. 194 (2) and (3) — Speech in State Legislature amounting to contempt — Jurisdiction of High Court.

Per Barman, J.:— The High Court has no jurisdiction to take action against a Member of the Legislature for his speech in the Legislature even if it amounts to contempt. The appropriate procedure would be to leave the matter to the State Legislative Assembly to be referred to its Committees of Privileges in accordance with its own rules of procedure and the provisions of the Constitution. 1958 Cri LJ 1055: ILR (1958) Cut 195: AIR 1958 Orissa 168 (179, 180, 181) (Pt F) (Prs. 34, 36, 37, 38) (DB).

——Art. 194 — Orissa Legislative Assembly Rules, R. 49 — Disallowing question relating to matter within Speaker's jurisdiction.

The right of freedom of speech conferred by Art. 194 (1) on the members of Assembly is subject to the other provisions of the Constitution and the rules framed by the Legislature.

Under Art. 194 (3) the powers and privileges of a member of a Legislature are same as those of a member of the House of Commons and as no question dealing with matters within the jurisdiction of the Speaker are allowed to be put by any written or public notice in the House of Commons the Speaker does not act in excess of the powers conferred on him by R. 49 in disallowing such question. 19 Cut LT 183: ILR (1953) Cut 404: AIR 1953 Orissa 111 (115) (Pt F) (Pr 9) (DB).

2. Publication of speech made in the Legislature.

●——Art. 194 — Publication by member of question disallowed by speaker of Legislative Assembly — No absolute privilege — Penal Code (1860), S. 499.

So long as Parliament does not crystallise the legal position by its own legislation, the privileges, powers and immunities of a House of a State Legislature or Parliament or of its members are the same as those of the House of Commons. There is no absolute privilege attaching to the publication of extracts from proceedings in the House of Commons. So far as a member of the House of Commons is concerned, he has an absolute privilege in respect of what he has spoken within the four walls of the House, but there is only a qualified privilege in his favour even in respect of what he has himself said in the House, if he causes the same to be published in the public press. There is no absolute privilege in favour of a member of the Legislature in respect of a publication of a question at the instance of the member who had sought to put it in the house, but was disallowed by the Speaker, when that question contains defamatory imputations regarding the character of a person. ●——Art. 194 (3) — Breach of privilege.

A report of the whole speech including the expunged portion in derogation to the orders of the Speaker passed in the House may, prima facie, be regarded as constituting a breach of the privilege of the House arising out of the publication of the offending news item. ●——Art. 194 — Breach of privilege.

It will be for the House on the advice of its Committee of Privileges to consider the true effect of the Speaker's directions that certain portions of the proceedings be expugned. It will again, be for the House to determine whether the Speaker's ruling made distinctly and audibly that a portion of the proceedings be expunged amounts to a direction to the Press reporters not to publish the same, and whether the publication of the speech directed to be expunged, is or is not a breach of the privilege of the House amounting to a contempt of the Speaker and the House. ——Art. 194 — Publication of proceedings in legislature by a member — Extent of privilege — Questions sought to be put asked in Legislative Assembly but disallowed — Publication of — Member if can claim privilege in respect of such questions — (Penal Code (1860), S. 499).

Immunity from liability to proceedings in Court can only be claimed on proof of the fact that what was said was a part of the proceedings of the Legislature or that the offending words were part of the proceedings published under authority. The express constitutional provisions in Cls. (1) and (2) of Art. 194 are a complete and conclusive code as respects the privilege of free speech and immunity from liability to proceedings in Court. The petitioner, a member of a Legislative Assembly whose questions about the conduct of a Sub Divisional Magistrate were disallowed in the Legislative Assembly had them subsequently published in a newspaper. On a prosecution under S. 500, Penal Code, the member claimed a privilege under Art. 194 of the Constitution.

Held, that the Indian law of defamation does not exempt publication of the proceedings of the Legislature from the purview of the law. ILR (1957) 3 Cal 529: 60 Cal WN 971: AIR 1956 Cal 433 (435, 436, 437) (Pt B) (Prs 13, 15, 18, 20).

——Art. 194 (1), (2) and (3) — Speech by member of State Legislature — Extent of privilege — Publication in newspaper — Criminal proceedings if barred — Penal Code, Ss. 449 and 500.

Cls. (1) and (2) of Art. 194 of the Constitution protect absolutely and completely a member in respect of any speech made by him in the Legislative Assembly or in any Committee of the Legislature. His words spoken within the four walls of the Assembly are clearly and absolutely privileged and no proceeding, either civil or criminal, may be taken in respect of them.

It is clear from the words of Cl. (2) of Art. 194 that no publication of reports of proceedings of a legislature is protected unless such is a publication authorised by the legislature. This clause has, therefore, no application whatsoever to the publication of such reports in a newspaper unless it was made under the authority of the legislature.

Clause (3) of Art. 194 can have no application to the case of publishers of a newspaper because it only applies to privileges, powers and immunities of members of the Legislative Assembly. It would apply to a member of the Legislative Assembly as such. If he makes a speech in the Assembly, he cannot possibly be held liable for its publication in a newspaper when he has himself done nothing to cause such publication. But if he in his private capacity causes his speech to be published in the newspaper, he would be liable in spite of Cl. (3) of Art. 194.

The rule of English law that a faithful report in a public newspaper of a debate in either House of Parliament is privileged, does not apply to India. That rule finds no place in the I. P. Code and, therefore, reports of proceedings of a legislature in an Indian newspaper, unless such are expressly authorised by the House are not the subject-matter of privilege and may found a complaint for defamation under S. 500, I. P. Code. 52 Cri LJ 1422: 55 CWN 745: AIR 1951 Cal 176 (178) (Pt A) (Prs 18, 21, 22, 28) (DB).

3. Clause (3).

(a) Law made by State Legislature.
(b) Legislative functions of officers and members—Power of Court to interfere.
(c) Power to punish for breach of privilege.
(d) Action for contempt — Interference by Court.

3. Clause (3).

●——Art. 194 (3) — Powers, privileges and immunities — Inquiry as to.

The second part of Cl. (3) of Art. 194 requires that the powers, privileges and immunities which are claimed by the House of Legislature must be shown to have subsisted at the commencement of the Constitution, i.e., on the 26th January, 1950. In every case where a power is claimed it is necessary to enquire whether it was an existing power at the relevant time. It must also appear that the said power was not only claimed by the House of Commons, but was recognised by the English Courts. It would obviously be idle to contend that if a particular power which is claimed by the House of Legislature was claimed by the House of Commons but was not recognised by the English Courts, it would still be upheld under the latter part of Cl. (3) only on the ground that it was in fact claimed by the House of Commons. In the Matter of under Art. 143 of the Constitution of India, (1965) 1 SCJ 847: (1965) 1 SCA 447: AIR 1965 SC 745 (761) (Pt E) (Pr 34).

● ——Arts. 194 (3) and 13—Privileges claimed by House of Legislature — How far are they subject to fundamental rights.

Per Majority—So far as the question, namely, if it appears that any of the powers, privileges and immunities claimed by the House of Legislature are inconsistent with the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Constitution, how is the conflict going to be resolved, is concerned, a partial answer is to be found in Sharma's case, AIR 1959 SC 395. The majority decision in that case does not lay down a general proposition that whenever there is a conflict between the provisions of the latter part of Art. 194 (3) and any of the provisions of the fundamental rights guaranteed by Part 3, the latter must always yield to the former. The majority decision is to be taken to have settled that Art. 19 (1) (a) would not apply, and Art. 21 would.

Per Sarkar, J. :— Article 13 makes a law bad if it conflicts with fundamental rights. It cannot be argued that since Art. 13 might make laws made under Cl. (3) of Art. 194 void, the privileges conferred by the second part of that clause must also be void. Article 13 has no application to a provision in the Constitution itself. It governs only the laws made by a State Legislature which Art. 194 (3) is not. Therefore it cannot be held that because a law defining privileges if made, would be void if in conflict with fundamental rights, the privileges incorporated in Art. 194 (3) must also have been intended to be subject to the fundamental rights. If such was the intention, Cl. (3) would have started with a provision that it would be subject to the Constitution. In the Matter of under Article 143 of the Constitution of India, (1965) 1 SCJ 847: (1965) 1 SCA 447: AIR 1965 SC 745 (765, 803, 804) (Pt H) (Prs 54, 184).

●——Arts. 194 (3), 196 — Distinction between — 'Powers' meaning of — Dissolution of State Legislature, effect of — English practice cannot be availed of.

The powers, privileges and immunities of State Legislatures and their members with which Art. 194 deals have no reference or relevance to the legislative procedure which is the subject-matter of the provisions of Art. 196. In the context, the word 'powers' used in Art. 194 (3) must be considered along with the words 'privileges and immunities' to which the said clause refers, and there can be no doubt that the said word can have no reference to the effect of dissolution of the State Legislature. The two topics are entirely different and distinct and the provisions in respect of one cannot be invoked in regard to the other. Therefore, there is no constitutional basis for the argument that unless the Legislature by law has made a contrary provision the English convention with regard to the effect of dissolution shall prevail in this country. Its members and Committees shall have all the powers, privileges and immunities of the House of Commons at the date of the commencement of our Constitution. ——Art. 194 (3) — Parliamentary privilege — What is.

Parliamentary privilege of the House of Commons in the United Kingdom is the sum of the fundamental rights of the House and of its individual members as against the prerogatives of the Crown, the authority of the ordinary Courts of law and the special rights of the House of Lords.

They are rights which a sovereign legislature must possess for the due execution of its powers. Some of them are enjoyed by individual members for the obvious reason that the House cannot perform its functions without an unimpeded use of their services and others by such House for the protection of its members and the vindication of its own authority, prestige, power and dignity.

Though the distinction between privilege and functions is not always apparent, the more convenient course is to reserve the term 'privilege' to certain fundamental rights of each House which are generally accepted as essential for the exercise of its constitutional functions. ILR (1955) 1 All 25: 1954 Cri LJ 691: AIR 1954 All 319 (325) (Pt E) (Prs 9, 10) (DB).

——Art. 194 (3) — Procedure followed by British Parliament — Binding effect on Indian Legislatures.

Though Art. 194 declares that the privileges of each House of the State Legislature and the members thereof shall be, save in respect of matters specified in Cls. (1) and (2) of Art. 194, the same as those enjoyed by the British House of Commons and its members, it does not follow that the Speaker and the State Legislature are bound to follow the procedure in the British Parliament in every detail. After all, there is nothing sacrosanct about that procedure. ILR (1955) 1 All 25: 1954 Cri LJ 691: AIR 1954 All 319 (327, 328) (Pt I) (Prs 14, 15) (DB).

——Arts. 194 (3), 20 (2)—Art. 194 (3) not governed by Art. 20 (2).

Fundamental rights cannot govern, except of course where it is specifically or by implication intended that they should, various part of the Constitution. The frame of Art. 194, remembering the rules of grammatical construction, cannot be ignored. The omission of the words "subject to any provision of the Constitution" as governing Cls. (2), (3) and (4) of Art. 194 has a significance which cannot be omitted from consideration. It is thus clear that Art. 194 (3) is not governed by Art. 20 (2) of the Constitution. (Blitz case) and AIR 1941 Rang 151, Distinguished.

(Per Contra).— If there had been double punishment of the petitioner for the same offence—offence as contemplated by Art. 20 (2) of the Constitution—then the petitioner would have been entitled to relief by the Court because the privileges, immunities and powers of the House or its Speaker could not override the positive prohibitions contained in the Constitution nor could they make the provisions of Part 3, the fundamental right, nugatory, even though Art. 194 (3) has not been made specifically subject to the other provisions of the Constitution. To hold otherwise would be to place the Speaker or the Legislature of a State, above the Constitution which can never be held. ILR (1955) 1 All 25: 1954 Cri LJ 691: AIR 1954 All 319 (330, 331, 340) (Pt K) (Prs 27, 30, 68) (DB).

——Art. 194 (3) — Use of English precedents — (C. P. Code (1908), Preamble.).

——Art. 194 — Privileges of members — Extent of.

(Per Dixit J.)— Under Art. 194, the powers, privileges, and immunities of State Legislatures and their members are not absolute. They are subject to the provisions of the Constitution and are modified by the fundamental principle, that it is the Constitution which is supreme and not the Legislature. It cannot, therefore, be inferred from the possession of certain powers and privileges by the House of Commons of the Parliament of the United Kingdom, that the like powers necessarily belong to the Legislatures under the Constitution. If a power or privilege claimed by the Legislature is clearly repugnant to the Constitution, then notwithstanding the fact that it is one which the House of Commons enjoyed at the commencement of the Constitution, it must be denied to the Legislature. ILR (1952) Madh Bha 145: AIR 1952 Madh B 31 (43, 44) (Pt Q) (Pr 43) (DB).

——Art. 194 (3) — Breach of parliamentary privilege — Jurisdiction of Court.

Though neither House in England has ever expressly renounced the claim not only to be the judge of the breach of its own privileges but of their very existence or limits, the Courts have nevertheless consistenly taken the view that neither House of Parliament has power by any vote, resolution or declaration to create for themselves new privileges not justified by the known laws and customs of Parliament.

Each house in Britain possesses (a) the right of being the exclusive judge of the legality of its own proceedings, (b) the right to punish its own members for their conduct in Parliament, and (c) the right to settle its own proceedings. It is settled law that the House of Commons is not responsible to any external authority for following the rules it lays down for itself for the transaction of its own business. It is open to the House to depart from them at its own discretion. Even where the procedure of the House or the right of its members to take part in its proceedings is dependent on statute—and this is important—the House is immune from scrutiny by Courts as to the manner in which it interprets them. It follows from this that for such purposes the House can practically change or supersede the law. Even an erroneous decision by Mr. Speaker of the House in respect of a breach of privilege cannot be the subject-matter of scrutiny by a Court of law. ——Art. 194 (3) — Immunity of Speaker from Jurisdiction of Court.

Clause (3) of Art. 194 of the Constitution confers on the House of Legislature (during the interim period) the same powers, privileges and immunities which the House of Commons possesses. Therefore, the Orissa Legislative Assembly may justifiably claim immunity from interference by the Courts in the administration of those statutory rules which have relation to its own internal proceedings under Art. 194 (3), apart from the provision of Art. 212 (2).

Though the Clause does not refer to the officers of the Legislature, it refers to the privileges and immunities of a House of Legislature as distinct from the privileges and immunities of the members of the Legislature. A Legislature cannot act by itself in a body; it must act through its officers and it is difficult to conceive of the immunities of a Legislature as distinct from the immunities of the Speaker who is representative of the House in its powers, proceedings and dignity.

——Art. 194 — Privileges under — Not affected by provisions of fundamental rights.

There is no expression used nor is there anything implied to suggest that anywhere in the Constitution, Art. 194 has been qualified or cut down. Art. 194 (1) alone is made subject to the provisions of the Constitution and sub-head (3) is not made subject to the provisions of the Constitution and it is a legitimate inference to draw that the Framers of the Constitution did so deliberately. In sub-cl. (3) of that Article there appear the words "in other respects" which clearly indicate a clear dividing line indicating the clear adoption of the absolute privilege of the House of Commons. In these circumstances, the only conclusion one can come to is that none of the Articles relating to fundamental rights apply to the House of the Legislature and control Art. 194 and that there is no express limitation on the House although limitations are to be found on the powers of the State, on the powers of the judiciary and on the powers of the executive, nor can be found anywhere in the Constitution that there is any such limitation by implication. It is therefore, clear that construction of Articles set out in the Constitution with reference to fundamental rights must be made to reconcile with Art. 194, namely leaving the privileges of the House inviolate and not make the privileges nugatory by such reading of other Articles. K printed and published a pamphlet. The Speaker of the Legislative Assembly administered a reprimand to K, who was not a member of the Assembly, for having committed contempt of the Assembly, and also for having committed a breach of the privileges of members of the Assembly by the publication of the pamphlet. Later on the same day, the Speaker directed that K be committed to prison for committing another contempt of the Assembly by his conduct therein. A warrant was issued over the signature of the Speaker directing that K be detained in the jail for a period of seven days and in execution of the warrant K was detained in the jail. Thereafter a petition, under S. 491, Criminal P. C., and Art. 226 of the Constitution was presented to the High Court by an Advocate on behalf of K alleging that his detention in jail was illegal. This petition was taken before a Division Bench of the High Court which passed an order that K should be released on bail on furnishing two sureties. On receiving the information of the release of K on bail, the Assembly by a resolution took the view that the two Judges of the High Court, K and his Advocate had committed contempt of the Assembly, ordered that K should immediately be taken into custody and the two Judges and the Advocate be brought in custody before the Assembly. On hearing about this order the two Judges and the Advocate made separate petitions to the High Court under Art. 226 contending that the resolution passed by the Assembly amounted to contempt of Court that it was wholly without jurisdiction, that it should be set aside and that by an interim order its implementation should be stayed. On these petitions the Full Bench of the High Court ordered by a notice restraining the Speaker of the Assembly from issuing the warrant in pursuance of the direction of the Assembly and from securing execution of the warrant if already issued. When the incidents reached this stage, the President of India decided to exercise his power to make a reference to the Supreme Court under Art. 143 (1). The controversy disclosed by the five questions formulated by the President was whether the Assembly was the sole and exclusive judge of the issue as to whether its contempt had been committed where the alleged contempt had taken place outside the four walls of the Assembly and whether if in enforcement of its decision the Assembly issues a general or unspeaking warrant, the High Court was entitled to entertain a habeas corpus petition challenging the validity of the detention of the person sentenced by the Assembly. The Supreme Court expressed its opinions on the facts and circumstances of the case as follows: (1) that it was competent for the Division Bench of the High Court to entertain and deal with the petition of K challenging the legality of the sentence of imprisonment imposed upon him by the Legislative Assembly for its contempt and for infringement of its privileges and to pass orders releasing K on bail pending the disposal of his said petition; (2) that K by causing the petition to be presented on his behalf to the High Court, the Advocate by presenting the said petition, and the two Judges of the Division Bench by entertaining and dealing with the said petition and ordering the release of K on bail pending disposal of the said petition, did not commit contempt of the Legislative Assembly; (3) that it was not competent for the Legislative Assembly to direct the production of the said two Judges and the Advocate before it in custody or to call for their explanation for its contempt; (4) that it was competent for the Full Bench of the High Court to entertain and deal with the petitions of the said two Judges and the Advocate, and to pass interim orders restraining the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly and others from implementing the aforesaid direction of the said Legislative Assembly; and (5) that in a case arising out of a contempt alleged to have been committed by a citizen who is not a member of the House of Legislature outside the four walls of the legislative chamber, a Judge of a High Court who entertains or deals with a petition challenging any order or decision of a Legislature imposing any penalty on the petitioner or issuing any process against the petitioner for its contempt, or for infringement of its privileges and immunities, or who passes any order on such petition, does not commit contempt of the said Legislature; and the said Legislature is not competent to take proceedings against such a Judge in the exercise and enforcement of its powers, privileges and immunities. Per Majority: Where a Judge of a High Court in the discharge of his duties passes an order or makes observations which in the opinion of the House of Legislature amount to contempt, and the House proceeds to take action against the Judge in that behalf, such action on the part of the House cannot be protected or justified by any specific provision made by the latter part of Art. 194 (3). Whatever may be the extent of the powers and privileges conferred on the House by the latter part of Art. 194 (3), the power to take action against a Judge for contempt alleged to have been committed by him by his act in the discharge of his duties cannot be included in them. ●——Arts. 194 (3), 226, 21 and 32—Privilege of Legislature — Power to punish citizen for contempt on general warrant — History of such power possessed by House of Commons — Conflict between exercise of such power by Legislature and fundamental right of citizen — (Per Majority) Exercise of such power by Legislature is not conclusive (Per Sarkar, J. — Contra).

The House of Commons of the Parliament of the United Kingdom being part of the High Court of Parliament is a superior Court and the general warrants issued by it cannot be subjected to the close scrutiny, just as similar warrants issued by other superior Courts of record are held to be exempt from such scrutiny. The right claimed by the House of Commons not to have its general warrants examined in habeas corpus proceedings has been based more on the consideration that the House of Commons is in the position of a superior Court of record and has the right like other superior Courts of record to issue a general warrant for commitment of persons found guilty of contempt. Like the general warrant issued by superior Courts of record in respect of such contempt, the general warrants issued by the House of Commons in similar situations should be similarly treated. It is on that ground that the general warrants issued by the House of Commons were treated beyond the scrutiny of the Court in habeas corpus proceedings. However, even while recognising the validity of such general warrants, Judges in the United Kingdom have frequently observed that if they were satisfied upon the return that such general warrants were issued for trivolous or extravagant reasons, it would be open to them to examine their validity.

The House of Legislature and indeed all the Legislative Assemblies in India, never discharged any judicial functions and their historical and constitutional background does not support the claim that, they can be regarded as Courts of Record in any sense. If that be so, the very basis on which the English Courts agreed to treat a general warrant issued by the House of Commons on the footing that it was a warrant issued by a superior Court of Record, is absent in the present case, and so, it would be unreasonable to contend that the relevant power to claim a conclusive character for the general warrant which the House of Commons, by agreement, is deemed to possess, is vested in the House of Legislature.

The impact of the fundamental constitutional right conferred on Indian citizens by Art. 32 on the construction of the latter part of Art. 194 (3) is decisively against the view that a power or privilege can be claimed by the House, though it may be inconsistent with Art. 21. In this connection, it may be relevant to recall that the rules which the House has to make for regulating its procedure and the conduct of its business have to be subject to the provisions of the Constitution under Article 208 (1). Where a citizen has the right to move the High Court or the Supreme Court against the invasion of his fundamental rights, the statutory right of the Advocate conferred by section 30, Advocates Act, 1961 to assist the citizen steps in and helps the enforcement of the fundamental rights of the citizen. In the enforcement of fundamental right guaranteed to the citizens the legal profession plays a very important and vital role, and so, just as the right of the judicature to deal with matters brought before them under Art. 226 or Art. 32 cannot be subjected to the powers and privileges of the House of Legislature under Art. 194 (3), so the rights of the citizens to move the judicature and the rights of the Advocates to assist that process must remain uncontrolled by Art. 194 (3). That is one integrated scheme for enforcing the fundamental rights and for sustaining the rule of law in this country. Therefore, the right to punish a citizen for contempt on a general warrant which the House of Legislature claims to be, an integral part of its power or privilege is inconsistent with the material provisions of the Constitution and cannot be deemed to have been included under the latter part of Art. 194 (3). On the construction of the latter part of Art. 194 (3) and in the light of the assistance which is derived from the other relevant and material provisions of the Constitution, it is necessary to hold that the particular power claimed by the House of Legislature that, its general warrants must be held to be conclusive cannot be deemed to be the subject-matter of the latter part of Art. 194 (3).

Per Sarkar, J.: There is no authority to support the contention that the power to commit by a general warrant with the consequent deprivation of the jurisdiction of the Courts of law in respect of that committal is something which the House of Commons had because it was a superior Court. The House of Commons was not itself ever a Court. The History of that House does not support such a contention. The power to commit by a general warrant with the consequent deprivation of the Court's jurisdiction to adjudicate on the legality of the imprisonment is a matter of privilege of the House and not as a right possessed by it as a superior Court. This privilege is possessed by the Legislative Assembly by reason of Art. 194 (3) of the Constitution.

When there is a conflict between a privilege conferred on a House by the second part of Art. 194 (3) and a fundamental right, that conflict has to be resolved by harmonising the two provisions. It would be wrong to say that the fundamental right must have precedence over the privilege simply because it is a fundamental right or for any other reason. In the present case the conflict is between the privilege of the House to commit a person for contempt without that committal being liable to be examined by a Court of law and the personal liberty of a citizen guaranteed by Art. 21 and the right to move the Courts in enforcement of that right under Art. 32 or Art. 226. If the right to move the Courts in enforcement of the fundamental right is given precedence, the privilege which provides that if a House commits a person by general warrant that committal would not be reviewed by Courts of law, will lose all its effect and it would be as if that privilege had not been granted to a House by the second part of Art. 194 (3). This cannot be. ——Art. 194 (3) — Legislative Assembly — Powers of — Has power to punish for its contempt.

The Legislative Assembly has, by virtue of Art. 194 (3) the same power to commit for its contempt as the House of Commons has.

There is no provision in the Constitution which contains any express or implied prohibition against the exercise by the Legislative Assembly of the privilege enjoyed by the House of Commons to commit for its contempt. The fact that the power or privilege to commit for contempt is in the nature of a judicial power is not a compelling reason for denying the power to the Legislative Assembly as there is no rigid separation of powers under our Constitution. The mere fact that, the action of the House is justiciable before a Court of law can be no ground for holding that the Legislature has no power to take such action. There is no warrant for the proposition that unless the House has complete immunity inside and outside, it cannot be held to possess the power to commit for contempt. ——Arts. 194 and 105 — Rights and privileges of Houses of Parliament and Houses of State Legislatures — Speaker's right to take notice of contempt and commit.

By virtue of the Indian Constitution, the powers and privileges to commit a person for contempt of its high authority and for breach of its privileges are enjoyed by the Houses of Parliament in India and the Houses of the State Legislatures. Ordinarily the Speaker would not take notice of an alleged contempt or breach of privilege, except where it is committed, in the House itself, provided the matter is brought to his notice. He himself can take notice of such contempt and set the machinery in motion for appropriate action. ILR (1958) 10 Assam 461 : AIR 1958 Assam 160 (163, 164) (Pt A) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Art. 194 (3) — Contempt matters — Privilege of House — Warrant issued by Speaker can be executed outside State.

The privilege of the House in contempt matters must be on a par with the power of the High Court under section 5 Contempt of Courts Act. Jurisdiction of High Court is limited so that, the Courts may not reach out of the territorial limitations of State in particular matter. There is no such limitation on the exercise of privilege by the House. It is true that, in England a writ or warrant could be executed if issued by the Speaker only throughout Great Britain and not beyond the realm. But there is no reason why a limit, unless imposed by the Constitution should be imposed on the writ of a Court of Record composed of a House of the Assembly. Art. 194 (3) is in identical terms with Art. 105 (3) which provides for the powers, privileges, etc., of the Houses of Parliament, namely, the Central Assembly and there is no indication whatever in the Constitution to show that any limitation is expressly or impliedly imposed whereby the writ cannot run outside the territory of the State. Execution of the order of the House is incidental to the power of exercising privilege and in the absence of any provision as regards territorial limitation either express or implied it would be tantamount to affecting the content of the privilege itself if the Legislature is denied execution thereof outside the range of the boundaries of the State. To hold to the contrary would be to cut down the privilege itself. Article 194 makes sub-Art. (1) subject to the provisions of the Constitution but sub-Art. (3) is not made subject to the provisions of the Constitution. It is clear therefore, that the House of the Legislative Assembly of a State is fully entitled to protect its dignity by the exercise of the privilege expressly conferred on it under Art. 194 and in exercise of that privilege it can issue a warrant which on the face of it may state that it is for contempt of the House and, therefore, that warrant being a general warrant is not subject to scrutiny and that such warrant can be validly executed outside the borders of the State. The power to punish for contempt must imply and implies procedure to enforce it and it must be part of the privilege of the House to make its orders effective. ——Art. 194 (3) — Punishment for contempt — Powers of Legislature — Enforcement of order — Mode of — Rules of Procedure of the U. P. Legislative Assemly, Rr. 189 and 198.

Previously the powers of the Legislature had been expressly limited under the Government of India Act, 1935, in connection with privileges and the right to commit for contempt. The Constitution removed all these disabilities of the Legislature in the Centre as well as in the States and although the Constitution as cast is more akin in its frame work to the Constitution of the United States of America yet as far as this particular question of privilege is concerned, the Framers of the Constitution went to the House of Commons as a model. Under Art. 194 (3) when it prescribed that the privileges shall be those of the House of Commons of the Parliament of United Kingdom, the power to punish for contempt is expressly conferred on the House in clear and unequivocal terms and, therefore, the exercise of that power is identical with that of the House of Commons. English case law disc.

Under Rr. 189 and 198 of Rules of Procedure of the U. P. Legislative Assembly the Speaker may employ for that purpose and call in aid for that purpose any outside agency and an officer engaged by the speaker on behalf of the House for the enforcement such an order is entitled in his turn to ask for outside aid. Use of force for the purpose of enforcing the orders of the Assembly is an absolute ingredient of the privilege to commit and punish for contempt and merely because there are no officers corresponding to that of the serjeant-at-arms, it does not follow that the content of the privilege is thereby lessened or destroyed, but the point of the privilege remains entirely unaffected. ILR (1957) Bom 218 : 60 Bom LR 279.

——Arts. 194 (3), 208 (2) and 212 (1) — Working of Legislature — Procedure for — Business transacted prior to prorogation does not lapse — Applicability of Art. 212 (1).

The Constitution, although it grants the privileges and immunities of the House of Commons under Art. 194 (3), does not assimilate the procedure of the House of Commons for the purposes of the working of a House of the State under the Constitution. Under Art. 208 (2) until rules are made as regards procedure by the Legislature, the procedure of the former Legislature applies and not the procedure of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom. The prorogation of the House and th re-assembling of the House does not amount to a new session and the business transacted prior to prorogation does not lapse. It must be remembered that although a new Session is referred to, the same House reassembles and meets again. Therefore, whether the business lapses or not is entirely a matter of procedure. The contention that business pending in one Session cannot be taken up by another, is of a sustainable one, because the House or the constitution of the House does not end with the prorogation and it does not come to an end merely because the House ceases to do business and function as a House for a particular period of time. But even otherwise where it is a matter of procedure, even if it is wrong procedure Art. 212 (1) is a complete answer. ILR (1957) Bom 218 : 60 Bom LR 279.

——Art. 194 — Preventive Detention — Right to attend sittings of House.

A member of the Legislative Assembly can claim no privilege from arrest and the detention under Preventive Detention legislation. Once a member of a Legislative Assemly is arrested and lawfully detained, though without actual trial under any Preventive Detention Act, there can be no doubt that under the law as it stands he cannot be permitted to attend the sittings of the House. A declaration by the High Court that he is entitled to do so, even under armed escort is entirely out of the question. If, however, a party in power detains a political opponent or continues his detention with the mala fide object of stifling opposition and prejudicing the party to which he belongs in a forthcoming election, there would be an undermining of the basis of the Constitution. ——Art. 194 (3) — Right of detenu member to correspond with legislature.

As long as a detenu continues to be a member of a Legislature, drawing the emoluments of his office, receiving summons to attend, he is entitled to the right of correspondence with the Legislature, and to make representations to the Speaker and the Chairman of the Committee of Privileges and no executive authority has any right to withhold such correspondence. This right flows not merely from principles of natural justice which will be violated by such correspondence being withheld, but as a continuing member of the House, he would also appear to be entitled to this privilege under Art. 194 (3) of the Constitution under which English Parliamentary practice has to be followed until a law is enacted by the Legislature defining the powers, privileges and immunities of the House, its committees and its members. ILR (1953) Mad 93 : 64 Mad LW 1031 : 1951 Mad WN Cr 258 : 1951 Mad WN 838 : 1952-1 Mad LJ 1 : AIR 1952 Mad 117 (119) (Pt B) (Pr 8) (DB).

——Arts. 194 (3), 238, 190 (4) and 226 — Member of Legislative Assembly arrested and detained under due process of law — No privilege to be allowed to attend session of Assembly — Writ of mandamus.

Where a member of Legislative Assembly has been arrested and detained and his detention is legal and under due process of law, he cannot claim that his detention should be subordinated to his right to attend the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly. He cannot therefore, pray for a writ of mandamus directing the State Government to enable him to attend the session of the Legislative Assembly. There is no statutory provision granting such privilege or immunity.

So long as the detention is legal the danger of his losing the seat under Art. 190 (4) or the certainty of his losing his daily allowance cannot possibly form the foundation for relief against the normal or probable consequences of that detention. ILR (1955) T.-C. 336 : 1955 Ker LT 211 : AIR 1955 Trav-Co 154 (154, 155) (Prs 4, 8) (DB)

●——Arts. 196, 200 and 201 — Scope of — Bill passed by Legislative Assembly pending assent of President does not lapse on dissolution of Assembly — Successor House can reconsider the Bill — Kerala Agrarian Relations Act (4 of 1961).

Under Cl. (3) of Art. 196 a Bill pending in the Legislature of a State will not lapse by reason of the prorogation of the House or Houses thereof. Under this clause the pending business may be pending either in the Legislative Assembly or in the Legislative Council or may be pending the assent of the Governor. At whichever stage the pending business may stand, so long as it is pending before the Legislature of a State it shall not lapse by the prorogation of the Assembly.

Clause (4) deals with the case of a Bill which has originated in the Legislative Council and has yet to reach the Legislative Assembly; and so the Constitution provides that in regard to such a Bill which has yet to reach, and be dealt with by, the Legislative Assembly the dissolution of the Legislative Assembly will not affect its further progress.

Clause (5) deals with a Bill pending in the Legislative Assembly of a State or pending in the Legislative Council; and that clearly means that a Bill pending assent of the Governor or the President. A Bill pending assent of the Governor or President is outside clause (5) and cannot be said to lapse on the dissolution of the Assembly.

If the effect of Art. 196 is that the Bills pending assent do not lapse on the dissolution of the House then the relevant provisions of Art. 200 must be read in the light of that conclusion. There is nothing in the proviso to Art. 201 which is inconsistent with the basic concept of democratic Government in asking a successor House to reconsider the Bill with the amendments suggested by the President because the proviso makes it perfectly clear that it is open to the successor House to throw out the Bill altogether. It is only if the Bill is passed by the successor House that the stage is reached to present it to the Governor or the President for his assent, not otherwise.

Therefore, the validity of the Kerala Agrarian Relations Act cannot be attacked on the ground that it was passed by the successor House upon reconsideration of the recommendation of the President to whom it was sent for his assent after the passing of Bill by the predecessor House before its dissolution. ——Arts. 200, Proviso, 31 (3) and 13 — Scope — Hyderabad Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (21 of 1950) — Act not valid.

Art. 31 (3) is on par with the proviso to Art. 200 — Failure to conform to the procedure envisaged by Art. 31 (3) has the same results as those that follow from the violation of Proviso to Art. 200 — State law relating to acquisition and requisitioning of property — Requirement as to assent of President under Art. 31 (3) — Nature of — Assent not obtained — Whole Act becomes ultra vires — Question of severability does not arise. See Ibid, Art. 31 (3). AIR 1961 Andh Pra 523.

——Art. 200 — Bill reserved for President's consideration and assent received — Assent of Governor — Necessity for validity of Act.

Where the Governor reserves a bill for consideration of the President under Art. 200 and the President gives the assent, the Act is valid and cannot be challenged on the ground that it did not receive the assent of the Governor. ILR (1960) 12 Assam 396 : AIR 1961 Assam 16 (17) (Pt A) (Pr 4) (DB).

——Art. 200 — Madras Act 34 of 1955 — Power of transfer of case pending before Presidency Magistrate given to Sessions Judge, Madras — Validity — Act derogating from powers of High Court — Constitution, if has provision to make such laws. See Code of Criminal Procedure (Madras Amendment) Act (Madras Act 34 of 1955) — Validity. 1959 Cri LJ 731 : AIR 1959 Mad 261 (DB).

●——Art. 200—Passing of Madhya Pradesh Abolition of Proprietary Rights (Estates, Mahals, Alienated Lands) Bill, into law — Assent of Governor — Bill reserved for consideration of President — The President having given his assent, Bill must be deemed to have been passed into law. AIR 1955 NUC (Nag) 1341 (FB).

——Arts. 200 and 201 — Reservation of Act for and assent of President — (Evidence Act (1872), Section 35).

Under S. 35 of the Evidence Act, the statement made in the Gazetted Notification that an Act has been assented to by the President is proof of that fact. Further, in view of the normal presumption that all official acts are to be presumed to have been regularly done, it is also proof that the Bill of that Act was reserved by the Governor for the assent of the President, for, that is the only way in which an Act of the State Legislature goes up for the assent of the President as a perusal of Arts. 200 and 201 of the Constitution shows. Therefore, the fact of reservation by the Governor and of assent by the President must be presumed on the issue of the Gazetted Notification. ILR (1953) Cut 71 : AIR 1953 Orissa 185 (194) (Pt F) (Pr 17) (DB).

——Arts. 200 and 201 — "Declare".

What is indicated by the word 'declaration' is not anything by way of a public notification. To declare an assent is nothing more than an assertion by the President or the Governor as the case may be, that in fact he has so assented. It does not involve any idea that that assertion must be made with any publicity or in any particular form. ILR (1953) Cut 71 : AIR 1953 Orissa 185 (194) (Pt G) (Pr 18) (DB).

——Arts. 200, 201, 255 — Assent to Bill — When to be obtained.

A careful perusal of Articles 200, 201 and 211 clearly leads to the conclusion that the assent contemplated thereunder is an assent before a Bill becomes an Act and that there can be no question of a Bill being assented to by the President after it has been passed as an Act. The curative effect of Art. 255 applies to those cases where a previous sanction of the President has not been taken before the introduction of the Bill but nevertheless his subsequent assent has been obtained by the Governor reserving it for the assent of the President before the Bill becomes an Act. ILR (1965) 15 Raj 285 : 1965 Raj LW 118.

——Art. 200 — Assent to Bills — Proof of — Onus.

Where certain Acts as published in the State Gazette show that the assent to them was given on a particular date by the Head of the State and an affidavit to that effect is also filed on behalf of the State, it cannot be held that the Acts did not receive the assent on that date. The burden under these circumstances lies heavily on the party disputing the fact.

The mere fact that the head of the State was not present in the capital is in itself not enough to prove that his assent could not be obtained as there are other methods of obtaining his assent, viz., telephone, or by telegram or by sending a special messenger. ILR (1954) 4 Raj 274: 1954 Raj LW 268: AIR 1954 Raj 117 (120) (Pt A) (Pr 5) (DB).

——Art. 200 — Travancore-Cochin Public Safety Measures Act (5 of 1950), S. 4 — Validity —Art. 200 refers only to bills which have not become law by assent thereto declared by Governor. That Article cannot, therefor, be relied upon as giving any guidance to the construction of Cl. (3) of Art. 31 which relates to the reservation of a law for the consideration of the President. See Public Safety — Travancore-Cochin Public Safety Measures Act (1950), S. 4 AIR 1954 Trav-Co 145.

——Art. 200 — Travancore-Cochin High Court (Amendment) Act (1952), Preamble — The Bill which was passed into Act (1 of 1952) had been reserved for the assent of the President and this implies the declaration contemplated in Art. 200. See Travancore-Cochin High Court (Amendment) Act (1 of 1952), Preamble. AIR 1953 Trav-Co 63 (DB).

——Art. 201 — Scope — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Amendment) Act (13 of 1956) — If void on ground of violation of Art. 201.

The Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act cannot be impugned on the ground of violation of Art. 201 of the Constitution. Under Art. 201, the High Court is concerned with the question whether in fact assent has been given by the President, and, if assent has been given, it is not for the High Court, to consider whether recommendations to amend the Bill were made by the Government of India and those recommendations were ignored by the Government of Bombay. The alleged failure of the Government of Bombay to submit the Bill for considering the recommendations made by the Government of India does not affect the validity of the Bill which has become an Act of the Bombay Legislature by the assent of the President. 59 Bom LR 616: AIR 1957 Bom 252 (259) (Pt A) (Pr 15) (DB).
